BERLIN REPORTS ARMIES WITHIN 15 MILES OF WARSAW

THE ITALIANS WIN VICTORIES ON THE ISONZO

GERMANS SAY THEY ARE ONLY FIFTEEN MILES FROM WARSAW AND CAPITAL WILL FALL WITHIN NEXT FORTNIGHT

German Armies Have Broken Through the Outer Chain of Defensive Works Encircling the City, According to Berlin War Office---Enemy Striking Tremendous Blow

KAISER HAS ARRIVED AT SCENE OF OPERATIONS

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

BERLIN, via The Hague, July 21.—German shells are falling on the outer defences of Warsaw to-day, and Teuton armies are within fifteen miles of the city. Despatches from the front predicted the fall of the Polish capital within a fortnight. The Russians are expected to evacuate when the rapidly advancing German armies have broken through the outer chain of defensive works encircling the city.

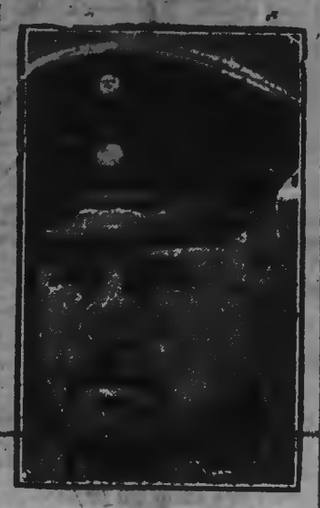
The Kaiser has arrived at the headquarters of Gen. Von Hindenberg. The Kaiserine will leave for Posen on Friday, and it is understood here that she plans to enter the Polish capital with the Emperor when Von Hindenberg's triumphal sweep carries the Germans into Warsaw.

Berlin is wild with excitement over the succession of victories that is have bulletin boards been surrounded by such eager crowds.

The popular belief is that Germany is striking a tremendous blow that may bring the speedy ending of the war.

Both north and south of Warsaw the jaws of the great German fighting machines are slowly crushing in upon the Polish capital.

The Russians are stubbornly resisting the German advance from behind the most intricate system of wire entanglements and trenches yet faced by the Germans in their movement against the capital.



GEN. VON SANDERS

The British Have Taken Another Line of Trenches From the Enemy at Hooge

Russians Have Destroyed Fleet of Turkish Supply Boats in the Black Sea---500 Men Join Colours as Result of Recruiting Meeting Last Night in Toronto.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

TORONTO, July 21.—It is estimated that five hundred men joined the colours as a result of recruiting meetings here last night.

TORONTO, July 21.—The Ontario Government announces the gift of half a million dollars to the Dominion Government for machine guns.

LONDON, July 21 (Official)—The British have taken another line of trenches from the Germans at Hooge Chateau.

LONDON, July 21.—Russians have destroyed a fleet of Turkish supply boats in the Black Sea.

PETROGRAD, July 21.—Teuton armies are surging ahead towards Warsaw, but Russians still hold the principal railways.

ROME, July 21.—Italians have gained a big victory near Sagrado to-day, but details have been suppressed by censor.

PARIS, July 21.—Special despatches here say the situation in Constantinople grows worse every day. The populace is on the verge of revolution against the Young Turks.

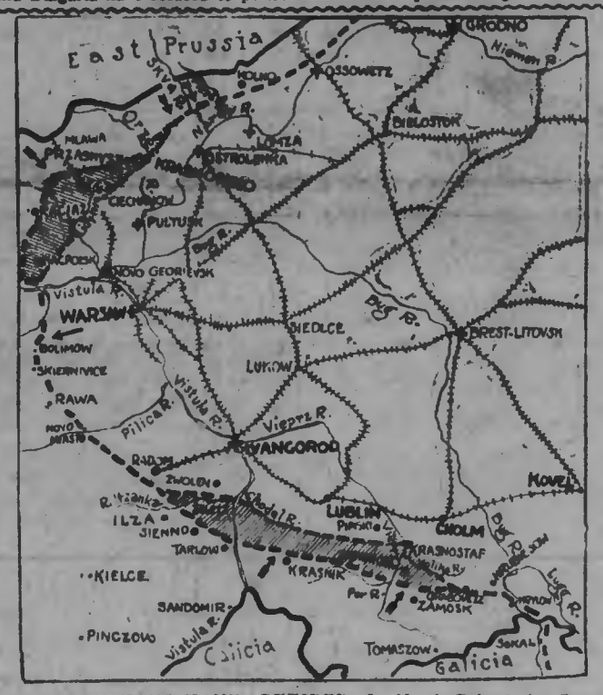
GENEVA, July 21.—It is officially announced to-day that Roumania and Bulgaria have refused to permit munitions to pass through to Turkey.



WHERE RUSSIANS HAVE RETIRED—In North Poland the German army has pushed the Russians back. The shaded portion shows the distance Von Hindenberg was successful in driving home his offensive toward Warsaw. In the south, Mackensen has also been successful in his sweeping move toward the Lublin-Cholm line. His advance is shown by the shaded portion also.

The Wounded Freeze to Death In The Alps

GENEVA, via Paris, July 20.—A despatch from Laibach to the Tribune says that Archduke Eugene, the commander in chief of the Austrian forces operating against the Italians, arrived at Gors yesterday, accompanied by General Dankl, and distributed decorations.

The Austrians are reported to be preparing to take the offensive on the Isonzo front. The Italians, according [illegible] vance of a mile in the direction of the plateau of Tirnova, from which point they are bombarding the railway communications with Gors. Many supply trains have been destroyed.

Fighting on the heights of Venerocola, the altitude of which is ten thousand feet, has been severe, particularly around the Garibaldi hut. Some of the wounded were frozen before the Red Cross workers could get to them.

Gors has been bombarded by the Italians from the north, and is said also to have suffered considerably from an attack by two Italian airships that dropped bombs on the fortifications.

Decisive Victories For The Italians

Special to The Examiner:

ROME, July 21.—Reports of decisive victories for the Italians, both north and south of Gorits, led Rome newspapers to-day to predict early capitulation of the fortress city, known as the "Paraseal of the Isonzo."

Giornale D'Italia declared that the Italians are now winning the most decisive victories of the war all along the Isonzo, occupying strategic positions and inflicting heavy losses on the enemy.. Frontier advices quote refugees arriving from Gorits as declaring that the city is about to be evacuated. The railway bridge over the Isonzo, between Cervgnano and Monfalcone, destroyed by the Austrians in their retreat across the river, has been rebuilt. The first trains passed over yesterday.

Notes From Viamede

VIAMEDE.—The fishing here has been remarkably good during the past week. Dr. Blanton and his party getting their full catch of fish every day. Mr. Blackburn and son have also been very successful with the bass fishing, while Mr. Armstrong has caught several fine lunge.

Rev. Mr. Cosgrave of Trinity College took the services at the Sunday evening service, and Mrs. Score of Toronto sang a very fine solo during the offertory.

There is dancing every week night in the Pavilion, and all the young people are having a splendid time.

The tennis court has been put in order for the season.

Among the guests registered during the week are:

Dr. T. W. Blanton, Geo. Nightingale, Cleveland, Ohio; Glenn Brown, Detroit, Mich.; W. G. Armstrong and wife, Miss J. S. Shepherd, Toronto; Miss Dorothy Hilliard, Lakefield; F. D. Basted, M. L. Pentecost, Mrs. W. R. Graham, Miss Hazel Graham, J. H. Chisholm, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. O. A. Langley, Jack Langley, Miss Dorothy Langley, Lakefield; Dr. O. E. Maule, G. W. Peck, Batavia, N.Y.; C. J. Jackson, Chicago, Ill.; Miss A. G. Jenny, Miss M. Little, Toronto; Mr. and Mrs. F. M. Drake, Duffalo, N.Y.; Chas. E. Rapolyea, Mrs. Ernest Rapolyea, Miss Rapolyea, Elmira, N.Y.; Harry Blewett, Lakefield; R. A. Prettie and wife, Bob Prettie, Calgary, Alta.; J. Simser and wife, Toronto; Mrs. Stuart, Ottawa.

STEAMSHIP IS AFIRE IN THE INDIAN OCEAN

LONDON, July 21.—The Peninsular and Oriental liner Benalla, eleven thousand tons, bound from London to Australia, with about 750 passengers, is afire in the Indian ocean, 2,000 miles east of the South African coast, according to despatches to shipping circles from Pietermaritzburg to-day. The Benalla wireless for assistance saying a fire was raging in one of her holds. Several vessels are hurrying to her assistance.

To Divorce Evelyn Nesbit

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., July 20.—A free man for almost 72 hours without taking a drink and without doing anything especially spectacular except to try to run away from his newspaper escort at Market street station last night, Harry K. Thaw, who had no apparent plan except to divorce Nesbitt Thaw, was ready at 8.40 o'clock to leave Philadelphia for Pittsburg.

He was going to his boyhood home where his mother, who for nine years has fought valiantly shoulder to shoulder with her son for his freedom, eagerly awaited him.

But nobody with him was sure he would go then until they should see him on the train, even though he last night reserved tickets and a Pullman drawing room for himself and party.

Thaw had spent the night in his native state for the first time since before he killed Stanford White on June 25, 1906, and he expected by 6.35 o'clock to-night to see his home city and birthplace, Pittsburg, for the first time in over nine years.

In Atlantic City he attracted only the ordinary board walk crowd, when he went into the surf and here he got no crowd at all.

The interest was increased when David Robinson, foreman of the jury that last Thursday declared Thaw sane, explained that he was in Atlantic City with his wife on a trip that he had planned before he was drawn on the jury.

Thaw slipped into the Hotel Bellevue-Stratford by a side entrance and into an elevator without registration. Both actions served only to attract attention. Thaw evidently did not realize that his moves to avoid publicity only served to attract it. Thaw retired to his suite on the seventh floor, which was, by the way, the most sumptuous apartment in the hotel. It had been occupied by Mary Garden and Mme. Tetrazzini, opera singers.

"My, but Dean must have had too much coffee when he engaged this," Thaw said. "This is too suuey for me."

Thaw apparently has thought of little else but getting free of Evelyn Thaw since Saturday night at dinner at the Hotel Dennis, Atlantic City, when he suddenly stopped eating, pushed back his chair and announced he would get a divorce. This came as a surprise.

Thaw's last day at Atlantic City was almost uneventful. Except when he insisted on going for another swim in the surf at four o'clock when his train was due to leave at 4.45, he did nothing unusual. He made the train by a wild dash in an auto. He declined to talk about his plans.

"I intend to go to San Francisco, but am not sure when," he said. "I am not a reformer. I do not intend to pose as one. I have had no theatrical or lecture offers, and have not been asked to write about myself. That's all. I'm a private individual and do not want to be a show."

An S-shaped hook that can be folded for carrying in the pocket has been invented to enable a person to hang up his hat and coat in almost any place he may so desire.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

Kate read it and talked about what was in it, but the old man was all on fire to start back to Dodge City right now. Old Josiah pointed out the uselessness of it, and Kate sided in, but the old man was plumb set and was almost whimperin' when they stuck out again' him. He finally called on me to back him up, and I asked to see the rest of the mail which had been forwarded to him. The letter from his son was soiled and creased while the others were smooth and clean, and I pointed out to him that it must have been carried a long way from where it was sealed up to where it was mailed. This took the fire out of him pronto, and left him sniffin' and shakin'. I was purty certain that his son was in some the same sort of fix Tom Smith was, and that it would n't do much good to try to trail him.

A baby gets laughed out of his troubels, a young feller gets hurrahed out of his, and an old feller gets humoured and scoffed out of his, until, I declare, about the only way to get any satisfaction out of trouble is to go off by yourself and nurse it in secret.

I could get a purty clear picture of how wonderful virtuous that son looked whenever he squared away to write one o' those kind and forgivin' letters to the old man. He knew mighty well this would hurt the old man a heap worse 'n hittin' him with a club would, and I formed a purty tol'able healthy prejudice again' Kate's brother, and all the luck I wished him wouldn't have took him far.

I ate dinner with 'em because it allus lifted my heart to eat a meal there and watch old Josiah tryin' to pretend that the' wasn't anything peculiar in havin' a house run automatic the way his did. It's mighty wearin' to team along with a young gump who feels it's his duty to fill the earth with half-baked merriment; but it allus refreshes me to see a big caliber man with a serious disposition, havin' fun, and that old hermit sure did have fun.

I got back shortly after three and had just turned the blacks loose and was about to join the boys for a smoke when we saw Isaac drivin' back in his chariot. He slumped on the seat holdin' his coat in his lap like one in a daze and the mule hambled along as it pleased. We all raw-hided Isaac more or less 'cause it was about impossible to keep from it; but we all liked him, too. He spoke out everything 'at was in him, and he did have a tender heart without any putting. When he got up to where the boys were loungin' they all began to hoot some sort of a question into him, but he neither cheered up, nor came back at 'em.

I halted the mule by the bridle and Isaac got down still holdin' his coat in his arms and went into the bunkshack. His face was drawn and haggard, and the boys fell silent and stepped aside to let him pass. We followed him inside and he was sittin' on a bench in front of the fireplace, gazin' into the ashes, and shakin' a little, but not makin' any sound. I walked up to him and put my hand on his shoulder. "What's the matter, Mr. Foster?" sez I.

He drew back his coat and there lay little Connie. He was all torn and bloody, and for a full minute none of us could speak. It's curious, how simple, useless, little things 'll get hold of a feller. Connie used to war on the small varmits, but that was the most he was actually good for and he only worked at that when he felt like it; but as I looked down on him, I could see him plain the way he had been in the gully on Friday, lookin' up into the face of his curious god with perfect faith, and then hookin' on to the heels of those bulls the moment they had swept by, and it gave me a blamed uncomfortable tightness around my lungs. "How did it happen?" sez I.

Isaac moistened his lips and swallered several times before he could speak. "You wouldn't none of you go to Big Jeff's to ask about Tom Smith," sez he, "and so I went. There were a lot o' men there, and Big Jeff set his dog on little Connie and—and I picked him up and came back."

Red Gingley fair howled. "The' wasn't a man there," sez he, "the' wasn't a man in the bunch, or they'd 'a' shot that brute so full of holes he'd look like a honey-comb!"

All the boys were growlin' deep and low, and Shorty leaned forward and stroked the little silver blue head. "Pore little Connie," he muttered, "I'll bet you left your mark on him once anyway," and then Shorty whirled and hurried outside.

I followed him close. "Where are you goin'?" sez I.

"I'm goin' to Big Jeff's," sez he, "as quick as a hoss'll take me."

"I wish you wouldn't," sez I. "It'll sure get the outfit in bad."

"Ta hell with the outfit!" sez he. "The' can't no man run anything like that in on me."

"Listen," sez I. "If you tie right into him and begin shootin', it means that you'll have to skip. My plan is to take Hellion up there and let him start things, then when Big Jeff takes it up, why it'll be self-defence."

He studied over it a second, and then shook his head. "Hellion might get the worst of it," sez he; "and anyway I don't care a hang for politeness when it's my turn to kill a snake."

The rest joined in, now, and we finally decided that it wouldn't be a fair shake to shoot Old Nick for doin' what his master had told him to, nor it wouldn't be wise to let him live if Hellion could put him out, and Shorty finally agreed to give Hellion the first chance.

We hooked a pair o' broncs to the buckboard and let Hellion ride while Slim Jones drove. We got to within a quarter of Big Jeff's about half-past six and there we tied the rig back in a thicket and I rode on up to Big Jeff's with Hellion with the rest scoutin' close behind.

Old Nick was in front of the store his head on his paws and he growled as I started by, Hellion at my side. I heard some one say, "Take him," in a low voice, and the big, yaller dog made a rush towards Hellion. I leaned over and sez, "Take him, Hellion," and they started in.

I'm free to own that as a general rule I don't like to see dogs war to a finish; but I did get a world o' satisfaction out o' that fight. I sat my hoss across the road from the store a little north of the door, so I could keep cases on the corners, and Big Jeff came out with a grin on his face to watch. Three other men joined him and more of 'em looked out through the windows.

They were a pair o' fighting dogs all right and each knew it was to be to a finish. Old Nick wasn't full blood, he was a shade lighter and a lot quicker 'n a full mastiff; but he wasn't anything but slow freight compared with Hellion. Several times they wrastled and then Old Nick's weight told; but that old liver-brindled Hellion looked like a whole pack of dogs the way he flashed about. Both dogs wer in their prime, but Old Nick had spent too much time loafing, while Hellion had been ridin' the range, and quality was bound to tell. As the scrap continued, Big Jeff and the three others drew closer and began to do some hurrahin', but I sat perfectly quiet and kept my eyes on the humans and on the corners for more humans, more than I did on the dogs.

Durin' the first part o' the scrap, Big Jeff smiled indulgent, the way fond parents do when their offspring are committin' crimes again' guests who are too polite to wreak vengence, and finally when Old Nick managed to get a good grip of Hellion's shoulder, lift him, and fling him square on his back, why, Big Jeff began to haw-haw and clap his hands soft. The tawny hide of the bigger dog was torn and ripped and bloody, but he looked as massive as a loon there in the twilight, and I began to figger on what would take place immediately after Old Nick was declared victor. I knew that nothin' but blood of some kind was goin' to do Shorty, and I hated like the mischief to have the gang split at that time.

"Your cur dog don't seem to be much of a fighter, does he?" sez Big Jeff, leerin' at me and speakin' for the first time.

"I don't know," sez I. "This is the first time ever I saw him fight."

Hellion was flat on his back and Old Nick had one paw across his chest and seemed to be crushin' his head and throat both. It was still light enough to see outlines and such, but small details were gettin' blurred. One of Big Jeff's gang stooped down low and looked at the dogs close.

"He's got Old Nick by the throat," sez he to Big Jeff in a low tone, "and he's got him [illegible]."

Jeff got down close also and his face changed like lightning. He took a club that lay on the ground and started to poke it into Hellion's face.

"Step back there," sez I. "Those dogs are goin' to settle this in their own way."

He straightened up and looked at me and his devil face was beggin' at last. "He's cuttin' my dog's throat," sez he. "Get down off your hoss and help pull 'em apart. Hey"—callin' towards the store—"one o' you boys in there bring out some pepper."

THE SHOEING OF MARS

HOW CUPID SHOD THE WAR GOD, ENGINEERED A PAIR OF REVOLUTIONS AND JOINED TWO LOVING SOULS.

By Innis G. Osborn and Henry M. Snevily

FOR the third time Jane Meredith warded off Hugh Lorimer's eager arms.

"Now, just wait," she cried. "This is all very nice, but you just go below and speak to father. If you don't dare face him, you're not going to marry me,"

"You're always so practical," Hugh complained. "But I'll go." In the cabin of John Meredith's yacht Cynthia, on which Hugh was a guest, he found the shoe magnate reading a magazine. It was not the young man's way to mince matters.

"I beg pardon," he said, and when Meredith looked up, "I'd like to marry your daughter,"

"You'd like what?" the prospective father-in-law shouted.

"I'd like to marry your daughter."

"Oh!" grunted the older man. There was a pause. "I suppose she'd like to marry you, eh?"

"I believe so," admitted Hugh modestly.

"Well," he said at last, looking Lorimer squarely in the eyes, "I've nothing against you, Hugh. You're a good, clean living young fellow, and a man with half an eye could tell you're honestly in love with Jane. The rub is you've never done anything—I mean outside of ripping up the Yale eleven last year.

"That's the rub, Hugh. You never made a penny in your life."

Hugh's mouth set. "I've tried. I've tramped New York from one end to the other looking for work."

"Hugh," said John Meredith slowly, "you show me you can make good, and you marry Jane on the day you receive. Next time you ask a man for a job stick to him till you get it."

"All right," replied Hugh with a curious smile, "I will." And he did. He stuck at it until Meredith regretted the advice he had given. In desperation he walked to an open port and gazed across the moonlit water. Twinkling lights on shore winked merrily at him. Suddenly he faced about, his eyes dancing like the far off lights he had seen.

"Hugh, there is one particular spot where Meredith shoes aren't sold," he said. "It's Port Princess. You can see its lights to starboard now. If you say the word I'll set you ashore there to-morrow morning and make you sole agent for Meredith shoes in Tayhi."

"I'll take that offer," replied Lorimer quietly. "I guess I'd better tell Jane you have consented to our marriage."

The twinkle was still in Meredith's eyes as they shook hands.

"Make good," he said, "and you name the day."

Early next morning Hugh put off in the yacht's tender. Beyond the bow of the Tayhitan navy—all this happened before they beached her to keep her from sinking when the engineer-cook dropped a sixty-pound casting through the bottom—the government wharf protruded like an elongated index finger. Behind it Port Princess baked in the morning sun. Through the dazzling heat waves which rose endlessly from the surface of the harbor Hugh caught sight of a solitary figure staring earnestly in his direction.

It was not until Hugh lifted his satchel from the bottom of the tender that the solitary figure on the end of the wharf showed signs of life. Suddenly he threw his arms skyward and executed a fantastic step, accompanying his antics with lusty howls of joy. Hugh climbed the fast rotting ladder to the top of the wharf, to suddenly find himself in the arms of the "Reception Committee."

"You are really a white man!" cried the stranger rapturously. "Of course, you don't understand, but I've met every steamer for the last ten months and you're the first man of my own color who has put foot on this wharf. If you've time before you return to the yacht you are my guest for dinner."

"Don't need to," he said. "The International isn't all it sounds, but it's the best here. The consuls and a ticket of leave man are the only other white members. They use it when they are here, which isn't very often. Just now they're in Santiago, probably playing seven-up.

"My name's Colby," he rattled on—"John Colby, of the New York News. Came down here ten months ago on a tip that a revolution was brewing. My office has a chronic tip that there's a revolution brewing in Tayhi. At the end of each and every separate one of these ten months I've been prepared to leave for home, and every time my office has another tip. The cable begins to hum as the anchor of my homeward bound steamer splashes in the harbor." He paused, with a frown of annoyance. "Pardon me, I haven't given you an opportunity of telling your name."

"Hugh Lorimer, Dedham, Mass.," said Hugh.

"Knew you were U. S. A.," declared Colby. "Tea to one you can mix a cocktail."

It was not until after dinner that Colby asked Hugh his mission in Tayhi.

"A commercial proposition," replied Hugh.

"To begin with, Colby," he continued, "I am worth considerable money, a fact that has proved a detriment rather than an advantage to me."

The newspaper man's expression conveyed more plainly than he could have put it in words that this was quite beyond him.

"It came to a case of—well, make good at some kind of work or lose the girl I want to marry. That's the proposition my somewhat dad-in-law put up to me, so I held him up for a job. He gave it to me. I'm his sole agent in Tayhi."

Colby wagged his head thoughtfully.

"Sounds as though there must be a catch in it somewhere," he said. "It doesn't seem reasonable that a man should tell you you had to go out in the cold world and make good, then turn around and give you an all fired tough one. What's the line?"

"I represent the Meredith Shoe Company."

"Oh, my poor head," gasped Colby, wiping his brimming eyes. "I told you there was a catch somewhere. Look yonder by the window."

Hugh glanced across the room. Three dusky men were engaged in earnest conversation. Each was resplendent in gold braid and medals in quantities sufficient to make a jangling garment for a Salome dancer. Off the comic opera stage Lorimer had never seen more magnificent uniforms. Lorimer's eyes took in the picture, wandered downward and suddenly bulged. His jaw sagged.

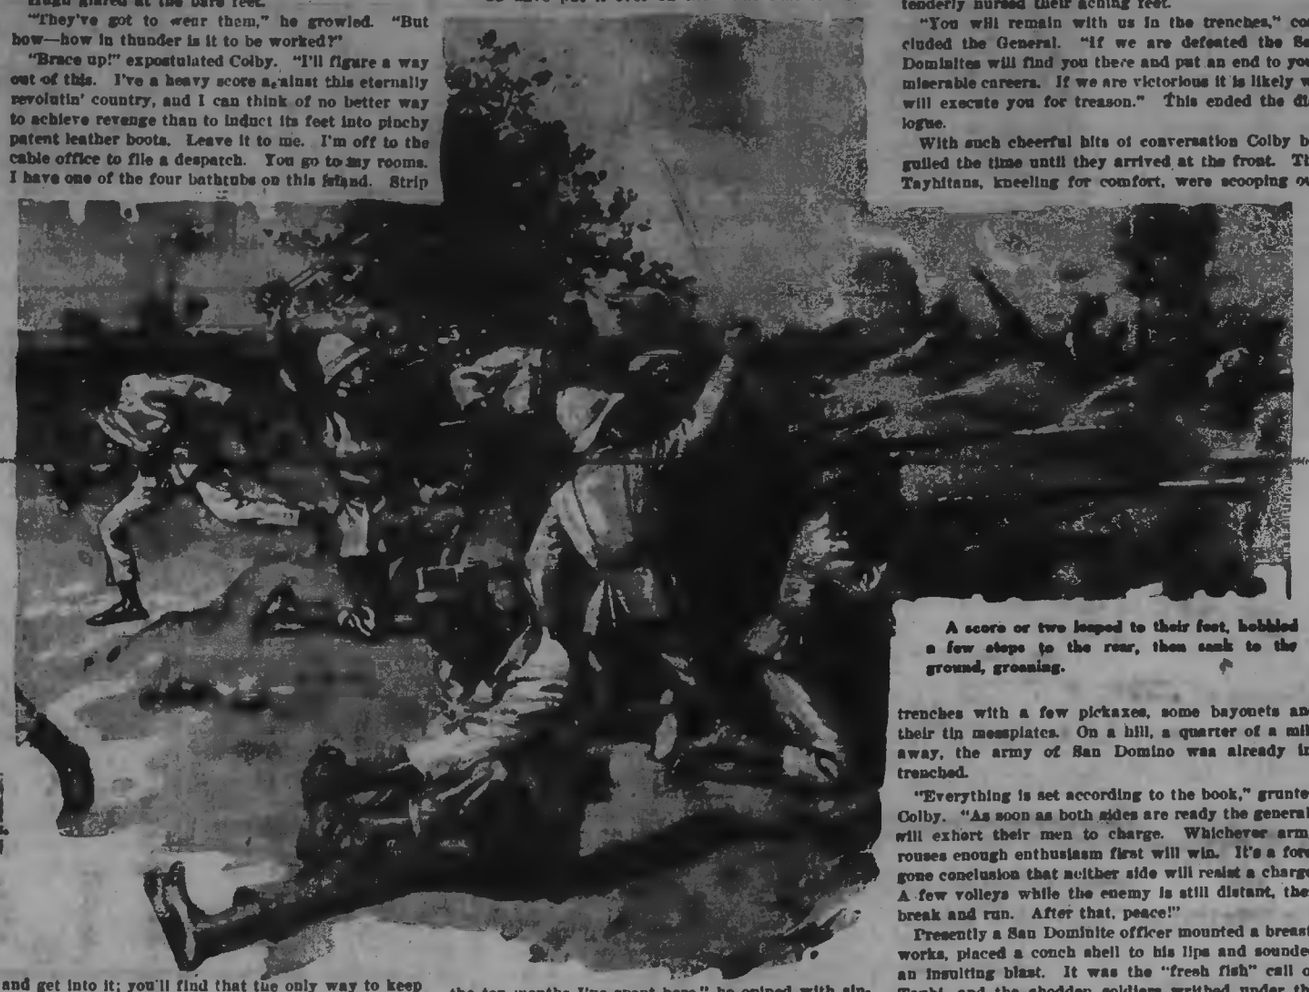
Each of the trio war barefoot!

"Those three gentlemen are the President, Secretary of State and the head of the army," explained Colby in a whisper.

Hugh glared at the bare feet.

"They've got to wear them," he growled. "But how—how in thunder is it to be worked?"

"Brace up!" expostulated Colby. "I'll figure a way out of this. I've a heavy score against this eternally revolutin' country, and I can think of no better way to achieve revenge than to induct its feet into pinchy patent leather boots. Leave it to me. I'm off to the cable office to file a despatch. You go to my rooms. I have one of the four bathtubs on this island. Strip



A score or two leaped to their feet, hobbled a few steps to the rear, then sank to the ground, groaning.

and get into it; you'll find that the only way to keep cool and protect yourself from insects. S'long!"

It was after five o'clock in the afternoon when Colby rejoined Lorimer in his rooms.

"I've fixed it," he announced, cheerfully. "You get the girl. I have put in two very rough hours on board the navy with our three barefoot friends, with a barefoot crew serving all kinds of drinks at the expense of this barefoot nation. I bring their acceptance of your invitation to dine here this evening."

"But I haven't"—— began Lorimer.

"Oh, yes you have," Colby smiled, blandly. "Listen to me. These chaps understand that you are a great traveller, as well as an expert on military affairs, having"——

"Which has nothing to do with the case at hand. As I was saying, they are well aware of the fact that at different times you have been called upon by Lord Kitchener, Major General Leonard Wood, Albert of Belgium and the great General Joffre for expert advice on army affairs.

"I left them bibulously discussing the fact that you had casually remarked to me that the armies of Europe found a tonic for their sense of humor in the fact that the soldiers of Tayhi, with their otherwise perfect equipment, wore no shoes."

"And my part?" inquired Hugh, meekly.

"Is to clinch the bargain," replied his businesslike friend, briskly. "The President, the Secretary of State and the commander of the army will arrive within the hour, still quite mellow. I have ordered the dinner—and the wine. Draw up a contract for four thousand pairs of shoes, pay the bill for our little party and leave the rest to me. If you have a dinner coat put it on. If you were ever an athlete you'll have some medals somewhere. Dangle 'em over your shirt front. I'm going for a tub. Need one."

At dinner Colby engineered the conversation round to affairs military and pedal. Unblushingly Colby manufactured anecdotes of Hugh's warlike prowess and his acquaintance with all the great military figures from Grant to French. Apparently the rulers of Tayhi were not hampered with a working knowledge of history. But the talk—and the wine—did their work.

Before coffee was served the great statesmen were vainly endeavoring to draw their nude extremities up into their trouser legs for shame, to hide their lack of shoes. They wept for shoes, they clamored for shoes! They declared the honor of Tayhi hung in the balance for the want of brogans.

When it was made known to them that Lorimer could supply the footwear they begged, with tears in their eyes, to be allowed to sign the contract. When the wobbly signatures had been fixed to an airtight agreement Hugh was obliged to dig into his luggage and bestow on his parting guests three pairs of his own shoes—for without shoes they refused to leave.

Days before the arrival of the shoes irate officers besieged Lorimer demanding to know where was their footgear and when it would arrive. The soldiers sulked in barracks, refusing to drill in shameful bare feet. The whole nation—except that part of it which was in rebellion—waited, grumbling and chagrined, on the will of the Meredith Shoe Company.

The great day dawned. An incredulous captain sent the heavy packing cases ashore and whiked as he surmised to his mate that there was more good gunpowder than sole leather in the boxes. A guard of honor, with feet wrapped in burlap rags, was drawn up on the wharf, and as the first crate was plumped onto Tayhitan soil a salute was fired from the anaemic brass cannon on the bow of the Tayhitan navy.

Several days later, in the grateful coolness of the International Club, Colby beamed on his fellow conspirator.

"To have put it over on them like that is worth the ten months I've spent here," he opined with sincere satisfaction. "It's a pity you don't carry a side line of silk socks."

Their admiration meeting was broken by the clumsy entrance of the commander in chief of the army. Stopping before the two Americans, he drew up one of his aching leather encased feet and, standing stork-like, saluted.

"I have wonderful news," he said, with a little grimace of agony. "War has been declared by Santo Domino!"

"The shoes!" cried Colby.

"That's it!" shouted Hugh, taking his cue from the newspaper man. "They've heard of the shoes and they are going to try to capture them!"

"They will have to take them from our dead bodies!" declared the commander in chief, valiantly.

"We desire that our honored friend"—here the General cautiously shifted to his other foot and saluted Lorimer—"go to the front with us, after reviewing the departing troops, to give us his expert strategical advice."

"Mr. Lorimer appreciates the privilege," said Colby, quickly. "We follow you immediately, sir."

After what he explained was a proper period of waiting Colby led his friend to the gayly bedecked band stand in the plaza. Leaning against the railing of the decrepit structure, after a fashion dictated by Colby as quite the proper one, they awaited the coming of the newly shod troops. From the barracks at the end of the straggling street floated the fanfare of trumpets. There was a staccato rattle of drums, but no thin line of heroes swung into view. A second and a third time the summons to arms was wafted to the ears of the occupants of the band stand, yet no soldiers were forthcoming.

Without vouchsafing any explanation, Colby slipped under the railing and rushed up the street between the lines of natives who waited the appearance of their shodden heroes. Suddenly he reappeared, running at top speed. At the band stand he paused long enough to yell:—

"Duck! There's the devil to pay back there."

Lorimer vaulted the railing and followed into a side street and down to the cable office. The operator was away, waiting for the parade. Colby sank into a chair, then, without seeming provocation, burst into laughter. Lorimer crossed the room and shook him by the shoulders.

"What's up?" he demanded. "I thought we were to review the troops."

"There isn't going to be any review," chortled his companion. "The army isn't going to march a step. Hang it all, they can't!"

Lorimer groaned.

"It's the shoes?"

"Yes, it's the shoes. The men can't walk in them, but we've done our work so well they won't take them off. What is a war or two, they said, compared with their shoes? Oh, my eye, if you could have seen them."

Hugh missed the humor of the situation. The first payment on the contract had not been made. He had rendered the army useless for war, failed in his first business venture, and Jane seemed further away from him than ever.

Colby straightened up abruptly. His sharp ears caught the sound of rumbling wheels, drivers swearing at their animals. For the first time in history the army of Tayhi was being transported to the front in mule carts.

The door to the cable office slammed open and four officers, bare-footed but limping from the effects of their shoes, entered. Facing the two Americans, one of them jabbered furiously for several moments to the effect that they were under arrest by order of the Secretary of the Treasury, backed by the President himself.

"This is an outrage!" Lorimer shouted. "I demand the protection of the American consul!"

"Who is probably playing bridge in Santiago," supplemented Colby, grimly, "and you can't send for him. We may as well go to jail."

They were not long in learning their fate. Walking beside the mule cart, in which rode the President and the commander in chief, they listened to a tirade from those officials, who from time to time tenderly nursed their aching feet.

"You will remain with us in the trenches," concluded the General. "If we are defeated the San Dominites will find you there and put an end to your miserable careers. If we are victorious it is likely we will execute you for treason." This ended the dialogue.

With such cheerful bits of conversation Colby beguiled the time until they arrived at the front. The Tayhitans, kneeling for comfort, were scooping out trenches with a few pickaxes, some bayonets and their tin messplates. On a hill, a quarter of a mile away, the army of San Domino was already intrenched.

"Everything is set according to the book," grunted Colby. "As soon as both sides are ready the generals will exhort their men to charge. Whichever army rouses enough enthusiasm first will win. It's a foregone conclusion that neither side will resist a charge. A few volleys while the enemy is still distant, then break and run. After that, peace!"

Presently a San Dominite officer mounted a breastworks, placed a conch shell to his lips and sounded an insulting blast. It was the "fresh fish" call of Tayhi, and the shodden soldiers writhed under the insult. Above the wind in the trees reverberated the perorations of the Tayhitan officers.

But the warriors were content to lie on their backs in the trenches and admire the scarcely scratched Meredith shoes, for while victory always attended the army which charged first it was equally an axiom that the victorious side always suffered what fatalities the war entailed, for the enemy never left the protection of the trenches except to flee.

In accordance with accepted custom, the soldiers of Tayhi discharged two or three not too accurate volleys. On rushed the shouting warriors of the hostile republic. The officers of the Tayhitans began to exhibit signs of nervous haste. Furtively they measured the distance between their lines and the charging enemy. Those who had not already discarded their shoes now did so, but the men in the trenches refused to be separated from their newly acquired footwear.

Two hundred yards separated the combatants.

"Retreat!" shrieked the Tayhitan officers and immediately set the example.

A score or two of the rank and file leaped to their feet, hobbled a few steps to the rear, then sank to the ground, groaning. The majority of the troops knew better than to attempt to move.

The charging line of San Dominites wavered. They did not know what to make of the situation. And, as if they had awaited this crucial moment, Colby and Lorimer acted. Snatching swords that had been dropped by officers, they knelt behind the men in the trenches, urging them to fire lower. A hundred yards away the enemy paused. Two or three officers ran away, howling. For a moment their lines wavered; then they broke and dashed back to and beyond the trenches from which they had so valiantly charged.

"The war is over!" announced Colby. "I told you something would happen if we hung on."

At the head of the victorious troops the two Americans rode back to Port Princess, the footsore army shouting itself hoarse as it trundled over the rough roads in mule carts.

The army filed into the barracks, and Hugh and Colby sought the seclusion of the International Club.

"Hello!" exclaimed Lorimer, as he picked up an envelope addressed in his name. "News from home—and the Meredith Shoe Company!"

"Probably calling you home to take charge of the New York office," muttered Colby, ruefully. "I say, what's off?"

Lorimer passed the open sheet across the table, and Colby read:—

"My Dear Lorimer:—

"You have in part fulfilled the requirements we place on our salesmen in that you have sold the goods. You still have a rather important mission to carry out. Per your order, we shipped 4,000 pairs of shoes at the wholesale price of three dollars per pair. In addition, we note, your expenses to date are a matter of five hundred dollars, a total of twelve thousand five hundred invested. When may we expect check? JOHN MEREDITH."

Even Colby found this a sticker. Far into the night they pondered, but no solution was forthcoming. But one thing was certain—somehow or other they must get that money.

Gradually the officers of the army filtered back into the city. News travels through mysterious but lightning quick channels even in Tayhi, and before sunrise even the President had learned of his victory and steamed back into the harbor. He was in that happy state which knows no time distinctions, and, in company with his commander in chief and the Secretary of the Treasury, rolled into the International Club, to find Hugh and Colby still wrestling with the problem of ways and means.

"We have decreed that you shall be advisory commander of the army," announced the President after Colby had translated his thanks for Hugh's services to the republic.

"When do you pay for the shoes?" demanded Hugh, with brutal directness. He was thinking of Jane and the letter.

"But the treasury is depleted. The recent war, happy as was its outcome"—— began the President.

"Go to the devil!" snapped Hugh, a statement that the President failed to appreciate. "I shall appeal to the Consul," he told Colby.

"What, again?" grinned that individual, cheerfully. "There is only one way to get the money, and that is to take it. I've an idea, but it will bear sleeping on. Come to bed."

Toward noon—the subject matter having been dictated by Colby—Lorimer despatched the following remarkable epistle to John Meredith:—

"I expect within a fortnight to be able to forward you the money. I find that there is but one way to get it—namely, by obtaining the signature of the President of the republic on an order against the customs funds. Having failed to convince the present Executive of the desirability of such a step, I shall follow the suggestion of my good friend Colby, seize the office myself and supply the needed signature. HUGH LORIMER."

The rest of the day and the entire night were spent in sowing the seeds of sedition, well moistened with champagne, among the officers who straggled into the International Club. So successful was this that when reveille sounded in the barracks the men roused themselves to listen to denunciations of their officers, who vividly sketched the character and ancestry of the President and his staff—those who had deserted the men in the trenches. The fact that these eloquent officers had fled also seemed to have been conveniently forgotten.

What was more fitting, they asked rather thickly, than that the great foreigner whose shoes had won the day for Tayhi should be made President? The thing was accomplished in an instant. The army rose to its booted, helpless feet, cheered the new President and sank back with relief to a sitting posture to drink away the holiday.

It is worthy of mention that Lorimer and Colby had no sooner installed themselves in the royal suite of the Government Palace than the erstwhile President, his former Secretary of the Treasury and Commander in Chief, in the quiet of the International Club, became engaged in one of the most popular pastimes of the torrid zone—plotting a revolution!

One morning, a few weeks after the "war," Colby entered the royal bedchamber and flopped unceremoniously on to the edge of the new President's bed.

"What's wrong?" he demanded, fearfully; "I'm not deposed yet, am I?"

"Not yet," replied Colby, slowly, "but pretty soon unless all the signs fail."

"That's the best news I've heard," cried Lorimer, springing out of bed. "I was beginning to fear that no one would relieve me of this confounded republic. Have you stopped to realize that my expense account for holding the Presidency long enough to get those shoes paid for has been five thousand dollars? Lord, cheer up! It's good news."

"Not so good as you think," retorted Colby, gloomily. "There's a gunboat flying the Stars and Stripes out in the harbor. Our three friends who lately occupied this place have been on board of her for an hour explaining that you are the worst kind of a crook. It looks bad for us."

Colby shrugged his shoulders.

"The natural desire of a fourth rate European Consul for publicity," he replied. "Here's the way I figure it. That infernal trio we turned out of office cabled to the consuls in Santiago. Certain European officers saw their chance for a grand stand play, reared up on their hind legs and clamored that this revolution of ours was an attempt to steal the island for the United States. The gunboat left Santiago three hours later, with orders from Washington. That part is straight enough. I got it from the cable operator, who owes me money. Besides, my paper has wired for the story."

"It looks like the last chapter," he muttered, turning back to Colby. "Jump out and see what you can learn! I suppose we shall have to stand up and receive them in a manner fitting our stations and then go to jail. This is no ordinary upheaval!"

Ten minutes later he was back again, his face alive with excitement.

"They're all up at the club, holding some sort of a powwow," he explained. "It's good night for us. But that isn't all. I drifted into the wireless house to see if they had any news and picked up this message from some boat that calls herself the Cynthia."

Lorimer emitted a howl of delight.

"Why, God bless your homely visage, that's the name of the Meredith yacht!" he cried.

Snatching a piece of flimsy from Colby's hand, he bent over it and read a fragment of a message which evidently had been interrupted:—

"Make west coast. Boat waiting. Come and"——

Five minutes later the single high powered automobile in the republic, the successive property of various Presidents, was roaring through the hills, with two Americans in the front seat.

Just as they had been scrambling into the car a messenger rushed up and thrust a slip of yellow paper into Hugh's hand. Without glancing at it Lorimer thrust it into his pocket.

As the natty little tender from the Cynthia chugged away from the beach he drew the crumpled paper out and read it. The message was from the President, returning to power, and was addressed to Hugh.

"No hard feeling," it read. "You won the war for us. Ship at once five thousand more pairs of shoes."

Hugh handed the order to John Meredith, who had come ashore in the tender. The shoe magnate snorted as he read its contents.

"You come home and marry Jane," he said to Lorimer. "It's cheaper than having you sell shoes. And this man Colby—he seems to have ideas. I think we can use him in the business."

On the quarterdeck of the yacht a girl was waving a handkerchief.

Colby smiled appreciatively. "My first business is as best man," he chuckled, but Hugh did not hear him. His eyes were on the girl.

Meredith tore the shoe order into bits, and as he tossed the pieces overboard the breeze sent them swirling back toward Tayhi.

THE HORRORS OF CONSTIPATION

Bowels Almost Paralysed "Fruit-a-tives" Relieved

Ste. Boniface de Shawinigan, P.Q. February 3rd, 1914.

"After suffering with terrible Constipation for over 2 years, 'Fruit-a-tives' relieved me. While a student at Berthier College, I became very ill and was forced to leave. Severe pains across the abdomen continually tortured me and my digestion became paralysed. Some one advised me to take 'Fruit-a-tives' and at once I felt a great improvement. After taking four or five boxes, I was completely relieved and have never had any return of this trouble." MAGLOIRE PAQUIN.

MILITARY PIGEONS

A military pigeon system is still maintained in France, owing to the success of experiments made during the siege of Paris, when, of 302 carriers liberated from balloons, 73 returned safely. The modern French carrier pigeon is a cross between the Biset and the Belgian "traveler." The prevailing type is large, with a long body, head, neck and beak. Birds chosen for swift work are fed on wheat, but when they are to be put to tests of endurance their diet is small dried beans and maize with water that contains iron.

Training begins when birds are three or four months old. They are placed in baskets, taken a mile or so from home, and liberated. A few days later the process is repeated at a greater distance, and so on in successive stages, until a bird flies homeward 100 miles or more. At five months it will fly 300 miles in ten hours. A pigeon, however, is not at its best until four or five years old, when it can easily cover 600 or 700 miles. The average speed of a good carrier is twenty miles an hour, and the height at which it flies is from 600 to 800 feet.

Load of Hay Was Upset and Young Man Was Hurt

Mr. J. Humphries Received a Bad Gash in Scalp as Result of Fall When Load Overturned—Hastings News.

HASTINGS, July 20.—A very large crowd gathered on Wednesday afternoon last to witness the lacrosse game played by the Campbellford and Hastings seniors. It is estimated that some ten of twelve hundred people were in the grounds, everyone watching with eager eye their own home team. The game was very exciting throughout, and at its close the visitors had the score, which stood 6 to 8 in their favour.

Two new autos have arrived in town, one for Dr. Edmison and one for Mr. L. T. Huycke. Still they come.

Friends of Mr. David Brackenridge, of Westwood are pleased to see him around after his recent illness.

A party of excursionists from Peterborough passed through here on Tuesday per steamer Geneva, en route for Healy Falls to spend the day. They returned to Hastings in the early evening and after a short stay proceeded on their homeward trip.

Mr. J. Humphries, son of Mr. Adam Humphries, who resides near town, was the victim of an accident last week while engaged in having operations. The young man was driving a load of hay into the barn, when suddenly the load overturned and he was thrown violently to the ground. His brother ran to the rescue and at once sent a message to Dr. Edmison who, upon examination, found an ugly gash in the scalp. The wound was dressed and required several stitches to close the gap. We are pleased to learn that he is doing as well as can be expected, and his friends are grateful that the accident did not prove any more serious.

Mr. T. Walsh is on a visit to friends to friends in Percy.

Fall wheat harvest has commenced and the farmers are rejoicing over the bountiful crop, which, we are informed, has not been equalled for some years.

Berry picking is now the order of the day, but the crop is reported very scarce.

Mr. Geo. Stevenson of Peterborough, has been visiting friends in and around Hastings.

Miss Mildred Howson of Norwood, has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Buck.

Miss Mary Lambert is with Peterborough friends.

Mrs. H. Humphries of Keene, has been with her son, Mr. Walter Humphries.

Mrs. Geo. Hormel has returned from a pleasant visit with her sister, Mrs. Hayden in Port Hope.

She was accompanied by her nieces, Misses Jonie and Carrie Hayden.

Mr. Cruickshank left last week for a visit with Peterborough friends.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Doherty spent a day last week with friends at Brickley.

Miss Johnson of Campbellford, was the guest of Mrs. A. Smith on Wednesday.

Mr. Shorter, who is a member of the overseas contingent, was home for a few days last week.

Just Suits My Needs Building Up the System

"I want to state that I have never taken anything to do me so much good as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food," writes Mrs. Edson Brock, Trenholmville, Que., "and I am never without it in the house. I was so nervous I could not sleep, but now I sleep soundly at nights and wake up feeling refreshed and ready for the day's work. I used the Nerve Food for months and found that it just suits my needs and has built up the system wonderfully. I know it is Dr. Chase's Nerve Food that has brought about the great change in my condition and am thankful for it.

"My husband was a great sufferer from itching piles and has been entirely cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment."

We are constantly receiving letters like this in regard to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. Everywhere it is being used because of its great restorative and reconstructive influence on the nervous system. Men and women who are run down in health, tired, nervous and discouraged, find in this great Food Cure the means of nourishing the exhausted system back to health and vigour.

Headaches, indigestion, sleeplessness, nervous irritability, lack of energy, and vigour — all tell of nervous exhaustion, and indicate the need of such treatment as Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Instead of affording mere temporary relief by stimulating the nerves, Dr. Chase's Nerve Food builds up the system by supplying the ingredients from which Nature forms new rich blood and revitalizes the wasted nervous system. Put Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to the test when you are feeling tired out and discouraged, fill the body with new rich blood and new nerve force and you will realize again the joy of good health. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISSES' DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

No matter what the material the Norfolk suit is one of the best liked for general wear by young girls. In making such a suit as the one shown in the illustration we have an advantage as the straps which simulate box pleats are applied and may be used or omitted, as desired.

The yoke in front and back is square and is essential to the style. It is cut to leave the neck a little exposed, and the edges of the opening are finished with a small collar. The sleeves are of coat shape, finished at either wrist or elbow with a cuff.

The three gore skirt which completes the suit is quite regulation in shape; it is somewhat circular in cut and measuring 2½ yards around the hem in the medium size.

Many of these suits are of Beach cloth and many more of linen, linene, pongee silk and of light weight woollen fabrics, such as serge, gabardine and the like. The Norfolk style is, strange to say, one of the best liked for poplin.

It is possible to give the suit additional charm by the use of colored buttons, red and white being liked for the tan shades and black and white for plain white and for navy blue.

The suit pattern, No. 7,248, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires 4¼ yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Thin Men and Women

Here's a Safe Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sinful waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the recently discovered regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with each meal and notice how quickly your cheeks fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting point.

All good druggists have Sargol, or you can get it from their wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated in the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

CAUTION—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

WHY THE RED CROSS

Description of Solferino by Swiss Led to Treaties and Flag

Why the Red Cross Society? Why not the Blue Cross or the Green Cross? How did the flag design so familiar on the battlefield in times of war, and at disasters in times of peace, come to be chosen?

The answer to these questions will be found in the following brief history of the Red Cross: The movement had its origin in Europe. After the battle of Solferino, in 1859, Henry Dunant, a Swiss gentleman, visited the battlefield and spent several days there assisting in the care of the wounded. He was much impressed by the sight of terrible suffering caused through the lack of sufficient appliances and help for the care of the wounded. In 1862 Dunant published a description of what he had seen; setting forth reasons for establishing in every country permanent societies for the relief of the wounded in war. His article was immediately translated into several European languages, and made a deep impression.

A society in Geneva, Switzerland, appointed a committee, at the head of which was General Dufour, the general in chief of the Swiss Confederation, for the purpose of carrying out the proposals of Dunant. This led to an international conference at Geneva in October, 1863, attended by delegates from sixteen countries, and which called an international congress that met in Geneva in August, 1864. The body drew up a treaty of nine articles, which has since obtained the approval of every civilised nation of the globe. This treaty looked to the neutralisation of hospitals, materials, nurses and surgeons in time of war, and that these might be recognised a common design was fixed upon for the flags of hospitals and convoys, and the arm badge for parsons. This was a red cross upon a white ground, a design adopted at a compliment to Switzerland, which has this design upon her flag, with colors reversed.

AMAZING ARMY CORPS

Hard to Imagine the Procession of Men and Material

In these days we talk glibly of army corps. If words could raise them, a score could be ready immediately. Mr. Spencer Wilkinson drew pen picture of one army corps on the march. He described the advance guard of 300 cuirassiers, three battalions of infantry, a dozen guns and their wagons, two more infantry units and a string of ammunition and supply wagons. This guard would take from six in the morning until six-thirty to pass the observer.

He continued: "At a quarter past seven more troops come up, first three battalions of infantry, followed by a tremendous row of guns, of which the last passes him at eight-thirty; then more infantry for an hour, followed by cavalry for twenty minutes. About ten o'clock the procession ends, but at eleven there begins a new procession of military carts and wagons lasting for half an hour. At twelve begins yet a fresh train of military carts, which goes on without interruption until four o'clock in the afternoon. All these bodies together, which have taken ten hours to move past the point where the imaginary watcher was sitting, constitute an army corps with its ammunition and supply trains."

BOMB-THROWERS' WORRIES

Sergeant Maurice Juven, of the 10th French Infantry Regiment, wounded, says: "I was made sergeant and one of the bomb-throwers of my company. It is not the pleasantest task to be a bomb-thrower. At the beginning we experimented with many sorts of bombs, but found most of them too risky for the thrower and the men in the trench behind him.

"One day it was cold and raining and I put the sack of bombs in a little recess in the side of the trench to be out of the wet. The sentinel gave the alarm that the Germans were moving to the assault. The lieutenant shouted out, 'Hurry up with the bombs, Juven.'

"I handed my tinder triquet to the sentinel, and pulling out a bomb tried to get the fuse to light. I had to blow on it for two or three seconds before I saw the red glow running along the cord. I then jerked back my hand to throw the bomb when to my dismay it slipped out of my half-frozen fingers and flew back into the trench behind me. I shouted a warning, but the men had all bolted to cover behind the nearest re-entrant angle. So when the flash and roar of the explosion came only three men were bowled over and cut about by flying stones and gravel, but were not seriously hurt."

FRENCH AVIATORS SCORE IN AN ATTACK

IMPORTANT ADVANCE MADE IN ALSACE

FRENCH AVIATORS MAKE A GREAT AIR RAID ON CONFLANS

Locomotive Shed Bursts Into Flames as Result of Being Struck by Bombs, While Railway Station There and at Colmar Were Badly Damaged---Important Junction Points Visited by French Birdmen.

FRENCH AGAIN MOVING ON TO COLMAR

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 21.—Thirty-one French aeroplanes participated in a great air raid on the railway station at Conflans, the War Office announced this afternoon. Bombs were hurled on several buildings and a locomotive shed was seen to burst into flames.

Conflans lies 15 miles west of the German fortress of Metz, and is the junction point of important railways supplying the German armies around Verdun and St. Mihiel.

Several bombs were hurled on the locomotive shed at Conflans, the War Office reported, all being "well placed." At Colmar two French aeroplanes dropped eight more bombs on the railway station.

This afternoon's communique reported a sudden resumption of severe fighting in the Vosges, west of Colmar. "Lively infantry engagements are proceeding in Alsace in the hills dominating the east bank of the Fecht River," said the communique. "Advancing from the north, we seized part of the enemy's works and made good progress toward the crest of the enemy's line defending Colmar."

LONDON, July 21.—There was one very significant phase, says the Daily News, in Premier Asquith's speech in the House of Commons yesterday on the subject of the vote of credit. Referring to the fact that the country's war expenditure was about $15,000,000 a day, he said it was possible that this amount would increase, and then he added that "advances to our allies might also grow as adhesions to our cause of those states which did not take part in the war in the early stages come forward." The Prime Minister's careful use of words suggests confidence as to the developments of the future which cannot be mistaken. "The return of ex-Premier Venizelos to Greece," says the News, "though it has not yet become effective in a parliamentary sense, has changed the direction of the wind in the Balkans, and the strong action of Rumania in stopping the flow of ammunition from Germany to Turkey, is the most decisive evidence there has yet been of a movement of opinions. Not less important is the frank declaration by M. Remoslavoff, the Bulgarian Prime Minister, of the terms of which his country is prepared to throw in its lot with the Allies."

BERLIN, July 21.—The Vossische Zeitung estimated to-day that since the beginning of the drive on Warsaw the Germans have captured 175 officers and 66,790 men, remarking that "this is a nice start."

MONTREAL, July 21.—The arrest of an Austrian frustrated a big plot to blow up the C.P.R. shops at Angus, according to evidence in police court this morning. It was planned to destroy the place with bombs and dynamite.

THE HAGUE, July 21.—The Belgian national fete day was celebrated to-day in the cities now held by Germans with displays of mourning. Shops were closed and black flags displayed. Several Belgian municipalities united in sending a telegram of loyalty to King Albert, which was secretly carried to the Holland frontier and then forwarded from a Dutch town.

ONE DEATH IN A RIOT

Special to the Examiner.

BAYONNE, N.J., July 21. — One man shot to death, several others hit by stray bullets, and many were seriously hurt by flying cobblestones in a riot in the street to-day between 1,800 striking employees of the Standard Oil Co. and 100 policemen.

DONATIONS ACKNOWLEDGED

The Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society beg to acknowledge the following which have been received and forwarded:

100 pairs of socks from the 57th Regt., Chapter I. O. D. E.; 8 night shirts, St. John's Girls' Auxiliary; box supplies, from Millbrook; box from Warsaw, containing socks and bandages, which have been forwarded, also old cotton, which is being used at the room on Simcoe street; also a large bale for the Shorncliffe Hospital from the Progressive Club.

The branch has been fortunate in securing the services of Dr. G. Sterling Ryerson, Surgeon in charge, and President of the Canadian Red Cross, who will give a lecture in Peterborough in September. The date will be announced later.

If it comes to the point when you have to decide between ordinary tea and Salada, remember that if Salada costs ten cents a pound more than the other tea, it only amounts to an additional twentieth part of a cent per cup to pay for certain satisfaction against the doubtful quality and flavour of the cheaper tea.

Old Employee Passes Away

Mr. Thomas Scott, Chief Operator at the Pumping Station, Has Been 23 Years at Waterworks

A trusted and valuable employee of the Waterworks Department of the city passed away at midnight last night in the person of Mr. Thomas Scott, chief operator at the pumping station.

Mr. Scott was for twenty-three years employed by the old Waterworks Company, before the city took over the plant. In the year 1902 the city commenced to operate the Waterworks and for four years before that date Mr. Scott was chief operator at the pumping station. Under the regime of the city he continued there, being given full charge of the pumping plant, machinery and dam. And by his strict attention to his duties at all times he has been a valuable employee in that capacity.

For some time Mr. Scott has been ailing, but only during the past three weeks has he been confined to his home. His condition gradually became worse and he passed away at midnight last night.

He was a member of the Sons of England and that body will have charge of the funeral, the time of which has not been settled yet, as a son of the deceased man has not arrived in the city, although he is expected to-day.

There was a meeting of the Utilities Commission called for four o'clock this afternoon to arrange for representation at the funeral. The other civic departments will also be represented.

Mr. Scott was about 57 years of age.

PTE. R. KENDRY TELLS OF WOUNDING OF CAPT. ACKERMAN

REFERS TO OTHER MEN

Pte. Roscoe E. Kendry of the 57th detachment sends the following most interesting letter to his mother, Mrs. T. E. Kendry, who is at present in Renfrew:

My Dear Mother,— Your ever welcome letter dated May 30th,. received all O.K., also the parcel, and was delighted to hear from you again. Many many thanks for the parcel. and please convey my thanks to Miss Melville for the parcel which she sent. I appreciate it very much. Tell Miss Melville for me that the "big happy family" which we had before going into action at Langemarck has been sadly "cut up," and it seems to bring the few of us that remain still closer together. It was a great blow to us to lose Major Bennett, for he was just like a father to us all. It may be that she would be acquainted with Bert Carpenter of the 57th regiment. When we were in the trenches at ——, the second last time, he was instantly killed by the explosion of a "coal box," but he would not have suffered any as he was asleep in the "dug out" at the time. This same shell wounded five others, Charley Moncour, from ? being one of the five.

Well, mother dear, since I wrote you last I have been in the trenches again for seven days at another place and we had a very busy time of it. One night before 6:30 p.m. the Huns commenced to bombard our trenches, and it did not let up until after eight Of course an occasional shell came over all night, but for over half an hour it was though it was raining shells, and every assortment which the Huns had I think came over. There was nothing to it but sit tight and it was during this time that Capt. C. Ackerman was pretty severely wounded. We got him into our dug out and the stretcher bearers gave him first aid. I think most of his wounds were from shrapnel and he looked very pale. He sure must have been suffering, as I could see seven wounds on the left breast, one on the left arm, and I don't know how many on the head. Am sure his left arm must have been broken too.

Blowing Up a Hun Trench.

Our brigade attacked the German trenches last night, and the 1st brigade sugered the most. They led in the attack, and it is estimated lost about six hundred men. One night when we were working at a mine which we were putting under the Hun's trench they hollered over "Hock Dem Kaiser," and "Gott Staffe England." You see our trench was only forty yards from theirs. Well we "Strafed" them the next night, when we put off the mine. Gee! it was a great sight to see sand bags, earth, Huns, &c., go about one hundred and fifty feet in the air. Gee! it seemed for a little while after as if it was raining sand bags, &c. You see the men who put the mine in dug down and then across under their trench.

What the Saxon Prisoner Said.

While we lost quite a few of our boys, one must remember that the Huns lost four or five to our one. One Saxon prisoner said when he was going through our trench, "good luck to you boys, and I hope you win, I'm "fed up with it all." The majority of the Saxons would quit now, but if they go to surrender the Prussian Guards (who are mixed in with them) turn the machine guns on them.

We have discarded the Ross Rifle and are now using the Lee-Enfield, and it is a better rifle all round, holds ten cartridges instead of five of the Ross, and has a double-edged bayonet. It is the same as the British Tommies use.

A THRILLING NARRATIVE

Col. Morrison in Command of 1st Battalion Brigade Tells How Two Peterboro' Men Were Killed at Festubert

GUNS IN THE TRENCHES

The following is of intense interest to Peterborough people, inasmuch as all Peterborough artillerymen are in this brigade. The two gunners referred to by Col. Morrison as being killed were Gunners McDonald and Bamford of Peterborough. Lieut. Harold Matthews is with the brigade:

Ottawa, July 20.—The thrilling adventures of the 1st Artillery Brigade in France are graphically told in a letter from the front received to-day from Col. E. W. B. Morrison, in command of the brigade, by Mrs. Morrison. Part of the letter is as follows:

Northern France, June 19, 1915—This brigade is still in action, which seems to be a condition that has become chronic. Other corps go back for a rest, but we go on forever, apparently. The latest novelty is that, from having this brigade almost constantly within rifle fire of the trenches, they have begun to use my artillery in lieu of machine guns.

Two Guns in Front Trench.

On the 15th two of my guns were put in the front trench with the infantry. Automobile tires were tied on the gun wheels and the harness was bound with rags to prevent the clink of the chains being heard, and the guns were put in behind the foremost parapet, 90 yards from the German trenches. An officer was told off to each gun with five men and 150 rounds of ammunition. Fifteen minutes before the infantry assault the sandbags were torn down, unmasking my guns, and they opened an intense fire at point-blank range. They smashed the enemy's parapet, blew three machine guns to pieces, and swept all the barbed wire entanglements from the German trenches. Then our infantry assaulted.

Guns Wrecked, Gunners Killed.

Subsequently our infantry had to return through no fault of theirs, for they captured three successive lines of trenches, but my guns were there unprotected by any parapet, a stark target for the enemy at close range. The guns had been specially armoured with plates made of Gillette razor steel, but a German shell struck one gun, blew part of the shield off it, wrecked the gun and killed two of the gunners; Lieut. Craig and Lieut. Kelly and a gunner were wounded. One of the limbers also was smashed. As I never had expected to see any of them alive again, what was left was all to the good.

Only One-fifth Returned.

Of the Canadian regiment which assaulted at that point only one officer and one-fifth of the men returned. Strong men cried and cursed at the sight. My poor friend, Lieut.-Col. Becher of London, who distinguished himself so much at Ypres, was killed. They were bombed from the flanks out of each trench they took, but they held on for an hour and twenty minutes, practically as long as any were left alive. Major Smith, who led his men to the farthest forward point and

A meeting of the Peterboro' Patriotic Fund committee was held in the Council chamber last night when an important statement of monies received and disbursed and the auditors' report were presented. Mayor Buller occupied the chair, and there were present Messrs. E. A. Peck, Harry Rush, W. H. Dunsford, Ald. Debbin, J. A. Aylmer and G. B. Armstrong, secretary.

His Worship remarked that the reports were particularly gratifying, but there should have been a larger attendance. Probably, he said, many of the members were out of the city on business or vacations.

The Auditors' Report.

The following report was read of the audit of the Fund accounts up to May 31st:

To the Chairman and Subscribers to the Patriotic and Local Relief Fund—

As instructed I have made an examination and audit of the accounts of the trustees and of the treasurer of the Local Patriotic and Relief Funds up to 31st of May, 1915.

I find all in good order and correct.

All monies received on subscriptions are kept in a separate bank account in the name of the trustees, Mr. J. A. Aylmer and Mr. T. F. Matthews, and by them remitted to the Canadian Patriotic Fund, Ottawa, or placed to the credit of the Local Relief committee.

All disbursements are made by cheque, signed by the proper authorities, the Mayor and City Treasurer on the order of the Relief Officer. The vouchers for such disbursements are complete and in good order.

In view of the lack of organization at the time of the first campaign, the total of which has been merged with the second one in December. I consider that the committee and officers are to be commended for the correct accounting of all monies handled.

Respectfully submitted.

NEW U.S. NOTE TO GERMANY IS READY TO SEND

Communication, it is Said, Will State That the United States Cannot See Any Useful End in Further Parleys.

CLAUSES MODIFIED

SPECIAL WIRE TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, July 21.—Divested of any tone suggesting belligerency, in friendly, but firm tones, the United States' note in reply to Germany's on the submarine warfare was drafted in final form to-day by Secretary of State Lansing. Denying himself to all except the most urgent visitors the Cabinet Premier put on the finishing touches to the note. Reports today were that the note would be delivered to the Berlin Foreign Office on Monday. It developed to-day that at Tuesday's Cabinet conference there was considerable debate concerning the interpretation in the reply to Germany of a warning that a repetition of the Lusitania affair would be considered an "unfriendly act." It was understood the wording of this clause was so modified as merely to point out that another such incident would be viewed with grave concern as threatening the hitherto peaceful relations between the two countries. Germany's proposal that neutral passenger vessels, German ships or foe "enemy" ships be placed under the American flag for transporting American passengers is declared impossible without special act of Congress, now in adjournment. The note is said to have been modified to the extent of stating that this government cannot see in the present situation how any useful end can be attained by further parleys.

Peterboro' Boy Successful In Aviation Tests

Lieut. Norman Geale Receives Commission in the Navy Branch of the Service

TORONTO, July 21. — There were ideal weather conditions at Long Branch yesterday, and the tests were made of the remainder of the first-class aviators trained here under Pilot Carlstrom.

Five of the six men came through the examination successfully, and they will receive their commissions immediately, leaving the city in a few days for Ottawa.

The men who passed were: Lieuts. D. H. McLachlin, Ottawa; D. Joy, Toronto; C. Norman Geale, Peterborough; C. McLaurin, Lachine; and W. H. Peberty, Ruby, England.

This is the second group of men to graduate from the Curtiss Company. The two first-named are to be connected with the Army branch of the service, and the other three with the Navy.

ALD. J. J. DUFFUS WILL BE PRESENT

At the Opening of the London and Port Stanley Radial Railway

Alderman Duffus left to-day for London, Ont., where he will represent the city at the opening of the London and Port Stanley Radial Railway. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., will also be present. The event will mark a new phase in the development of the Hydro-Electric scheme, as this is the first radial railway to be operated in Western Ontario.

LLOYD GEORGE'S STIRRING ADDRESS TO THE MINERS

"With the Help of You Men Great Britain Will Defy the Most Potent Enemy in the World" He Tells Welsh Strikers

WAS WILDLY CHEERED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

CARDIFF, July 21.— Minister of Munitions, Lloyd George, who was in the hall when votes of delegates of the miners was taken, ratifying the agreement of yesterday, was escorted to the platform amid cheers from the miners. In a short speech he congratulated both miners and mine interests for reaching a speedy settlement and recognizing that the country's interests were above their own. "When I was first asked to come here, I was horrified at the thought of taking part in a struggle between my best friends," said Lloyd George, "but now my trip becomes a source of joy. I am returning to London, having shaken hands with my fellow workmen and gentlemen on the other side of the question."

Britain faces a situation so serious as to call for united concentration and the action of every man, woman and child in the nation," Lloyd George declared in his address.

Lloyd George made his speech immediately after the delegates to the conference had ratified the action of their Executive Council yesterday in agreeing on terms of settlement. He was frequently interrupted by prolonged cheering. The Minister of Munitions referred to the fact that the bulk of France's coal fields are in the hands of the Germans. He urged the miners on that account to make up for the time lost during the strike by extraordinary efforts. "Show France that you are prepared to assist in the struggle for world freedom by filling the bunkers of her navy and England's navy," he said. "With the help of you men, Great Britain will defy the most potent enemy in the world. The Government depends upon you to give our gallant fighters in the trenches a fair and equal chance with their foes. It depends upon your efforts to aid in the speeding of the production of shells. Peace at home is absolutely essential if England is to emerge from this war victorious."

A Letter That Shows How England is Getting Into the War.

The manner in which the people of England are throwing themselves into the war is shown by the following extracts from a letter received by a Peterborough man from a relative in England, who is a brigadier-general, employed at the War Office. He writes:

It has been a sad time lately, but the whole Empire is suffering together, and also glorying together, in the way our young soldiers are holding high the flag. No doubt we have a hard time yet coming, but the Kaiser will find as he did before, that it is unwise to boast before the fight is over.

I am so very sorry for your disappointment, and I wish I could see my way clear to help you to do your bit for the Empire just now, but London is full of men in the vigour and ripe experience of your age, though I daresay, not so youthful in heart as you, and one hears every day the groans of the disappointment because employment cannot be found.

Two of my friends, both major-generals, have accepted employment, and have been gazetted, graded as staff-lieutenants and one brigadier-general is graded as a staff 2nd lieutenant. That will give you an idea of what a glut of elders there are in the military market.

FRENCH AVIATORS SCORE IN AN ATTACK
IMPORTANT ADVANCE MADE IN ALSACE

FRENCH AVIATORS MAKE A GREAT AIR RAID ON CONFLANS

Locomotive Shed Bursts Into Flames as Result of Being Struck by Bombs, While Railway Station There and at Colmar Were Badly Damaged---Important Junction Points Visited by French Birdmen.

FRENCH AGAIN MOVING ON TO COLMAR

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 21.—Thirty-one French aeroplanes participated in a great air raid on the railway station at Conflans, the War Office announced this afternoon. Bombs were hurled on several buildings and a locomotive shed was seen to burst into flames.

Conflans lies 15 miles west of the German fortress of Metz, and is the junction point of important railways supplying the German armies around Verdun and St. Mihiel.

Several bombs were hurled on the locomotive shed at Conflans, the War Office reported, all being "well placed." At Colmar two French aeroplanes dropped eight more bombs on the railway station.

This afternoon's communique reported a sudden resumption of severe fighting in the Vosges, west of Colmar. "Lively infantry engagements are proceeding in Alsace in the hills dominating the east bank of the Fecht River," said the communique. "Advancing from the north, we seized part of the enemy's works and made good progress toward the crest of the enemy's line defending Colmar."

LONDON, July 21.—There was one very significant phase, says the Daily News, in Premier Asquith's speech in the House of Commons yesterday on the subject of the vote of credit. Referring to the fact that the country's war expenditure was about $15,000,000 a day, he said it was possible that this amount would increase, and then he added that "advances to our allies might also grow as adhesions to our cause of those states which did not take part in the war in the early stages come forward." The Prime Minister's careful use of words suggests confidence as to the developments of the future which cannot be mistaken. "The return of ex-Premier Venizelos to Greece," says the News, "though it has not yet become effective in a parliamentary sense, has changed the direction of the wind in the Balkans, and the strong action of Rumania in stopping the flow of ammunition from Germany to Turkey, is the most decisive evidence there has yet been of a movement of opinions. Not less important is the frank declaration by M. Remoslavoff, the Bulgarian Prime Minister, of the terms of which his country is prepared to throw in its lot with the Allies."

BERLIN, July 21.—The Vossische Zeitung estimated to-day that since the beginning of the drive on Warsaw the Germans have captured 175 officers and 66,790 men, remarking that "this is a nice start."

MONTREAL, July 21.—The arrest of an Austrian frustrated a big plot to blow up the C.P.R. shops at Angus, according to evidence in police court this morning. It was planned to destroy the place with bombs and dynamite.

THE HAGUE, July 21.—The Belgian national fete day was celebrated to-day in the cities now held by Germans with displays of mourning. Shops were closed and black flags displayed. Several Belgian municipalities united in sending a telegram of loyalty to King Albert, which was secretly carried to the Holland frontier and then forwarded from a Dutch town.

ONE DEATH IN A RIOT

Special to the Examiner.

BAYONNE, N.J., July 21. — One man shot to death, several others hit by stray bullets, and many were seriously hurt by flying cobblestones in a riot in the street to-day between 1,500 striking employees of the Standard Oil Co. and 100 policemen.

DONATIONS ACKNOWLEDGED

The Peterborough Branch of the Red Cross Society beg to acknowledge the following which have been received and forwarded:

100 pairs of socks from the 57th Regt., Chapter I. O. D. E.; 8 night shirts, St. John's Girls' Auxiliary; box supplies, from Millbrook; box from Warsaw, containing socks and bandages, which have been forwarded, also old cotton, which is being used at the room on Simcoe street; also a large bale for the Shorncliffe Hospital from the Progressive Club.

The branch has been fortunate in securing the services of Dr. O. Sterling Ryerson, Surgeon in charge, and President of the Canadian Red Cross, who will give a lecture in Peterborough in September. The date will be announced later.

If it comes to the point when you have to decide between ordinary tea and Salada, remember that if Salada costs ten cents a pound more than the other tea, it only amounts to an additional twentieth part of a cent per cup to pay for certain satisfaction against the doubtful quality and flavour of the cheaper tea.

Old Employee Passes Away

A trusted and valuable employee of the Waterworks Department of the city passed away at midnight last night in the person of Mr. Thomas Scott, chief operator at the pumping station.

Mr. Scott was for twenty-three years employed by the old Waterworks Company, before the city took over the plant. In the year 1903 the city commenced to operate the Waterworks and for four years before that date Mr. Scott was chief operator at the pumping station. Under the regime of the city he continued there, being given full charge of the pumping plant, machinery and dam. And by his strict attention to his duties at all times he has been a valuable employee in that capacity.

For some time Mr. Scott has been ailing, but only during the past three weeks has he been confined to his home. His condition gradually became worse and he passed away at midnight last night.

He was a member of the Sons of England and that body will have charge of the funeral, the time of which has not been settled yet, as a son of the deceased man has not arrived in the city, although he is expected to-day.

There was a meeting of the Utilities Commission called for four o'clock this afternoon to arrange for representation at the funeral. The other civic departments will also be represented.

Mr. Scott was about 57 years of age.

PTE. R. KENDRY TELLS OF WOUNDING OF CAPT. ACKERMAN

REFERS TO OTHER MEN

Pte. Roscoe E. Kendry of the 57th detachment sends the following most interesting letter to his mother, Mrs. T. E. Kendry, who is at present in Renfrew:

My Dear Mother,— Your ever welcome letter dated May 30th, received all O.K., also the parcel, and was delighted to hear from you again. Many many thanks for the parcel, and please convey my thanks to Miss Melville for the parcel which she sent. I appreciate it very much. Tell Miss Melville for me that the "big happy family" which we had before going into action at Langemarck has been sadly "cut up," and it seems to bring the few of us that remain still closer together. It was a great blow to us to lose Major Bennett, for he was just like a father to us all. It may be that she would be acquainted with Bert Carpenter of the 57th regiment. When we were in the trenches at ——, the second last time, he was instantly killed by the explosion of a "coal box," but he would not have suffered any as he was asleep in the "dug out" at the time. This same shell wounded five others, Charley Moncour, from ? being one of the five.

Well, mother dear, since I wrote you last I have been in the trenches again for seven days at another place and we had a very busy time of it. One night before 6:30 p.m. the Huns commenced to bombard our trenches, and it did not let up until after eight Of course an occasional shell came over all night, but for over half an hour it was though it was raining shells, and every assortment which the Huns had I think came over. There was nothing to it but sit tight and it was during this time that Capt. C. Ackerman was pretty severely wounded. We got him into our dug out and the stretcher bearers gave him first aid. I think most of his wounds were from shrapnel and he looked very pale. He sure must have been suffering, as I could see seven wounds on the left breast, one on the left arm, and I don't know how many on the head. Am sure his left arm must have been broken too.

Blowing Up a Hun Trench.

Our brigade attacked the German trenches last night, and the 1st brigade augered the most. They led in the attack, and it is estimated lost about six hundred men. One night when we were working at a mine which we were putting under the Hun's trench they hollered over "Hock Dem Kaiser," and "Gott Staffe England." You see our trench was only forty yards from theirs. Well we "Strafed" them the next night, when we put off the mine. Gee! it was a great sight to see sand bags, earth, Huns, &c., go about one hundred and fifty feet in the air. Gee! it seemed for a little while after as if it was raining sand bags, &c. You see the men who put the mine in dug down and then across under their trench.

What the Saxon Prisoner Said.

While we lost quite a few of our boys, one must remember that the Huns lost four or five to our one. One Saxon prisoner said when he was going through our trench, "good luck to you boys, and I hope you win, I'm "fed up with it all." The majority of the Saxons would quit now, but if they go to surrender the Prussian Guards (who are mixed in with them) turn the machine guns on them.

We have discarded the Ross Rifle and are now using the Lee-Enfield, and it is a better rike all round, holds ten cartridges instead of five of the Ross, and has a double-edged bayonet. It is the same as the British Tommies use.

About David Evans, I must say,

A THRILLING NARRATIVE

Col. Morrison in Command of 1st Battalion Brigade Tells How Two Peterboro' Men Were Killed at Festubert

GUNS IN THE TRENCHES

The following is of intense interest to Peterborough people, inasmuch as all Peterborough artillerymen are in this brigade. The two gunners referred to by Col. Morrison as being killed were Gunners McDonald and Bamford of Peterborough. Lieut. Harold Matthews is with the brigade:

Ottawa, July 20.—The thrilling adventures of the 1st Artillery Brigade in France are graphically told in a letter from the front received to-day from Col. E. W. B. Morrison, in command of the brigade, by Mrs. Morrison. Part of the letter is as follows:

Northern France, June 19, 1915—This brigade is still in action, which seems to be a condition that has become chronic. Other corps go back for a rest, but we go on forever, apparently. The latest novelty is that, from having this brigade almost constantly within rifle fire of the trenches, they have begun to use my artillery in lieu of machine guns.

Two Guns in Front Trench.

On the 15th two of my guns were put in the front trench with the infantry. Automobile tires were tied on the gun wheels and the harness was bound with rags to prevent the clink of the chains being heard, and the guns were put in behind the foremost parapet, 90 yards from the German trenches. An officer was told off to each gun with five men and 150 rounds of ammunition. Fifteen minutes before the infantry assault the sandbags were torn down, unmasking my guns, and they opened an intense fire at point-blank range. They smashed the enemy's parapet, blew three machine guns to pieces, and swept all the barbed wire entanglements from the German trenches. Then our infantry assaulted.

Guns Wrecked, Gunners Killed.

Subsequently our infantry had to return through no fault of theirs, for they captured three successive lines of trenches, but my guns were there unprotected by any parapet, a stark target for the enemy at close range. The guns had been specially armoured with plates made of Gillette razor steel, but a German shell struck one gun, blew part of the shield off it, wrecked the gun and killed two of the gunners; Lieut. Craig and Lieut. Kelly and a gunner were wounded. One of the limbers also was smashed. As I never had expected to see any of them alive again, what was left was all to the good.

Only One-fifth Returned.

Of the Canadian regiment which assaulted at that point only one officer and one-fifth of the men returned. Strong men cried and cursed at the sight. My poor friend, Lieut.-Col. Becher of London, who distinguished himself so much at Ypres, was killed. They were bombed from the flanks out of each trench they took, but they held on for an hour and twenty minutes, practically as long as any were left alive. Major Smith, who led his men to the furthest forward point and

WHAT WILL BE DONE WITH GERMANY.

Norman Angell, has written an article for the Saturday Evening Post entitled "Suppose America Declared War on Germany?" Why cannot he suppose some more probable hypothesis? Nobody expects the United States to declare war and only a few people want her to do so. Norman is always interesting and sometimes sensible. This time he is at least interesting. He discusses questions of such practical importance as "Have neutrals a right to trade with each other?" "Of what use to vindicate the immunity of Americans from death by torpedo and leave it open for them to be blown up by mines?" He thinks that Great Britain has right on her side but has violated international law and so he wants the law amended. To reconcile it with Great Britain's practice on this occasion? Oh, dear no! To prevent Britain doing it again! He profoundly but not very originally remarks "The sea is the highway of the world, and to civilize sea law is to internationalize the world!" He seems to be under the delusion that all that is necessary to vindicate the law is a little more law. What on earth is the use of appealing to law against the Huns? You might as well try to check a mad dog by quoting statutes and by-laws and by citing precedents to him. We believe there are lawyers in Montreal who think the war might have been prevented by injunction proceedings, and might be stopped now by a writ of quo warranto.

Mr. Angell then goes on to ask himself the question "Can Germany be destroyed?" and to himself makes answer "No." He is distinctly of the impression that the world cannot enjoy international law and Germany at the same time, but he evidently does not believe in the possibility of parting Germany out of business. You cannot, he argues, annihilate sixty-five or seventy-five millions of people; you cannot divide them up between France and Russia save at the cost of making those two states into highly military, undemocratic and oppressive powers; you cannot divide Germany into separate States; you cannot count upon the permanence and immutability of any alliance or combination for the subjugation of Germany.

In the vulgar tongue the poor old world is "up against it." The only alleviation Mr. Angell can suggest is that "Nothing will alter it, except to give to war a new method, that on the one hand shall render it more effective for purposes representing the common interest, and on the other less fertile of danger and mischief." How this is to be brought about he does not seem to have the faintest idea. He devotes a paragraph to "America's Opportunity," but, alas! the opportunity appears to be to do nothing in particular.

A good many reformers are worried about what is to be done with Germany when she is beaten. The best recipe for mock turtle soup commences: "First catch your mock." However, there is no great harm in taking time by the forelock. What at first looks like the craziest scheme for keeping the world's peace is suggested by Mr. W. L. B. Castle in the National Review, who doesn't think it is as mad as it looks, but evidently has his doubts as to whether all other reformers are not, as the old Scotch lady observed, "a little queer." He proposes that Great Britain, Russia, France and Italy should relieve the Austro-German Power of some of its territory, including all its seaboards. Russia is to appropriate all the Baltic Coast and Great Britain to take over all the German North Sea ports. He recognizes that Great Britian would have to keep a big standing army on the continent; but thinks that this would be rather a good thing. He also recognizes that in Germany the most violent resentment would be aroused, and that the German heart would be turned to gall and womanhood. But as he cogently asks: "What would this amount to? In any case, the German is going to be bitter and venemous after the war; and as embittered and hostile race, provided with a long coast-line and fine harbours, would be infinitely more dangerous than an embittered and hostile race without that coast-line and without those harbours."

That is the whole trouble. If the Germans are willing to accept peace now, it is only to give them breathing time; to give them opportunity to perfect a scheme for revenge; to enable German diplomacy to rectify its old blunders and to do its characteristic work in creating distrust between the Allies; to re-organize their army and to strengthen their navy, to such an extent that it can give up bluffing on the Kiel Canal, and come out and fight on the sea. By all means let us be considerate in dealing with a crushed and humiliated foe, but we have no right to facilitate another disturbance of the peace of the whole world, or to condone the atrocious crimes of the present war. When the German people have their freedom, it will be time enough to restore Germany's power and place among the nations. Hohenzollernism may be as hard to kill as Napoleonism, but the one can be killed as surely as was the other. Meanwhile it should be a St. Helena for any of the assassins whom the gallows spares. The hope of Europe, including Germany, is in Democracy triumphant.—Montreal Herald.

BRITAIN'S DEBT TO BOTHA.

The expulsion of the Germans from South-west Africa is to the British Empire an event of far greater significance than appears on the surface, says the Toronto Star. It means, not merely the destruction of German influence in one section of Africa, but against the British Empire in the southern half of the dark continent. When Germany entered upon her scheme of colonial aggression she selected South-west Africa as a desirable field of operations. She began by sending a certain Herr Luderitz to the territory she had in view, and as a result of this man's mission the report was issued that he had acquired by treaty with the natives a large and important area. Germany despatched a military force to take possession. The natives objected, and war ensued. The Germans practised their customary cruelties, and soon the country was deluged with blood. The people had to surrender, and thus "kultur" secured its first foothold in that part of the world.

A military government was at once established in the newly-acquired colony, and thenceforth South-west Africa was ruled on the German principle of horror and force. The colony was never particularly promising from the point of view of settlement. Its resources were not great, and its climate was not agreeable. Yet it was highly valued by the Kaiser and his military group at Berlin. An army was maintained within its borders, and the surviving natives were drafted into the service. Why was this unlikely place so cherished by the powers having the direction of the fortunes of the German Empire? Why were millions of marks expended upon it annually? The riddle is explained in part by the report made in 1905 by the Kolonial Gesellschaft, an association which has in charge the colonial interests of Germany. That organization thus explained the meaning of the South-west African occupation:

"German South-west Africa holds an exceptional position among our colonies. Its importance to the Mother Country lies not in its economic possibilities, but in its contingent man power, and, therefore, in its role in world politics. If it can only absorb a few hundred thousand German settlers it will form an overseas German country, a useful basis for our position on the theatre of the world, a point d'appui for the world politics of the German race."

It will be observed that the colony is here treated not as a possible home for peace-loving settlers, but as a centre of military activity. Against whom was its strength to be exerted? This point is expounded by many German writers and speakers. In the Reichstag five years ago a proposition was made for the extension of the Colonial railway in the direction of British South Africa. Herr Lattmann, one of the members, declared that with this road completed the invasion of South Africa would be rendered possible. The Kirchen-Zeitung, an organ of the Lutheran Church, added, with an obvious expression of satisfaction, that after the road had been built it would be easy to send 10,000 South-west Africans on to Cape Town. The popular objection to the expenditure of large sums of money by Germany on this far-away place was met recently by the Deutsche Konfection, a trade journal, which declared that the colony is useful to Germany only "as a means of facilitating a descent upon the Transvaal and Cape Colony."

The coolness with which the hostile purpose of the occupation of South-west Africa has been discussed in Germany is illustrated in the case of a Dr. Paul Samassa, who has written a book on the value of the colony to the Empire. This author candidly acknowledges that the territory has been held by Germany with an attack on British South Africa in view. He says there were in 1905, 17,000 Germans in Cape Colony, 12,000 in the Transvaal, 1,000 in Orangia, and 3,000 in Natal, all under the influence of their Fatherland and zealous in its interests. The people could be relied upon to aid in "the rescue" of British South Africa "from British civilisation." And their assistance would be all the more successful if German colonists were directed to South Africa. They could receive help from German South-west Africa. Dr. Samassa says:

"We have at present about 13,000 troops there: In case of a war with Britain, the British fleet will blockade the South-west African coast, so that nothing will remain for our troops but to invade Cape Colony, and to live upon the country. I dont' believe that an invasion will be immediately followed by a general rising of the Boer population, but thousands of them who have nothing to lose will join our troops."

Thus, the meaning of the German position next door to our own South Africa is made plain. It was not for the purpose of creating a prosperous and self-supporting colony that the Germans came there. It was not with the idea of developing the country and conferring upon it the blessings of civilization that they took possession. They murdered and plundered the original occupants and stole the tarritory with a view to menacing and ultimately destroying the independence of British South Africa. Their plans were carefully devised. They expected, when the war for which they were preparing broke out, that they would be able to enlist on their side some disaffected Boers, and that their trained force thus augmented, would sweep into South Africa, killing and robbing as it proceeded, until finally British prestige and British authority in South Africa were destroyed.

General Botha by expelling the Germans has therefore done much more than merely take the colony they occupied. He has put an end to a great intrigue against the Empire, engineered in Berlin, and has assured to British and Boers alike in South Africa the priceless blessing of freedom under the British flag.

LABOUR'S SHARE IN WAR PROFITS.

Those people who have thought to see in England's numerous labour troubles the symptoms of a general strike against the war itself may profitably note the facts given in a London cable to the World relating to the South Wales coal strike. Since the war began, the prices have gone up 30 to 35 per cent., while wages have been allowed a gingerly rise of 5 to 7 per cent.

It was a scandal of our Civil War that through army contracts and the general inflation of money and prices numberless great fortunes were made in denial of a fair share to labour. If labour had then been as well organized as it is now, the North might have had an epidemic of strikes and the public sentiment would have compelled a settlement on just terms to labour.

The present British experience is not without its peace value. It will teach that war is no longer to be counted a source of huge profit to a few business stay-at-homes at the expense of all the rest in lives and property.—New York World.

NO ANSWER NEEDED.

Were the positions of the British and German navies reversed, would there be any protest from the latter nation against the United States supplying munitions to the allies? The negative is so apparent that the query is superfluous.—Hamilton Spectator.

GENERAL ALDERSON'S ADDRESS TO CANUCKS

Commander of 1st Division Makes Notable Speech to his Troops After the Battle of Langemarck—"I Have Never Been So Proud of Anything in my Life as I am of this Armlet With Canada on it That I Wear on my Right Arm" Remarked the General

Everyone has heard of the splendid conduct of the Canadians during the strenuous days in Flanders from the 22nd April to the 4th of May, and especially of the great fight on April 24th at Ypres, when according to official report their "gallantry and determination undoubtedly saved the situation." The commander of the 1st Canadian Division throughout this desperate fighting was Lieutenant-General E. A. H. Alderson, C.B., an old Ipswich School boy, son of the late Col. Alderson, of Ipswich, and one of the most distinguished soldiers East Anglins has produced. Prior to the present war, General Alderson served in the first Boer war (1881), Wolseley's Egyptian campaign of 1882, including the battles of Kassassin and Tel-el-Kebir, in Mashonaland in 1896, and in the second Boer War in 1900-1901. The Canadians are, therefore, fortunate in having such an experienced soldier as their chief during their campaign against the Germans. Deeds of daring often unrecorded die, and we are gratified in being ab'e to place before our readers General Alderson's address to the Canadian soldiers, after twelve strenuous days of fighting in the face of heavy fire, desperate enemy methods and superior numbers. The General's speech to the division before going into action has been publishd, but not the far more interesting address when they came out of action, and which was made to the division, brigade by brigade, to engineers and artillery, after the long and arduous fight. The General said:

"All units and all ranks of the 1st Canadian Division, I tell you truly that my heart is so full I hardly know how to speak to you. It is full of two feelings, the first being sorrow for the loss of those comrades of ours who have gone, and the second, pride in what the 1st Canadian Division has done. As regards our comrades who have lost their lives—and we will speak of them with our caps off (here the General took off his cap, and the whole division uncovered)—my faith in the Almighty is such that I am perfectly sure that when men die, as they have died, doing their duty, and fighting for their country, for the Empire, and to save the situation for others; in fact to die for their friends—no matter what their past lives may have been, no matter what they have done that they ought not to have done, as all of us do—I repeat, I am perfectly sure the Almighty takes them at once. Lads, we cannot leave them better than like that. (The speaker then resumed his cap, and all did the same.) Now, I feel that we may, without any false pride, think a little of what the division has done during the past few days. I would first of all tell you that I have never been so proud of anything in my life as I am of this armlet with 'Canada' on it that I wear on my right arm. I thank you and congratulate you from the bottom of my heart for the part each one of you has taken in giving me this feeling of pride. I think it is possible that you do not, all of you, quite realise if we had retired on the evening of the 22nd April—when our allies fell back before the gas, and left our flank quite open—the whole of the 27th and the 28th divisions would probably have been cut off: certainly they would not have got away a gun or a vehicle of any sort, and probably not more than half the infantry.

SAVED SITUATION

"This is what our Commander in chief meant when he telegraphed, as he did, that 'the Canadians saved the situation.' My lads, if ever men had a right to be proud in this world, you have. I know my military history pretty well, and I cannot think of an instance, especially when the cleverness and determination of the enemy is taken into account, in which troops were placed in such a difficult position, nor can I think of an instance in which so much depended on the standing fast of one division. You will remember the last time I spoke to you, just before you went into the trenches at Sailly, now over two months ago, I told you about my old regiment—the R. W. Kents—having gained a reputation for not budging from their trenches, no matter how they were attacked. I said then that I was quite sure that in a short time the army out here would be saying the same of you. I little thought—we none of us thought—how soon these words would come true. But now to-day, not only the army out here, but all Canada, all England, and all the Empire, are saying that of you. The share each unit has taken in earning this reputation is no small one. I have three pages of congratulatory telegrams from His Majesty the King downwards, which I will read to you, with also a very nice letter from our army commander, Sir Horace Smith-Dorrien. Now, I doubt if any divisional commander, or any division, ever had so many congratulatory telegrams and messages as these, and remember, they are not merely polite and sentimental ones, they express just what the senders really feel. There is one more word I would say to you before I stop. You have made a reputation second to none gained in the war, but remember, no man can live on his reputation, he must keep on adding to it. That you will do so, I feel just as sure as I did two months ago, when I told you that I knew you would make a reputation when the time came. I am going to shake hands with your officers, and as I am doing so I want you to feel that I am shaking hands with each one of you, as I would actually do if time permitted. No, we will not have any cheering now—we will keep that till you have added to your reputation, as I know you will."

That is a fine, soldierly, manly and brotherly address, which honours the man who made it, as well as those who listened to it. It is really a remarkable speech, graphic and most telling in effectiveness, expressing just what ought to have been said, and which no one could have said better. We commend those words to the men of East Anglina, whether in the ranks or ont of them, and we feel quite sure that all East Anglinas, after reading that speech, will feel even more proud than they were of the 1st Canadian Division, and prouder of their distinguished commander.

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU

That if there are three houses to rent in this town, anyone of which would suit you, at least two of them will be advertised in these columns.

That YOUR NEXT POSITION may be advertised to-day.

That the next furnished room you'll live in is probably advertised in another column.

That if there's nothing a Want Ad. can help you to accomplish—you're leading too quiet a life!

That if you have need of a worker, you have need of a Want Ad.

That a Store should be advertised as REGULARLY as it is opened for business. A merchant who would'nt close up for a while now and then 'to save running expenses' should'nt stop advertising now and then "to save expense."

That sometimes a LITTLE more advertising will mean a GREAT DEAL more business for a store.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

Anneke Van Winkle's Wit

A Story of an Old Dutch Town.

By F. A. MITCHEL

The city of Schenectady, N. Y., until the latter part of the nineteenth century was a sleepy Dutch village.

In the early days, when the Indians used to come into Schenectady to dispose of their pelts in exchange for various articles, the principal of which was firewater, there lived in the town a young man named Hieleger Van Tromp. He was in love with Anneke Van Winkle, a fine specimen of a Dutch girl, who, when wearing all the petticoats she possessed, looked very much like a humming top.

Some twenty miles from Schenectady the remains of a historical mansion that was occupied by Sir William Johnson, prominent in colonial times, still stand. A fur trader named Martin Smith lived in that region and made frequent trips to Schenectady in the way of business. On one of his trips he caught sight of Anneke Van Winkle and fell violently in love with her. A neighbor of Hieleger's told him that he had better look out for his sweetheart, for the Englishman was then at her house begging her to go back with him to the Long house, as the residence of Sir William Johnson was called.

This is the only recorded case of Hieleger showing any animation. He got up from his chair, dropping his pipe, which was shattered, and triangulated to Anneke's house. Smith saw him coming, his eyes afire, and with discretion withdrew. Hieleger chased him out of the town, and when the former returned his shirt was bloody.

It was supposed that the Dutchman had given the Englishman nothing more than a good trouncing until a man came in from Johnson's to learn what had become of Smith, for he had come to Schenectady for a day only, and though a week had passed he had not returned. The fact that when Hieleger had come back from chasing his would be rival blood was on his clothing was proof to the Dutchmen that he had killed Smith. A search was made for the body, but it was not found. But this had little weight, for it was supposed that the murderer had buried it.

Hieleger was tried and convicted. The fact that Smith had disappeared after having been chased, that blood was on the shirt of the man who had chased him, was quite enough for those who tried Van Tromp without wasting words over any possible explanation. The Dutchman of that period was not imaginative or ingenious. What was before his eyes he saw; of what might be behind his back he took no note. That Hieleger had killed the man who sought to take his sweetheart from him they did not doubt. Some were inclined to leniency on account of the provocation, but these were overruled by the wise heads who declared that murder was murder and that was all there was about it. So Hieleger was condemned to be hanged one month from the day on which he was convicted.

Anneke received the verdict stolidly. At least she appeared to do so, though her face was so fat that it is not probable any change of expression could appear in her lineaments. Nevertheless she loved Hieleger, and her love for him had been much enhanced on seeing him chase away the man who had thrust his attention upon her. She went to her home, sat down in the living room and, taking up her knitting, began to think, for Anneke could never think unless her fingers were working the needles.

It would be a mistake to suppose that because Anneke's face was as round as an apple and her little eyes were set above a pair of exuberant cheeks she had no power of thought. She had a considerable thinking apparatus—that is, for those times in the stupid Dutch town in which she lived. And she was not so slow in her thoughts as one would suppose. While she was knitting a pair of stockings she thought out a plan by which she might possibly save her lover from the gallows. It was not a plan that would work in any other age or among any other people, but for them it was admirably adapted, for the Schenectady burgher was a man accustomed to moving in a single plane. Out of that plane he at once became befogged and could not move at all.

There was in those days one church in which all the people of Schenectady worshiped. In its steeple was a clock that furnished them the time. The sun might rise and set irregularly, but the clock went right on just the same. Indeed, it would have been treason to doubt its accuracy, for it was the only calendar in the town. By the hour it marked all things were decided. If a man promised to pay a sum of money in thirty days the expiration of the period was not marked by the fact that the sun had risen and set thirty times, but that the hour hand of the clock had noted the passage of thirty days.

The people in Schenectady were used in those days to getting up at 6 in the morning. One morning a large number of persons awaking at their usual time were surprised that they remained awake an hour before the clock struck 6. But they were slow in comparing notes, and even if they had done so they would not have suspected that there was anything wrong with the clock. They would have attributed the fact that so many of them had lain awake an hour in the morning to coincidence.

The next morning when the people awoke they discovered that the clock instead of registering 6 or 5, as it had done the morning before, registered 4. This circumstance created a greater disturbance in the village than anything that had ever occurred there since the great Indian massacre. It was evident that the clock had lost considerable time, for two days before the sun had risen at 6, and now when the clock struck that hour the sun was high in the heavens.

Had the clock been a few minutes too slow or too fast, even had the burghers known it, they would not have wondered. As it was they did not know what to make of it. So great was their faith in their timepiece that instead of thinking it wrong they laid the blame on the sun, though many of them preferred to believe that the devil had got into the belfry and had interfered with the mechanism. A committee of three was appointed to sit up and watch the hands to see when the change took place. The dial was lighted by a full moon, and they could see it distinctly. By 10 o'clock they had drunk so much schnapps that they saw a marvelous sight. The hands spun round like the spokes of a rapidly revolving wagon wheel, first forward and then backward, stopping at 9. This settled the matter. The devil was at work in the belfry.

When twelve days had passed the burghers began to notice that each morning the clock was getting nearer their rising hour, though now it seemed to be gaining instead of losing, and before four weeks had passed it had come right again. Then they concluded that the devil had tired of fooling with it and had let it alone, for it went on steadily for twenty-four days after it had commenced its antics.

Meanwhile the date of Hieleger Van Tromp's execution approached. The morning of the execution Anneke Van Winkle went to the judge of the court and said:

"Your worship, I have a confession to make."

"What is it, Anneke?" asked the judge.

"It is in connection with the hanging of Hieleger Van Tromp. What day was he sentenced to be hanged?"

"Friday; that is today."

"What is the matter with you, Anneke? Has the loss of your lover made you mad?"

"No, your worship. I say it is Saturday, because we have lost a day. Every night for twenty-four days I have climbed to the belfry of the church and turned the hands of the clock back an hour."

"Did you do that, Anneke?"

"Yes."

The judge began to puzzle his brain over the question as to whether a day had been lost or not by the setting back of the clock. But, not reaching any conclusion, he sent word to the sheriff not to execute the prisoner until further orders. Then he called in the most prominent citizens and stated the case to them, asking their opinion whether, Anneke having set back the hands of the clock twenty-four hours, the day on which Hieleger Van Tromp was to be executed had passed.

The question struck those to whom it was propounded as the most difficult they had ever been called upon to solve. After an hour's babel, during which some maintained one side and some another and frequent shifting from one side to the other, it was decided that the matter was too important to be decided in a hurry, and they all adjourned to a place where they could procure schnapps and tobacco.

When the hour of noon came—the time the hanging had been ordered—the debate was still going on and had extended to every person in the village. Never had there been such excitement in the sleepy old town since the day of the great Indian fight in 1690. A man would be of one opinion, while his wife took the opposite view. They quarreled. Fathers and sons, mothers and daughters contended, and before nightfall all the lovers in town were estranged.

The next morning, there being doubt whether the day was Saturday or Sunday, the trouble broke out afresh. Some called on the domine to hold service; others declared that the church should not be opened. This caused a riot at the door of the sanctuary, those trying to get in being attacked by those trying to keep the church shut.

During the afternoon a man was seen crossing the Mohawk river in a boat. It was agreed that this person, who doubtless came from the Long house, be asked whether the day was Saturday or Sunday. When he came near enough for the people to distinguish his features he was seen to be Martin Smith, the "murdered" man.

Every man and woman and child, being more interested in the date than the legal aspects involved in Smith's return, met him with the question, "What day is this?" He was so startled that he could not tell them till he had examined memoranda he had in his pocket; then he declared that it was Saturday.

The question of the hanging was settled not only by the return of the supposed victim, but from the fact that the day set for the execution had passed. The people were beside themselves with joy that they had not hung Hieleger and took Anneke, whose wit had saved him, on their shoulders and carried her to the jail, where her lover was set free, and they insisted that a wedding service be performed immediately.

So the domine was called, and the pair were married.

For a Young Girl's Room.

A square handkerchief box made of chintz-covered cardboard may be made to serve a double purpose by padding the top before covering it, so that the lid may be used as a pincushion. The lid and bottom of a box of this sort should extend a half-inch beyond the sides. The edges may be covered with fancy upholstery braid or a bit of gimp. Chintz having a small bird pattern, would be extremely pretty for a box of this kind.

To make, cover one-half of the base by folding the material over the sides and holding it in place by long stitches taken from side to side. Cut and cover the sides, overhand together, then overhand the four corners, and tack to the base with stitches taken underneath. Then sew the other half of the bottom in place. Make the lid, padding one side quite high and finishing the edge with braid. Fasten the lid in place and the box is ready for the dressing table.

Between the ages of 6 and 12

Here is advice for parents

"IT is between the ages of 6 and 12 that the jaws as a rule fail to develop to their normal size," writes H. P. Pickerill, M. D., a world-quoted authority.

"During this period, therefore, the need for generous mastication (chewing) is imperative," the eminent Doctor continues. For new and larger teeth are coming. The jawbone must grow normally to accommodate them.

Otherwise "crowding" of teeth is very apt to follow—and "crowded" teeth invite lodgment of food particles between them. The food particles make the acid which hastens decay.

At this period of the child's life chewing of Sterling Gum gives the jaw much needed exercise—promoting full growth and full room for the important second set of teeth.

This may sound interesting enough to you to be the 7th Sterling point. But it is not.

Wife Tortured By Rival's Love Notes, She Says

NEW YORK, July 20. — A complaint charging "refined cruelty," in that her husband tortured her by reading the love letters of other women to her, was filed recently in the Supreme Court by Mrs. Christine Rolt-Wheeler against the Rev. Francis Rolt-Wheeler, Ph.D., Episcopal rector, lecturer and author of a series of boy's books.

The case came before Justice Philbin on a question of the service of papers in Mrs. Rolt-Wheeler's separation action, and the Court decided the minister's positive assertion that he was not home at the time the process server says he handed him the papers at No. 589 Lexington avenue.

This is Dr. Rolt-Wheeler's second experience with court proceedings. Last April his wife summoned him before the Domestic Relations Court and the Magistrate ordered him to pay her and his two children $7 a week. At that time he said his wife had implored him to get a divorce and had threatened to commit suicide.

Urged Her To Suicide.

In June, 1914, just before they parted, she says he handed her $20 and said: "That's the last you'll ever get from me. Go to Seagate, hire a boat and drown yourself." When he returned home after a long absence and found her still there, the wife says, he twitted her about her cowardice.

Through her counsel, A. J. Westermayer, Mrs. Rolt-Wheelch charges that her husband aggravated her nervous condition just before the birth of their younger daughter, Mona, by telling her she was a burden to him. She says he showed great affection for one Eunice Tietgen and frequently read to her love letters from this woman "which he received at regular intervals."

She asserts that he preached "free love," saying: "A man does not love children because they are his, but rather that they are the children of the woman he loves."

Predicted Her Insanity.

While she was ill, she charges, he also read her poems from other women. She alleges he told her she was "doomed to madness anyway, and that he could not afford to care for an insane wife."

She charges he is living at the home of Mrs. Natalie Sonnichson, "a literary co-worker," and paying $24 a week. He told her, she avers, that two women, one named Eunice and another Natalie, were anxious to keep house for him.

"I should have known I was a genius to have gone with her" (meaning Eunice), she quotes him as having said.

She says she once went to a park contemplating taking his advice about suicide. She wrote him a note telling of her purpose and asking him if he still desired her death. She says she got no reply. Then her love for her children led her to reject suicide.

Rolt-Wheeler denies her charges.

THE PATRIOT

Birmingham Observer.

Sir Thomas Lipton said at a provisioners' banquet in London:

"All the blame for high prices is put on us dealers. You'd think, the way some people talk, that we dealers were as false in our patriotism as the chap who was sanding his sugar the other day with his errand boy's help.

"The errand boy lifting a scoopful of sand, asked:

"'The usual proportion, sir?'

"'No, Joseph, of course not,' the boss replied sternly. 'The usual proportion in days like these? Joseph, where is your patriotism?'

"Then he sighed and added:

"'Only half the usual proportion of sand, Joseph—only half the usual proportions as long as our gallant troops at the front have such need of sand bags.'"

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

REMINGTON ARMS PLANT IS NOT UP FOR SALE

Mr. Samuel F. Pryor, Vice-President, Says No Amount of Money Which Anybody Might Offer Would Induce the Owners to Dispose of the Plants and Thus Prevent the Performance of Existing Contracts

During the last few days there have been very persistent rumours to the effect that Germany was seeking to purchase American ammunition making plants, not so much on account of shortage of ammunition for its own armies as with a view to putting an end to the tremendous shipments which hare going forward to the Allies. Remington Arm-Union Metallic Cartridge Company, was seen to-day in rehem Steel Company have both been specifically named as objective points of the German efforts.

But it appears that there is not the slightest chance of Germany securing a dollar's worth of interest in either of these two great concerns.

Mr. Samuel F. Pryor, Vice-President and General Manager of the Remington Arms-Union Metalli Ccartridge Company, was seen to-ay in regard to the persistent rumours that have lately been in circulation, to the effect that offers made by a foreign government for the purchase of the properties of that Company were under consideration, and that the additions to the Ilion and Bridgeport plants, which are under construction are intended to be merely temporary and made only for the performance of special contracts entered into and are not intended for the permanent uses of the Company.

Mr. Pryor was very emphatic in asserting that there was not the slightest foundation for these rumours; and he pointed out that one story necessarily destroyed the other, because if a sale of the plants and properties was made, the additions would not be required for the purpose of enabling the company to perform its contracts for the supply of arms and ammunition.

Mr. Pryor stated that no sum which might be offered for the properties would afford the slightest temptation to the owner to dispose of them and thus prevent the performance of existing contracts. Mr. Pryor was equally emphatic in asserting that the additions to the plants did not constitute a mere temporary expedient, but were largely made in accordance with the general policy of expansion adopted by Company before the outbreak of the European war, and that this policy would not be interfered with even if the war were to come to an end to-morrow. The additions to the plants, now under construction, are of the most modern type and of the most substantial, durable and permanent character.

The visiting gentlemen graduated the same year as Dr. Sutton.

The Norwood Methodist Sabbath Schol had a very delightful trip to Belvidere, Stoney Lake, via Peterborough and the Lift Lock, last Friday. A large number from the village and surrounding country took advantage of it, and thoroughly enjoyed themselves. After all expenses were paid the Sunday School realized about fifty dollars.

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Thompson have gone to Stoney Lake to spend a week with Mr. and Mrs. Adam Patterson.

Council Meeting.

The July meeting of the Norwood Village Council was held on Wednesday evening, July 7th.

Those present were Reeve Squire, and Councillors Morrison and Pakenham. The minutes of the last council meeting and of the Court of Revision were read and adopted.

The following accounts were read:

F. Raddon, snow ploughing, etc., in February	$6 00
I. Puffer, salary and work	21 25
J. L. Squires, fees Division Court	10 00

Moved by Coun. Morrison, seconded by Coun. Pakenham, that the accounts be paid, excepting Mr. Raddon's to be referred to the Commissioner.

General rate	$807 02
House of Refuge	195 40
Provincial War Tax	236 76
War Relief	199 40
	$1398 58

Moved by Coun. Morrison, seconded by Coun. Pakenham that outsiders be charged $6 license fee for running booths or amusement stands in the corporation on July 12.—Carried.

PARALYZED LIMBS.

Today [illegible] digestive trouble and irritability. Everything you know [illegible] has developed. Mr. Alex. Hoosberger, 24 Moore Street, St. Catharines, Ont., writes "Nervous trouble developed into paralysis of the limbs so that I became helpless. Doctors failed me, but after using six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I resumed my years."

Dances at South Beach Are Being Largely Attended

The Thursday evening dances at South Beach, Clear Lake, are proving very popular, not only to people at this and other nearby resorts, but to a large number of city people who motor out for the occasion. Mr. Asa Huycke's orchestra supplies the music, and this alone is sufficient guarantee that a pleasant evening is in store for all who attend. The orchestra is playing new music, that is a delight not only to those who enjoy dancing, but to those who derive pleasure from hearing it, either from the verandahs or from canoes on the water.

Voice of The People

Sir,—While endorsing much of what appears in to-night's "Voice of the People," re the band concerts in the parks, yet your correspondent, R. MacDonald makes some grievous blunders when he states that the S. A. band had lost some of their best musicians, and had to resort to playing marches, chiefly.

Now, sir, I find on enquiry, that the S. A. band has only lost two men within the last six months, and I also find that the S.A. band has gained by the inclusion of three ex-members of the 57th band, and also by men from cities as widely apart as Calgary and Oshawa, and to say that the S. A. band was reduced to the extent of being able to play only march music, is to say the least malicious.

I attended their last concert in Victoria Park and heard them play selections in a most creditable manner and the crowd showed their appreciation in no uncertain sound. They certainly had no such thrilling trombone solo as your correspondent draws such a brilliant word picture of. It must have been a dandy. I fancy I see the poor trombone artist struggling with his slide in that awful heat.

There is one man in the 57th combination who Peterborough feels proud of. I lift my hat to him—that is the snare drummer who so ably assisted the S.A. band at the recent military funeral. But, where, tell me where the men of the 57th? Surely it is a sad state of affairs when the S. A. band has to be called on to fill the gap. Yet we are told that the 57th have added to their numbers and are in good form. Let us have British fair play; honour to whom honour is due.

Part of Mr. Burnham's Representative Record

Dear Sir,—I notice that a correspondent inquires through your paper what Mr. Burnham, M.P., has done for West Peterborough in the four years he has represented, or not represented it.

One head may not be expected to carry all the knowledge asked for; but I can supply a few items, and others may be able to fill up the list.

He has made a few appointments anyway, and I am not considering whether they were good or otherwise. He first appointed Mr. Harry Phelan Collector of Inland Revenue. He may have done this as a salve for his conscience and as some compensation for "jockeying" Mr. Phelan out of the nomination, when he had promised him his support.

He appointed Mr. John Corkery Deputy Postmaster, an appointment that could only have been improved on in one day—appointing him Postmaster, considering the length and good quality of his services.

He appointed Mr. Killaly Superintendent of the Trent Canal. Mr. Killaly is all right as far as I know, but he has one disqualification—he is a rank outsider. A member should lose a leg before he insults his constituents by the practical assumption that there is not one man among the thousands of his constituents who can fill such a position, and when he turns down good Conservatives, who have done good faithful service to the party and appoints an outsider, who as good as he may be, has no moral right to the position.

He has made other appointments which I can't recall—I will leave that to the next man.

Mr. Burnham has done other things of great benefit to West Peterborough. He has "fired" "Daddy" Taylor and Johnny Cronin.

Yours truly,
CONSERVATIVE.

P.S.—I am not a disgruntled office seeker. I haven't asked Mr. Burnham for an office. I don't want an office, and if I did I would not run the risk of asking and being insulted with the advice or its equivalent to get a job on the outfall sewer, or open a peanut stall.—C.

When You Wash Your Hair Don't Use Soap

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich lather, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust dirt and dandruff.

ADVERTISE IN THE EXAMINER

Wheat Harvest Has Commenced

Cutting is Under Way in Peterboro County—Conditions in the West.

Farmers in the southern section of Peterborough County have commenced to harvest the wheat crop. By the end of the week, cutting will be general. The wheat is in splendid shape and so far is free from rust. It is standing up well and presents a good length of straw. Barley is another crop that is nearing the harvesting stage. Like the wheat, it is of good quality and should produce a high average yield.

IN THE WEST.

"The crop prospects at the present moment in the three prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta are the best ever considered in the history of the west," said Sir Donald Mann of the Canadian Northern, on his return to Toronto.

"It is still a little early to predict what the condition of the crops will be by harvest time, but just at the present moment there is the brightest prospect for a bumper crop."

Before the warm spell set in the growth of the wheat seemed to be having a setback and few grainmen thought it possible that within two weeks the wheat would be fully out in head. The necessary warm weather was ushered in at the right moment, however, and now 75 per cent. of the wheat crop in Manitoba and Saskatchewan is fully headed out.

FRENCH POUR OUT THEIR SAVINGS FOR THE WAR

PARIS, July 21.—Reports from all parts of France indicate that there has been a general and enthusiastic response to the request of Minister of Finance Ribet for deposits of gold to add to the country's reserve. The municipal government of Paris deposited to-day $160,000.

Up to July 17 the Havre branch of the Bank of France had received $277,710 from 2,329 depositors, Marseilles reports $462,000; Nancy more than $500,000.

The pupils of one class in a Paris public school collected $558 from their relatives and friends which three schoolboys proudly delivered to the Bank of France.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie Cleaned Up Cheese Board This Morning

Used Nearest Bidder's Last Offer By Extending it to Whole Board and Got 2404 Cheese—Price Was Down To-day.

Last cheese board price—15 3-16c.
To-day's sale price—13 3-8c.
Cheese boarded two weeks ago — 2516.
Cheese boarded to-day—2404.

Mr. G. A. Gillespie bought up the entire offering at this morning's Cheese Board, and by a bidding coup that is not often used for a first call. There were 2404 cheese chalked up and sold at 13 3-8 cents. Mr. Cook, by way of a plaisanterie opened at 10 cents. Mr. Gillespie raised to 12. Messrs. Thompson, Cook and Morton helped boost the price by easy stages, but only Gillespie and Morton stayed in for the final bids. Mr. Morton had apparently reached the market price when he offered 13 3-8c for selections, but Mr. Gillespie offered the same price for the entire board, and all the cheese were his.

The factories boarded as follows:

Fair Money.

Mr. Gillespie asked the members what they intended to do in regard to their proposed donation of $15 for a cheese prize at the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition.

Mr. Ed. Hawthorne, of the East Peterborough Agricultural Society said their directors expected a prize. Moved by Mr. Hawthorne, seconded by Mr. Anderson, that each of these Fairs be given $10.00. Carried.

Presentation of Gold Watch

Took Place at Bailieboro Last Evening.

A large crowd attended the meeting that was held in the schoolhouse, Bailieboro, last evening, in connection with the presentation of a gold watch to Harry Porter, who received the highest number of marks at the recent school examinations. He received a total of 496 marks. The teacher was Mr. J. Dainard.

Mr. Deyell occupied the chair. Short speeches were made by Mr. Porter, Mr. Barnard and Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P. The latter, who presented the watch, spoke chiefly on the advantages of education and expressed pleasure that the institution of prizes had such a good effect, as was stated by the school inspector. Last year Mr. Burnham's prize went to Lakeview school, South Monaghan.

Supper was served by the ladies.

that his death came as somewhat of a surprise to me, for the night we left ——? near Ypres, he was standing beside a fence and called out, "Hello there, Ross." We were marching away then but did not know where to. Also when I came out of the hospital and was at the base, I saw him the day he arrived in France.

The Big Shells Seem to Pick Their Victims.

Seems funny when you hear these big shells coming with their different toned whine, they seem to stop and pick their victims, as much as to say, well I take this one or this one They seemed to take a dip, although large as they are, you can't see them owing to the terrific speed at which they are travelling. It's when these sort of dips occur that the suspense is the greatest and hardest on the nerves. You see unless one is actually here and see the force of an explosion one can form no opinion of just what one large shell is like.

For instance, a 42 centimetre shell is five feet seven inches in height, (standing on end) and this has been shot a distance of twenty-four miles. When this hits the ground the explosion makes a hole in which a team of horses can easily stand up-right. One hole up at Ypres was measured and found to be forty feet across at the top. (Some hole, I say), of course these holes are a god send to us in case of being wounded, for if one can crawl at all they are the best thing to make for as the snipers can't take a pot-shot at you if you are below the level of the ground.

Now, mother dear, I think I'll have to stop for this time as I want this to go on the next mail. In my last two letters I asked you about sending some McDonald chewing tobacco and hope you received the letters all O.K.

Of course there are lots of things of which I could tell you that would be interesting too, but will have to leave it until I see you. Tell father I received his letter O.K. and am going to write him in a day or two. Give my best love to all at home, as if named, and a large portion to yourself. I remain as ever, your loving son.

Pte. D. Reecee R. Kendry.

EVANGELIST SHARPE SPOKE TO ANOTHER LARGE CROWD

Hunter Street Tabernacle is Too Small to Accommodate the Ever Increasing Crowds—Last Night's Subject.

The address of Evangelist Sharpe to the audience in the big Hunter street Tabernacle last night was probably one of the most unique sermons ever listened to by the crowd which flocked to hear the big, wide awake evangelist.

His remarks were largely directed to the Christian people of Peterborough and constituted a burning appeal to arouse themselves to the great business of winning souls to Jesus Christ. His subject was chosen from the story in the Gospel of Mark, the second chapter, concerning the man whom Jesus healed of the palsy. He said he wanted to draw largely upon his imagination and if possible make the Bible story real.

He said he would choose for the carriers of the bed upon which lay the palsied man—a preacher, a S. S. teacher, an ordinary church member and the father of the man who was healed. "Get a combination of men like that interested in the salvation of your boy," said the Evangelist, "and they will soon bring him to Jesus."

Some of the "hot shot" from Evangelist Sharpe's "Gospel gun" would make interesting reading. Here are a few: "Many think a preacher is a something fallen down from heaven with a broken wing, but he is only a man." "The best way to lick the devil is to hit him with a cradle not a crutch." "The time to save the boys and girls is while they are still trampling on fathers' and mothers' toes and not to wait till they are trampling upon their hearts." "If you've got a fellow that's carrying an old greasy deck of cards around in his pocket who is a real soul winner I want to meet him. I want his picture. If you've got a girl who is a real soul winner who runs to the dance I want to meet her, I want her picture. No such person ever lived,' cried the Evangelist.

The preacher told of a village that had piped water from a small lake on a neighbouring mountain. One day the flow ceased. A little lad came whistling down the street and telling those he met if they would go up to the lake and remove the plug out of the intake pipe the water would flow. At first they laughed at him, but after two or three days they came to believe the boy and removed the plug when the water flowed freely "There was a time in your life when you were flowing freely for God, but there is something wrong. Your life is plugged up with a lot of old novels, etc., etc. Pull out the plug and let God's power come down.

Judging from the attendance at the first three services of the big campaign the canvass Tabernacle will be very much too small to accommodate the crowds who will want to get seats.

Mr. Sharpe and his band of workers held a short service at noon hour at the De Laval factory yesterday. They had arranged to go to Matthews-Blackwell to-day. Services will be held in the tent each night this week, except Saturday, at eight o'clock.

(Sgd.) J. A. AYLMER, for the Trustees

Present Outlook.

Mr. Aylmer further stated that there remained to be collected from private subscribers, about $4,600, all of which he believed would be received in a short time. Of this sum $1,650 represented amounts of $100.00 and over, and the remainder was for promised contributions of sums less than $100.00.

Payments to soldiers' wives up to the present has totalled $20,511.44, which was drawn from Peterborough's credit with the Canadian Patriotic Fund. The balance of $11,139.00 would be sufficient to cover the next three months. The city is now paying approximately $3,000.00 a month from the Patriotic Fund. Two months more would be provided for by the city's balance of the $10,000.00 contribution, making a total of five months. There was sufficient Patriotic Fund in sight to cover disbursements until December. It was not likely, Mr. Aylmer remarked, that Peterborough would allow the people of other municipalities to pay our share of the indebtedness occasioned by the safeguarding of the families of our volunteers. It would therefore be necessary to make another canvass about December for next winter's demands.

Payments Prompt.

It was remarked that a remnant of $4,600 to be collected was most creditable to those who had contributed toward the Patriotic Fund. Ald. Dobbin said that after the taxes had been paid in this balance would likely be promptly paid to the fund.

Both of the reports presented were adopted.

Why Not Have Curly, Wavy Hair?

While abroad last year, a matron much envied for her youthful looks, generously confided to me several little beauty secrets which I prize highly. One of the best of these is that straight hair can be made wavy and curly over night by merely applying a little liquid silmerine. Some peculiar attribute of this harmless fluid causes the hair to dry in the most exquisite curls and waves, having all the appearance of true naturalness.

My friends who have tried this are simply delighted. I find that pure liquid silmerine can be procured from any druggist here, and a few ounces will keep the hair in curl for several weeks. There's nothing gummy, greasy or messy about it; on the contrary, it is quite pleasant to use. I'm sure if you will try this to-night—apply with a clean tooth brush—a look into your mirror to-morrow morning will give you a most agreeable surprise —Anita Amber's "Beauty Talks."

THE MASONIC GRAND LODGE IS IN SESSION

Special to The Examiner:

HAMILTON, July 21—The Masonic Grand Lodge opened its annual session here to-day with a large representation of delegates from all parts of the province present.

The present struggle going on in Europe held a conspicuous place in the opening ceremonies, and in the address of Mr. W. D. McPherson, M.P.P., the Grand Master, lengthy reference was made to the developments leading up to the declaration of war and the part the British Empire has played since the declaration was made. Emphasis was laid upon the work of the Masonic Order in lending aid to the Mother Country in this great conflict through the enlistment of 10,000 of its members and the contribution of large sums of money to assist the distressed Belgians, who had been forced out of their native land by the German hordes.

The financial condition of the Order was never in a healthier condition, and the membership during the past year has increased by over 2,000.

Love of Business Life Stronger Than Household Duties

CHICAGO, July 20.—Frances Winthrop Taylor, formerly secretary of Franklin MacVeagh, Secretary of the Treasury, and one of Chicago's women aldermen, was granted a divorce last week upon the ground of incompatibility alone.

Mr. Taylor is a successful business man, and his wife a successful business woman. Each had interest apart from the other. They simply grew apart. There were no charges made by either against the other.

When Mr. Taylor was asked if he had failed to support his wife, he answered in court that he had three times with a year sent cheques to her, one being for $1,000, but that she had returned all of them, saying she did not need them.

He asked her to return to the connubial household. She replied in a letter:

"Dear Francis — I am sorry, but your proposition is utterly impossible. Dead things cannot be revived and grow again. I return your $1,000, which I do not need."

Later Mrs. Taylor went to New York on business. Mr. Taylor happened to be there, too. He telephoned to the Waldorf-Astoria to ask her to dine with him and talk things over. She replied she was very busy and that it would be quite useless to waste time talking.

Mrs. Taylor said in court her husband was a gentleman and she had no complaint to make against his character. She had simply outgrown him. Mr. Taylor is thirty-six and she is thirty-four.

GARIBALDIANS TAKE OATH TO DEFEAT AUSTRIANS OR TO DIE IN THE ATTEMPT

UDINE, Italy, July 20.—Col. Peppino Garibaldi, his four brothers and a number of other officers who served with him in the regiment of Italian volunteers which fought with the French army on the Argonne early in the war, have reached the Italian front in the Cadore region. They have been attached to the Alpine brigade formed by the grandfatehr of the Garibaldi brothers, the famous Italian patriot, in the war against Austria in 1866.

MAGAZINES ARE NEEDED

Troops at Front Would Appreciate Reading Matter Writes Y.M.C.A. Captain.

Mr. George A. Carson, physical director of the local Y.M.C.A., has received the following letter from Capt. Will W. Lee, one of the Y.M.C.A. representatives at the front. Citizens who desire to help may leave magazines at the Y.M.C.A.

London Office,
8, Westminster Palace Hotel,
London, S.W., Eng.
July 1, 1915.

Dear George,—A service which the Association men on the firing line have been able to render and one which has been greatly appreciated by the troops, has been the distribution to them of reading material of various kinds, both while they were in the trenches, and also when back in rest billets.

I may mention incidentally that under both of these circumstances the men have a certain amount of spare time which is difficult to occupy. It is almost unnecessary to say that English reading matter is very difficult to obtain at the front.

Through the generosity of the Canadian War Contingent Association, who are co-operating with us in this matter, we have been able to send out about 8,000 weekly periodicals and light magazines each week to our men for this purpose but still the cry is for more.

I feel sure that there are many people in your district who are magazine readers who would be only too pleased to send their used magazines for this purpose, and if you would only make an appeal of some kind to this end I can assure you that it will be greatly appreciated by the men at the front.

They should be sent to me at the above address where they will be at once divided and sent to the firing line for distribution. Practically any kind of magazine or periodical containing light reading matter is acceptable, and we could also use to good advantage a certain number of bound books for use in the Canadian hospitals in France.

Daily papers and ladies' magazines are not at all suitable, unless it be the Ladies' Home Journal, which often contains some good short stories and articles.

If preferable I will acknowledge these direct to the donors if their address is enclosed, or will acknowledge them through you, just which ever you prefer. No doubt you receive copies of the Active Service Bulletin issued by the National Council, so I need not comment upon our work with the troops.

Trusting that you are well, and with kindest regards,

Yours cordially,
WILL W. LEE,
Captain.

finally brought back the remnant, was killed as he climbed back over our own trench.

Where Human Courage Availed Not.

The assault was along the front of three divisions, but everywhere the result was the same, except that on our front the regiment that led the assault hung on like bulldogs and were practically wiped out. Human courage is of no avail against swarms of machine guns, an infinite supply of hand bombs and high explosive shells of a power never before experienced in warfare. For instance, the specially-made tool armour put on my forward guns resisted rifle bullets fired at point-blank range as if they were peas, but the smallest fragments of the German high explosive shell went through them as if they were tissue paper.

Need to Save "Old Jake."

We could not extricate our two guns that night because of the slut and dead and wounded in the front trenches. At dawn I went forward to see what could be done. It was foggy. One gun was smashed beyond repair, but the other, "Old Jake," as the gunners affectionately call it, was standing up in full view of the Germans as the mist began to lift. If left there it was certain to be smashed to pieces as soon as the enemy's artillery could see it. I had to call on the infantry for a working party to drag it under cover of the parapet.

A Heroic Effort.

The poor fellows had been there all night without sleep amid the litter of dead and wounded, but they pulled themselves together and came out of the trench stiff and sore and heavy-eyed with strain and sleeplessness, but neither cowed nor disheartened. I explained what was to be done and how to take hold, because an infantryman regards a gun as if it was some strange wild animal. "It won't go off?" queried a sergeant anxiously. Assured on this point they rushed into the open and closed on the gun. Immediately the Germans who had evidently been watching the gun from the opposite trench, now in full view, opened a blast of rifle fire.

Task Seemingly Hopeless.

We got the gun on the move down the slope, when somebody let go the tail, which lifted up into the air, allowing the muzzle to dig into the ground, and there it stuck. Still they tugged at it with the hastily-aimed rifle fire fairly sizzling around them. One poor lad was struck down with a thud like an axe striking a block of beef, and it looked as if the whole bunch would be wiped out. Seeing it was no use, as the muzzle was digging in like a plough, I ordered them back under cover. They came away reluctantly.

A Sympathetic Offer.

After I had sized up what was wrong, I had not the heart to ask them to go to it again. There stood my poor old gun, the muzzle dug into the ground and its tail in the air, a cockshot for the enemy's gunners; and I resigned myself to see it smashed to pieces as soon as the mist would lift sufficiently to allow the German batteries to sight it. I thanked the infantry squad,, and was moving off through the trench, when a sergeant came after me (I suppose I was looking a bit cut up) and said quite sympathetically, "Say, hold on, we'll get it out for you. Just tell us what to do."

Final Rush Succeeds.

If they had been my own men I would not have hesitated, but it seemed hard to expose these willing worn, and gallant fellows on a job that was not exactly theirs. However, they were quite persistent, and I did want the gun out. So I explained what had to be done, and at once there was another rush; one husky chap jumped into the air and caught the tail, the others manned the wheels and brought the gun up under cover of the parapet, where it remained [illegible] ing the gunners have or can steal.

To prevent flies entering a house when a screen door is opened an Iowa woman has patented a fan unfolded by the door to blow them away.

PRIVATE CHAS. POWELL

His parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Powell, Boundary Road, have received word that he has returned to the firing line and not to Shorncliffe, after his recent discharge from a London hospital.

GAVE LIFE FOR CHILD

Mrs. Hedley, Sister of Mr. A. W. McKenzie, Receives Fatal Injuries

PORT ARTHUR, Ont., July 20. — Mrs. Hedley, wife of Rev. Canon Hedley, rector of St. John's Church, was struck by a train and fatally injured this afternoon on the C.P.R. bridge at Current River Park, in trying to rescue her eldest child, Helen, who was on the track. Mrs. Hedley lived only a few minutes. The daughter, aged eleven, had her foot crushed and will lose two or three toes. Mrs. Hedley was a daughter of Archdeacon McKenzie of Brantford. She leaves five children.

HARVESTING IN SMITH TOWNSHIP

W. J. Stillman of Smith Township is among the first of a number of farmers who have commenced to harvest the fall wheat crop. Mr. Stillman took the initial step yesterday in a field of wheat that promises to be well above the average.

THE PUBLIC IS INVITED

Meeting To-night in Regard to Civic Holiday Celebration.

The public is reminded of the meeting to-night in the Council Chamber for organizing a committee to go into the matter of a celebration here on Civic Holiday.

If sufficient interest is shown, and it is taken hold of properly, the matter of how to spend the public holiday in this city will be easily solved.

59 MUNITION SHIPS SUNK IN BLACK SEA

LONDON, July 21.—A fleet of 59 Turkish sailing vessels, laden with war materials for the Turkish army of the Caucasus, has been destroyed by Russian torpedo boat destroyers, according to a Reuter despatch from Sebastopol.

The sailing vessels were on a voyage to Trebisond, a seaport of Asiatic Turkey on the Black sea. The crews of the Turkish ships were made prisoners by the destroyers.

Sir Robt. Borden On Visit to France

LONDON, July 21.—Sir Robert Borden, R. B. Bennett, M.P., and Sir Max Aitken, accompanied by a staff officer of the War Office and a naval attache, left this morning for France and were met at Boulogne by Field Marshal Sir John French.

Before leaving London Sir Robert conferred with Sir Edward Grey regarding Hon. Dr. Beland, M.P., ex-Postmaster-Geneneral of Canada, who is held a prisoner of war in Germany, he having been in Belgium when the war started. The utmost efforts will be made to secure his release.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles--Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

Repairs are being made to Brock street leading up to the courthouse. The weeds on the roadside are being cut and the stones removed.

The corporation sidewalk gang has just completed a long stretch of new sidewalk on the south side of Smith street, east of Park street. The men are now at work on the north end of Downie street.

BUILDING PERMIT.

A building permit has been issued to P. Crough in respect to repairs which he proposes to make to a house at 500 Sherbrooke street. The cost is estimated at $40.

BOARD OF WORKS.

The Board of Works Committee of the city council will meet this evening at eight o'clock. As this is the first meeting since Chairman Alderman Green's return from the west, a busy session is in prospect.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

Everything is in readiness for the formal opening to-morrow of the London and Port Stanley railway, the first Hydro-radial line in the province.

WIRES MUST COME DOWN

The Chatham Public Utilities Commission has served formal notice on the Chatham Gas Company to remove its wires from poles owned by the city. The time limit has been set at two months and something over 45 poles are affected.

USE ANOTHER ROUTE

The Berlin city council received a letter from President Martin N. Todd of the Galt, Preston and Hespeler Railway Company, to the effect that if Berlin asked an excessive price from his company for a street franchise it would use another route.

NEW STRATFORD ALDERMAN

William Nichol, clothing manufacturer was appointed alderman by the Stratford city council to fill the seat vacant through the resignation several weeks ago of Ald. John Keyes.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES

The Orillia council has appointed a committee to secure temporary quarters as municipal offices and will proceed at once with the rebuilding of a City Hall in place of the one that was burned on Saturday.

SOUTHAMPTON WANTS POLICEWOMAN.

The chief of police of Southampton, England, is advertising for policewomen, at a salary of from $7 to $9 a week.

HYDRO RADIAL WANTED.

Interest in the proposed radial railway which is being promoted by the Hydro Electric Association for the Cobourg district, is very keen in that locality. Brighton township will ask for estimates on a line from a point on the proposed Campbellford line to Brighton. The Hydro-Electric Commission will be asked to send engineers to survey and report on the various lines proposed.

FIELD DAY FOR THE CATHOLIC LEAGUE PLAYOFF

At a meeting of the members of the executive of the Inter-Catholic Baseball League, held in the T.A.S. Rooms last night, it was decided to hold a Field Day in connection with playing off the tie for the championship of the League.

St. Peter's and Sacred Heart teams have each won five games and lost one, while the other two have each won one game and lost five.

The representatives present last evening were:

St. Peter's—Houlihan and Maher.

Sacred Heart—McGrath and Gorham.

Church of the Immaculate Conception—Sam. Clancy.

The Field Day will not be held until there is an off day in the City League, or after it has finished. The date so far has been left open.

Those selected as a committee to look after arrangements for the Field Day were: G. Maher, secretary; Geo A'Hearn, L. Lehar, Fred McGrath Pat. Gorham, "Duke" Neary, S Clancey, J. Dillon, and Jerry Coughlin.

GOOD GAMES IN THE TENNIS ASSOCIATION

Last night's play in the opening round for the Kerr Cup produced some very high class teams, with results as follows:

Kerr and Hamilton (Golf Club) defeated A.Cranfield and Maybee (South End), 6-4, 6-1.

Jackson and Bowness (South End) defeated Cottrell and Jipson (Golf Club,) 6-3, 6-4.

Harris and Hamilton (St. Andrew's) tied Hardill and Smythe (Y.M.C.A.) 5-7, 6-3.

Heslip and Darling (Y.M.C.A.)defeated Kerr and Walton (St. Andrew's) 6-2, 8-6.

Sutton and Weller (All Saints') defeated Payne and Griffin (St. Paul's) 6-4, 6-3.

H. Cranfield and Sisson(All Saint's) tied Turner and Moore (St. Paul's) 6-4, 7-9.

To-night's game — Knox and St. James, vs. Sacred Heart.

SATURDAY'S GAMES IN THE CITY BALL LEAGUE

A great deal depends on the City League games on Saturday. The East City team is stocked against their old jinx team, the Classics. There are three games yet to be played, and East City must win two of them to nail the championship. They figure that if they can put the Classics away on Saturday the rest is clear sailing. It will be a battle royal as the Classics have twice beaten the East Citys, and on the other occasion the two teams met were only beaten by one run. The Thistles and Empires meet in the first game. The Empire's have been giving every team an argument, and the Thistles will have to be on the job every minute Saturday.

LAWN BOWLING

The sport-providers of the Lawn Bowling Club have a new wrinkle that will compel every bowler to acquire an accurate eye and good judgment, viz., the watch fob games.

The team that hold the watch fobs are challenged to play by each of the other teams in turn until defeated, when the emblematic jewellery finds a new owner.

A very interesting game was played last evening, Mr. Dayman and his rink for the fobs. Final score 12—5 for Mr. Elliot. Teams were:

W. Dayman, skip	R. Elliot, skip
J. Pritchard	W. Elliot
L. Bowes	R. Henry
Mr. Spriggs	V. Elliot

W. Dayman ..... 012000000011— 5

Is Seeking An Injunction

An Action of More Than Ordinary Interest Has Been Instituted by John Drain of This City.

Action has been brought by John Drain of this city against the Grand Council of the Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Canada for the purpose of securing a ninjunction to restrain the defendant association

(a) From increasing the assessment rates in the manner proposed by the said defendant association;

(b) From enforcing and putting in operation the said proposed rates and certain options also proposed by defendant association;

(c) From misapplying and misappropriating or otherwise disposing of the benefit, reserve and other funds of the defendant association contrary to the constitution and laws of the same, and contrary to law;

(d)) For an accounting of the benefit and reserve and other funds of the association.

Mr. D. O'Connell is acting for Drain. No reply has been entered by the defendant association, as action to date is confined to the issuance of a writ embodying the above.

LACROSSE

There will be a practice of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club at Central Park this evening, when the line-up for the game with Millbrook on Thursday will be selected. With the probable suspension of the Campbellford club the Petes still have a chance for the district, and every player should be out at to-night's practice.

BASEBALL

The East City Baseball Team will practice to-night at Riverside Park at 6.15.

WAR SPECTACLE AT EXHIBITION

The mammoth war spectacle, "The March of the Allies" and the "Review of the Fleet," will be the big scenic production in front of the Grand Stand at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, and will be one of the most elaborate ever staged and a fitting climax to each day's entertainment in this "Patriotic Year."

The background is the ancient city of Calais, saved by the Canadians when they so gallantly stopped the German drive at St. Julien at such enormous cost. Its picturesque chateaus and historic environment adapt themselves admirably to reproduction. On either side beneath frowning cliffs are seen military camps with the soldiers of the allied armies in all the hustle, bustle and action of war time. The brilliant uniforms of the Field Marshals, Generals, etc., add splendour to an impressive scene.

Suddenly the fleet appears over the horizon under full steam with the Queen Bess leading the first battle line and the Lion in advance of the others. The Iron Duke majestically appears with Admiral Jellicoe aboard, and, as she passes between the watch dogs of the Empire lined up in battle array, the Admiral is greeted with salvoes of broadsides.

It will be a faithful portrayal of the scene just before war was declared last summer when the fleet had been mobilized on the orders of Churchill off the British coast.

The cannonading continues as the officers go ashore to review the troops, which swing past the Grand Stand in the final wonderful tableau. It will be a panorama of Empire greatness, a picture of such striking reality as to evoke a veritable hysteria of patriotic fervour among the thousands who will nightly crowd the Grand Stand.

MILITARY CAMP AT THE EXHIBITION

Every branch of war activity to be vividly portrayed at Toronto Fair

Every branch of war activity to be seen in Europe to-day will be vividly portrayed at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto. Aeroplanes will land at the Military Camp after taking observations in mid-air; miniature battleships will be blown up in the lake; there will be bridge and sheltered trench building, armoured cars, hospital autos, field ambulances with stretcher bearer sections, field dressing stations, field bakeries and cookeries ammunition columns, bomb throwers, signal corps, observation masts, etc. The Camp will be occupied by several hundred officers and men now training for overseas service at Niagara and other camps for the infantry, cavalry and artillery units.

THE MIDWAY AT TORONTO

There will be no freaks on the Midway at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, but the carnival world has been scoured for attractions and "The Pike" should be livelier than even. A Wld West Show and a water circus including log rolling, diving Venusesfi, trick canoeing, etc., Streets of Cairo, the Garden of Allah, the Giggler, the Hippodrome and a dozen other thrillers are among the features.

STONEY LAKE BREEZES

"Dashing in big drops on the window pane,
And making merry music for the mind,
While plays his interlude the wizard wind,

—W. H. Burleigh.

Burleigh is right; the rains have been frequent. It rains a little every night to keep in practice, and then some more in the daytime. Last Friday one would think that the windows of heaven had been opened. From four to six it dropped in sheets. There was many a wet hide on Stoney Lake that night. Mr. John Hunter, with two ladies in a skiff, was just emerging from Gilchrist Bay when the downpour started. With never a let-up he plowed through it all. It takes more than a heavy mist to stop Mr. Hunter.

Which reminds me of Mr.Sam Hunter, the cartoonist of the Toronto World, who in his annual fish story for 1915 throws in a nice little bouquet for Mr. D. A. D. Pickens, the genial proprietor of the Victoria House,McCracken's Landing, in which he pictures him as wearing that ever-present broad smile and the once-in-a-while red vest. Sam says that every day at McCracken's is red-vest day just now. Why?

There must be a reason. Consulting the guests one finds it summed up in "good service and lots to eat." Everyone of them speaks in the highest terms of the close attention to their comfort given by Miss Morgan.

The following are a few of the registrations: Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Ringel, Cleveland, O.. Mr. J. M. Wilson, Rochester; Misses Beatrice Evans and Marian Horsell, and Mr. A. L. Evans, Cleveland, O.; Miss Lila J. Foster, Dorchester, Mass.; Mr. G. R. Holt, Peterborough; Mr. E. N. Baer, Newcastle, Pa.; Mr. and Mrs. John H. Mortimer, Cleveland, O.; Messrs. M. Turner and T. Enemy Has Railway Lying Between Radom and Ivangorod

VIENNA (via London), July 21.—Radom, capital of the province of Radom, which lies 57 miles south of Warsaw and 30 miles south-east of Ivangorod, was captured yesterday by the Teutonic allies, according to an official communication issued here this evening.

The acute peril to Warsaw is accentuated by the Russian official communication, which says that German columns are within artillery range of the fortress of Novo Georgievsk, the key to the capital from the north-west, and only twenty miles from it.

LONDON, July 21. — From the shores of the Gulf of Riga in the north to that part of southern Poland back into which they drove the Russians from Galicia, the Austro-German armies are still surging forward, and if Warsaw can be denied them; it will be almost a miracle.

This seems to be the consensus of opinion, even among those in Britain who heretofore have been hopeful that the Russians would turn and deliver a counter blow, and news of the evacuation of the Polish capital, followed by the triumphant entry of the Germans amid such scenes as were enacted at Przemysl and Lemberg, would come as no surprise.

The German official statement, beginning at the northern tip of the eastern battle line, records the progress of the German troops to within about fifty miles of Riga; then, following the great battle arc southward, chronicles further successes in the sector north-east of Warsaw, culminating in the capture of Ostrolenka, one of the fortresses designed to shield the capital.

Immediately south-west of the city, and less than twenty miles from it, Blonie has fallen, and farther south Grojec, while German cavalry are astride the important railway from Radom to Ivangorod.

The Lublin-Cholm railway is still in the hands of the Russians, so far as is known, but the town of Lublin has either been captured or is in danger of falling into the enemy's hands.

Austrian Official Report.

VIENNA (via London), July 21.—The following official statement was issued to-night:

Between the Vistula and Bug Rivers yesterday the allied army, pursuing the retiring enemy, crossed the recent battlefield and increased its number of prisoners to 50 officers and 3,500 men.

Near Sokal we took 3,000 prisoners.

Westward of the Vistula the allies broke the Russians' resistance. On the Ilzanka River, southward and westward of Radom, the Austrians resisted violent fighting. The Transylvanian infantry stormed the village of Kostrzyn.

Our troops occupied Radom to-day.

On the frontier between Bukowina and Bessarabia, a Russian brigade was overtaken and dispersed.

A neutral military attache, from Berlin, states: "Germany promulgated the recent reports of a great westward movement of forces to deceive the allies. The herculean efforts that are being made on the 1,000-mile eastern front by Hindenburg are expected to prove a deciding factor of the war."

United States Let Them In

Examiner Special.

LONDON, July 21.—The United States Government has issued rules practically permitting merchant ships, carrying gun astern purely for defensive purposes, to enter American ports, Lord Robert Cecil, Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs, declared in the Commons this afternoon, in response to a query. This action was taken, he said, after the United States Government had been approached on the subject. Financial Secretary for the Admiralty, MacNamara, said that the Germans have destroyed 95 neutral ships since the beginning of the war. Sir Charles Henry urged that the Government take measures to insure [illegible] American enclosed [illegible] war. Chancellor of the Exchequer McKenna replied that he was carefully watching exchange rates, but could not make a public statement.

French Airmen Make 3 Raids on Enemy's Positions

PARIS, July 21.— French aviators have made three conspicuous raids during the last 24 hours, all of them meeting with considerable success.

The first was at Colmar, in Alsace, where the railway station was the objective. Six aeroplanes participated in the raid and dropped in all 91 shells, doing damage both to the main station and the freight station. All of the machines returned safely.

The second raid was of interest, especially because it was made by a dirigible, a type of aircraft but little used by the French. The airship flew over Vigneulles and the Hutton Chapel, in the St. Mihiel salient, and dropped 23 bombs on the station and ammunition depot. The extent of the damage done is not known, but the dirigible returned safely.

The third raid was participated in by four aviators against Challerange to the southward of Vouziers. These aviators dropped 49 bombs on the junction station, but the extent of the damage done is unknown.

KING AND QUEEN VISIT CLIVEDEN HOSPITAL

LONDON, July 21. —Their Majesties the King and Queen honured the Duchess of Connaught Hospital at Cliveden by visiting it yesterday. The Royal visitors arrived at 3 o'clock and spent two hours going over the fine riverside estate of Waldorf Astor, on whih several additional wings have been built to increase the accommodation of the original hospital. In a quiet way the King and Queen moved from ward to ward, speaking to the patients, some of whom were lying on beds in the open air, and others in chairs on the lawn. Col. Hodgetts commissioner for the Canadian Red Cross, and Col. Gerall, O.C., conducted their Majesties over the institution. The King and Queen expressed their warm admiration for the arrangements made, remarking the high standard of the Canadian Red Cross methods. They also congratualted the wounded men on their bravery and on the heroic deeds of the Canadian troops.

Quite by chance the King and Queen saw the hospital under strenuous conditions. Until today there were comparatively few patients, but just two hours before their Majesties arrived 200 new patients fresh from the front were received, bringing the total number of inmates up to 600. Major-General Hughes also arrived at noon.

"Altogether is was a record day," commented one of the staff officers, "but the high eulogies uttered amply repaid the claims made upon the energies of the staff."

Hounds Lead Party to Boy's Body in Lake

WILLSBORO, N.Y., July 21—After a three day search with bloodhounds the body of John M. Hood, 3d, eight years old, and the son of Mr. and Mrs. John M. Hood, of Baltimore, was found in a lake near here in the Adirondack Mountains, not far from a camp where he and other wealthy boys have been passing the summer in charge of a Princeton professor.

The boy was missed from the camp on Thursday, and his father, who is the president of the Crown Cork and Seal Company of Baltimore, was notified. Mr. Hood arrived there the following day. The lake in which the body was found was dragged unsuccessfully on Friday, and then it was thought that the boy was kidnapped.

County officers with bloodhounds took up the search. After the body was found with the aid of the dogs it was assumed that the boy accidentally fell into the lake while wandering about in the dark looking for the camp. The boy was the grandson of General John M. Hood, prominent in Maryland transit companies. Mr. and Mrs. Hood left here for Baltimore today and should arrive there with the body to-morrow.

The marked decrease in the damage by lightning in European cities in the last few years is attributed to the presence of electric wires, which divert the bolts.

With the idea that much soap is wasted by allowing it to lie in water a Texan has invented a brush to hold a cake in its bristles until the water drains from it.

For extinguishing fires in cable boxes, where water might increase the danger of short circuiting, there has been invented a device for injecting flame smothering gases.

Germans Meeting With Strong Resistance Near Warsaw

SEVERAL STRONG TURKISH ATTACKS HAVE BEEN REPULSED

GERMANS ARE MEETING WITH STRONG RESISTANCE OUTSIDE OF WARSAW

French Have Launched a New Offensive in Alsace and Have Occupied Munster Heights---Three Balkan Nations to Meet in Conference To-day.

Special Morning Cable:

PARIS, July 22.—The French have launched a new offensive in Alsace and have occupied Muenster Heights.

NEW YORK, July 22.—Canada has borrowed fifty millions in the United States through the Morgan firm, the government has announced.

STOCKHOLM, July 2.—Private advices indicate that German unrest grows, and the peace party is growing.

EDMONTON, July 22. — The Province of Alberta carried prohibition by a majority of about fifteen thousand.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—Secretary Lansing this afternoon admitted that the United States ports were open to ships of any belligerent nation armed simply for defensive purposes.

PETROGRAD, July 22.— The Germans have brought up their heavy siege guns to batter down the forts around Warsaw. The Russians are holding strong to-day.

LONDON, July 22.— No submarining of British ships has been reported for four days. It is thought the Admiralty now has control of the situation.

LONDON, July 22.—It is expected the miners will ratify their leaders' settlement to-morrow and all return to work. They have been given substantial increases.

PARIS, July 22.—The British made attacks on the German lines near Ypres to-day and gained several yards of trenches.

BERLIN, July 22.—An official statement last night admits the French have penetrated and occupy German positions in the Vosges. On the Russian front the Germans continue to press hard. On the Narew River two thousand Russian prisoners were taken.

MOSCOW, July 22.—That the Germans used shells with cast iron tips filled with Prussic acid is contained in the report presented to Grand Duke Nicholas here to-day.

ATHENS, July 22.—Constantinople was warned by the Greek government to-day that relations would be severed with Turkey unless the Turks stopped persecuting the Greeks.

Vladivostok Slaves Are to Provision Russia

VLADIVOSTOCK, July 22.—Twenty thousand American freight cars and four hundred American locomotives are due here from the United States within the next two months to relieve the congestion of supplies destined for the Russian armies at the front. The army corps on the German-Austrian battle line need guns, rifles and ammunition; Vladivostock will supply them. They need armoured automobiles, many hundreds of them, and Vladivostock will give them these. They need dynamite; they need pig lead and pig copper; they need cotton to make into clothing; they need food—and Vladivostock hopes to see to it that they get it all.

The guns and rifles and ammunition are arriving from Japan and the United States by the steamship load. The armoured motor cars are coming by the hundreds from the United States. They are being made at Detroit and Cleveland and other points and they are coming here mostly by way of Seattle, on board vessels which come direct to Vladivostock. So also is the lead, copper and dynamite. As for the cotton—it is coming out from New York via Panama in such vast quantities that more than anything else it has caused this terrific congestion of supplies which has forced Russia to place hurry orders for locomotives and cars to get them off to the front. It is piled high on the hills back of the city waiting for its turn to be forwarded to Moscow and other cities to be manufactured into blankets and uniforms for the soldiers.

Vienna Savings Bank Deposits Are Increasing

"Reports from Vienna say that savings bank deposits in the first half of 1915 increased 139,000,000 crowns ($34,750,000), or eight per cent. This increase, applied to the whole of Austria, means a gain in savings deposits of 1,600,000,000 crowns ($400,000,000). This gain has been made notwithstanding the great success of two war loans, and is a splendid illustration of Austrian economic conditions.

"The speech of the Swedish Premier, Dr. Hammarskjold, indicating that under certain conditions Sweden might go to war, is regarded in Berlin political circles as a warning to Russia and Britain.

"German field hospitals service men, exchanged for French prisoners of war, complain of the treatment they received in the prisoners camp in Corsica. They assert the food was bad and that they were compelled to perform heavy labour and were insulted by the people."

GREECE LIKELY TO JOIN THE ALLIES, AND BULGARIA ALSO LIKELY TO GET IN

Significance of Asquith's Statement in Regard to Advances of Countries Who Are Soon to Join in the Struggle on the Side of Britain.

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, July 22.—There was one very significant phrase, says the Daily News, in Premier Asquith's speech in the House of Commons Tuesday on the subject of the vote of credit. Referring to the fact that the country's war expenditure was about $15,000,000 a day, he said, it was possible that this amount would increase, and then he added that "advances to our allies might also grow as adhesions to our cause of those States which did not take part in the war in the early stages come forward."

The Prime Minister's careful use of words suggests a confidence as to the developments of the future which cannot be mistaken.

"It would not be wise," says the Daily News to "inquire too closely as to the nature of these developments, but certain facts are before us which seem to have a collective bearing on the future course of events.

BALKANS WITH THE ALLIES.

"The return of ex-Premier Venizelos to Greece, though it has not yet become effective in a Parliamentary sense, has changed the direction of the wind in the Balkans, and the strong action of Rumania in stopping the flow of ammunition from Germany to Turkey, is the most decisive evidence there has yet been of a movement of opinions.

"Not less important is the frank declaration by M. Remeslavoff, the Bulgarian Prime Minister, of the terms on which his country is prepared to throw in its lot with the allies.

TO BRING BULGARIA IN.

"The disaffection of Bulgaria has throughout been the weak link in the Balkan chain. M. Venizelos, with that large grasp of the problems of statesmanship which he possesses, has been prepared to make large sacrifices to accomplish great ends, and we may rest assured that his influence will be at work to build up the breach in the Balkans which has been so fatal to the interests of all the States and so advantageous to the enemy. The cession of Macedonia, which Bulgaria demands, is a large draft to make on Serbia, but Serbia would have abundant recompense in the reunion of the Serbian race which the ultimate absorption of Bosnia and Dalmatia would involve."

GERMANS GETTING SUPPLIES.

The question whether, despite the blockade, cotton and foodstuffs are still reaching Germany is seriously exercising the British press. The Times returns to the subject this morning, regretting that Premier Asquith was unable to hold out greater hopes of effectually dealing with the cotton difficulties.

The Daily Chronicle editorially points to the enormous increase in the exports of raw cotton and foodstuffs, linseed oil and similar articles to Holland and Scandinavia, as disclosed by the Board of Trade returns and says:

'The question frankly arises whether, without knowing it, we are feeding the enemy. In the case of linseed oil the question is doubly important because, in addition to being a constituent of cattle feed, it is also raw material for the production of high explosives in which glycerine is used. It is therefore in the same category as raw cotton, and the question of its export deserves the earnest attention of the Board of Trade."

The Morning Post complains of the unsatisfactory Ministerial statements concerning cotton and declares that the only effectual measure is to make cotton absolute contraband. The Post says: "Every pound of cotton imported into Germany means death to British soldiers. Therefore it must be stopped. If when the next crop is ready for sale the Government desires to continue its former policy the country will not allow it to continue its former policy."

The Post urges that America is equally interested with Europe in preventing German victory and advocates the Government purchasing all American cotton, which would otherwise go to Germany.

GERMAN CONFIDENCE.

According to the Times the tone of the German press is one of extreme confidence. Saturday's newspapers the Times asserts, were full of enthusiastic articles about the eastern campaign, and a reckoning up in favourable terms of the results of the first year of war.

The Cologne Gazette, in a long semi-official article, according to the Times, calls the attention of the neutral countries to the unconquerable power in Europe of the central powers and Turkey, and advises them that Germany's great industrial and trading progress will be resumed after the war precisely at the point it was interrupted, and that Germany's ability to deliver goods and Germany's buying power will recover more rapidly than in the case of her enemies. Consequently it is asserted that Germany and Austria will be able not only to throw strongest military friendship into the scales, but after the war will have most valuable economic friendships at their disposal.

Of the 101,000 primary schools in the Russian Empire nearly 60,000 are under the direct control of the central government and more than 34,000 are church institutions.

Too Nervous To Drive a Car?

That's too bad, old man, but you know nervousness is largely due to wrong habits of eating and drinking. If you would quit tea and coffee and use Postum your nerves would steady up.

Postum has a delicious, snappy flavour and there's no drug in it—that's where it's got tea and coffee beat a mile.

Sound advice.

More and more, people are waking up to the harmful effects of caffeine—the drug in tea and coffee—a frequent cause of nervousness, heart flutter, dizziness, headache, and other ailments.

Instant Postum

is the soluble form of the original Postum Cereal. A level teaspoonful of the crystaline powder in a cup of hot water makes a delicious food-drink instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The convenience of Instant Postum is seen at a glance, but some prefer the original Postum Cereal which must be thoroughly boiled—15c and 25c packages. Grocers sell both kinds and the cost per cup is about the same.

A change from tea or coffee to Postum has been a good thing for thousands.

NO MEAT TUESDAYS AND FRIDAYS IN VIENNA

BUDAPEST, Juy 15.—A letter from a lady in the Pesti Naplo gives some idea of how the people fare in Austria Hungary.

"I am glad," she writes, "you are beginning to use the whip against the authorities for allowing the people to starve in this country. In the provinces we are in the same plight. In my own town —Veszprem — beef with bones costs $1.30 a kilogramme (2 1-4 pounds) and for lard we pay $1.25 and are informed at the same time that it will still further rise in price. Vegetables, eggs and chickens cannot be had at any price. We went in a deputation the other day to the Governor of the country to ask him to do something. We took a piece of the maize bread with us, and asked him to taste it, but he refused. We told him that our children are starving and we cannot get even vegetables or bread. For bread is absolutely uneatable, and if we do eat it we are sure to be ill."

The conditions in Vienna are not any better. Mr. Sandor Nadas, the editor of Pesui Futar, writing about a brief trip he made to Vienna, says:

"Friday night I went to Hartman's restaurant for supper. The waiter declared that it was a 'meatless day today' and he could only give me eggs or fish. Twice a week they have meatless days in Vienna and no meat can be had at the restaurants. Not in the Sacher, nor at Meissl's, oNt Chadsu, at Hartmann's—nowhere. Not even in the Bristol. I ordered some fish, but he soon returned, saying that no more fish was left, but would I take some crayfish? Well, this is not so very horrible, but all I know about it is that one cannot begin and end a meal on crayfish.

"Bread was not to be seen anywhere. The loud and unpleasant Vienna waiter asked for my bread ticket. I gave it to him and he brought it wrapped in paper, like the way they serve chocolate bon-bons, for it was black at chocolate and about the size of a small bon-bon. All around counts, countesses, duchesses, with fine jewelry, were sitting, painted and powdered and prosperous, and not a piece of bread for them to swallow. You can beg the waiter, kneel down to him and offer him a double tip, you may even offer him a real English sovereign, for a piece of decent bread, and you can't get it. You can weep for hours, and he'll only give you that 'stuff' in exchange for your ticket, and no more."

CANADIAN GOT A GERMAN SPY

Led Him on in Conversation, Then Caused His Arrest In Bristol.

LONDON, July 22.—Thanks to the smartness of a Canadian soldier, a German spy has been discovered and sentenced by a British magistrate to six months' hard labour. Carl Amundus, a native of Hamburg, was charged with failing to register himself as an alien and with attempting to elicit information regarding movements of troopships. He left Hamburg last year and went to Boston. After some months he shipped as a trimmer on a steamer bound for Gothenburg. The vessel was stopped by a British cruiser as a carrier of contraband, and brought to Avonmouth.

Amundus obtained a military pass to Bristol docks made out in the name of Charles Stephens, and the prosecutor contended that he would be able to despatch by ships messages which would be free from censorship.

Lance Corporal B. Stanley, a Canadian, told the court that he met Amundus at Bristol and after some conversation Amundus said: "I am sorry to see you in that uniform. The Germans are sure to win in the end." Stanley encouraged him to talk, and Amundus said that he was born in Hamburg, and that he was a German officer that he had sent two messages containing information to Germany by way of the United States and Norway, and that since his letter had gone six ships had been torpedoed. To lead him on, Stanley asked if there was anything he could do for Germany. In reply Amundus said that information as to the date on which troopships left would help, and the number of drafts going to the front from camp would also be useful. Stanley then communicated with the police and had him arrested.

or on the soles of the feet, can be cured by a few applications of Putnam's Corn Extractor, which acts painlessly, quickly and with certainty. The genuine "Putnam's" always cures. Try it.

On the basis that every grain of wheat will produce 50 of its kind, a German scientist has figured that the third year progeny of a single grain would give 300 men a meal.

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

By ROBERT ALEXARDER WASON

"They're goin' to settle this in their own way," sez I, as cold as the oldest judge in the world. "You all stood by and let that great brute kill a pore little terrier that would have made a fair macth for a prairie dog. I don't say your dog was to blame, but I do say he's got to take his own medicine."

Big Jeff had six or seven hundred dollars' worth of stock and he knew he had to play his cards careful; but the rest of his pack were beginnin' to growl, and now came a feller runnin' out from the store with a can of pepper in his hand. This was one of the bunch who had been up at Jeff's ranch the day Kate had landed, and I told him to stand where he was and to put his whole attention on to mindin' his own business.

The mastiff began to make a garglin' noise and Big Jeff's face changed again. "I can't stand this," sez he, lookin' up at me with a desprit pleadin' in his eyes. "I'm not drawin' on no human, understand; but, by blank, I'm goin' to fix that everlastin' dog."

He whipped out his gun the same time that I did, and he started to push it in towards Hellion, but looked up at me, while I took careful aim at his wrist. Just then came several loud knocks at the back of the store. I counted 'em mechanical and they numbered just the six of our crowd, so I knew one of his gang had been scoutin'.

He sprang to his fet and glared at me and his eyes weren't like a human's; they had all the hate and all the fear of a mountain lion's, and the hate and the fear fought for the mastery, the same as they do in the eyes of a cornered animal. I kept him covered, the mastiff's garglin' increased, and while we all waited for the feather-weight which would turn the thing one way or the other, I drew my other gun.

As I did this, the feller with the pepper-box shot at me, and I cut down on him, right then. The other three joined in, my crowd came out of the trees on a gallop, shootin' as they rode, and in the midst of it all, Big Jeff stooped down and pried Hellion's jaws loose with his club. The dogs rose to their feet and sprang for another clinch; but the mastiff couldn't finish his spring. He rolled over on his side and as he did so, Big Jeff began to back for his store, shootin' as he ran.

"Surround the place, but keep under cover," I called, for I knew they had rifles and shotguns inside, and then I took Hellion down and tied him to the buckboard. I stopped to examine the pup's wounds, and he sure had his share. The' was a place on his shoulder like what a mind would make after grabbin' at a roll of butter, and his head was horribly torn; but he was prouder than Satan and licked my hand in a mighty satisfied way. I was tryin' to figger out a way to get out of the scrap up yonder, but I couldn't see any. Dogs and fellers like Shorty enjoy the luxury of fightin' just as though the' wasn't any to-morrow, but I never could quite reach this.

While I was studyin' about things, a feller galloped by on the road in the direction of the store, and I piked out after him. It was tol'able fair dusk by now, but it was clear weather dusk and easy seen through. When I got close to the store, I made out a feller sittin' straight in his saddle up close to the door, and I paused to listen.

"I am James Jamison, of the Lion Head Ranch," said the man on hossback and you'd have thought it was the King of Chiny, he put on so much edge. "I wish to speak to Mr. Johnson."

Red was close to me and he whispered that Phil McLaughlin had posted Jim up on how things stood. Pretty soon the door opened a crack and Jim and Big Jeff had a confab. Jim said Jeff would have to leave the country, and Jeff said he intended to as soon as he had paid up his debts. He slammed the door and Jim rode back to us. "Come," sez he, "we might as well go, now."

We pointed out that the debt of Jeff was speakin' of weren't money debts, and that the thing for us to do was to fix Jeff's gang so it wouldn't be ashamed to go into bankruptcy as far as we were concerned; but Jim was strong for law at that time and he couldn't see it.

While we were debatin', shots rang out back of the store and we tore around and joined in. They had rushed across and into the feed shed, cockin' the d... after 'em. By the time we had found an ax they were mounted and were riding through a heavy agte at the far side of the corral, just as we came into the feed shed. By the time we had broke the lock on the gate they had so good a start on us that there was no use chasin' 'em in the dark and we came back to rummage through the store. Jim kicked on this, also, so we rode on back to the Lion Head.

Shorty had been grooved on the arm, and Missourie once on each leg, on the shoulder. He claimed that everybody on both sides had turned loose on him, but it only goes to show that bullets haven't any more prejudice than measles. Poor old Hellion had it the worst. His head was beginnin' to swell and we doped all the spots he couldn't reach with his tongue with axle grease, and then took him up to the bunk-shack to show to Isaac.

Isaac still sat in front of the fireplace with little Connie on his lap and an expression on his face that fair hurt ya. Red tried to cheer him up by tellin' about Old Nick's end, but Isaac stopped him. "It wasn't the dog's fault," sez he, "and mebbe it wasn't the man's. I didn't want you geance. What I want"—he stopped and looked down at little Connie, then shook his head and carried him out into the grove while we all sat lookin' at the floor.

"The's goin' to be hell to pay, yet, for this," growled Shorty. "You see if the' ain't."

CHAPTER THIRTY-FOUR.

Kate Gets News.

Genuwine sorrow is a sort of big medicine cloak which sets the party who is wearin' it apart from the rest and entitles him to a little something extra in the matter of treatment. Poor old Isaac couldn't seem to get hold of himself at all. He had gone off alone to bury Connie for fear one of the boys might joke him, though he needn't have feared this, and now he wafted around here and there and allus seemed to be lookin' for somethin' and listenin' for somethin'. O' course it was all foolishness to take on so about a small dog; but then it was all in the world that Isaac had. It's a good bet that in all of Isaac's queer, blunderin' life, no other critter had looked into his face with love and respect and downright admiration and so I didn't blame him a mite for givin' way to his loneliness, though I own it did get my nerves some.

By Tuesday night, I just couldn't stand it to see him sit with his eyes fast on the dull fireplace, for Phil McLaughlin wasn't there and none who was took the trouble to light a fire; so I asked Isaac as a favour to me if he wouldn't step down to the stable to have a look at Hellion, At first he shook his head, but after a bit he gave in, and as soon as he saw what a state the pup was in, he shed his smokin' jacket and started in to nurse him the same as if he was a grand duke, and I reckon not even a grand duke ever had a worse swelled head 'n what Hellion had.

Old Josiah used to claim that a sinkin' heart wasn't just the word-wrappin's of an idee; but that when a feller gave way to the glooms his muscles sagged and his heart did sink along with the rest of his works and it was this shuttin' off of the life-currents that made a lot o' folks so no account mournful.

He used to say if you could just get 'em to do something 'at would swell out their chests and pull their vitals up where they belong, it would comfort not only the mourner, but all them who had to live around close to him, and there's a world o' truth in this. Josiah used to say, though, that some folks were so shallow that they feared if they didn't garden their sorrow and sprinkle it purty frequent, it never would bloom at all and their neighbours wouldn't know they had any.

I reckon it was about on the Wednesday of that week that I threw a saddle on Clover-blossom and rode up Horse Crick way to have a talk with Bradin. He agreed to stick to the story about a gal and her father bein' visitors of his, in case any of the boys happened to sound him about it; and then I told him about the run-in we had had with Big Jeff's gang and that it was likely enough they'd spend a little time on the Wolf Crick ranch.

Brain told me his organization was purty complete, and that they had signals fixed to get the word around pronto, so that all they needed was a try-out to put the finishin' touches to 'em. Itold him if he ever stirred up a chance to make a big clean-up to let us know and we'd furnish what men we could spare, and he said he would.

And then he sprang a sure enough surprise on me, by askin' if I had straight across his upper lip, a young feller about twenty-five or thereabouts, five feet nine inches tall, and weighin' in the neighbourhood of one hundred and sixty pounds.

I shook my head, but a queer sinkin' had come to me. "Who is it," sez I.

A WONDER WORKER.

"It heals like magic," is a favourite expression where Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

A Suggestion.

Young Widow—After all, I cannot wholly grieve that my poor, dear old husband is gone.

Resourceful Friend—Then why not put on half mourning?—Baltimore American.

Good Reason Too.

Chollie—And you like a beard on a man's face?

Mollie—Yes, on some men.

"But it hides the face?"

"Yes, that's the reason I like a beard."—Yonkers Statesman.

Naturally.

"Why do you think so?"

"Aren't his plates sensitive?"—Baltimore American.

A Comparison.

"Why do you compare my marksmanship with lightning?" asked the recruit.

"Because," replied the instructor "it never hits twice in the same place."—Washington Star.

Plenty of Space.

Penman—What's your brother doing now?

Wright—Oh, he's a space writer.

"Space writer?"

"Yes, he's writing up astronomy."—Yonkers Statesman.

The Quick Witted Sharp.

Mrs. Sharp—So you told Mr. Jones you wished you was single once more, did you? Sharp (with quick wit)—Only that I might have the happiness of marrying you over again, darling.—Boston Transcript.

A Nuisance.

Father—What do you mean, my son, by saying that your teacher is a nuisance? Theobald—Well, that's what you call me when I ask questions, an' teacher does nothin' else.—New York Telegraph.

Get the Time.

A man was so crosseyed that he put his hand into another man's pocket and abstracted therefrom a watch. He wanted to learn the time. The judge told him it would be three years.—Exchange.

Self Possessed.

Mrs. Manykids—There is one thing about our girls—they are always self possessed. Papa Manykids (grimly)—Yes, they're too self possessed. I wish they'd get some one else to possess them.

More to the Purpose.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

BEAUTIFUL EYES

A Case of Mistaken Identity.

By C. S. THOMPSON

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

Young Van Norden looked up with boyish blue eyes, rather annoyed by the loud voice in the quiet of his private office. He was further struck by the man's ugliness—a florid cheek, with smallish, keen eyes and a square set jaw.

"I beg your pardon," said young Van Norden, pointing to a chair. "Your name?" he went on with emphasis.

"Me? Oh, it's all right, Mr. Van Norden," answered the caller, placing his derby hat on the floor. "I'm from the central office. Murdock's my name. This girl—she's been looking for you, as I get it. Missed you both days. So I take it she'll be on hand this afternoon."

"Well, what of it, Mr. Murdock?"

"If I ain't mistaken, Mr. Van Norden, she's coming for money. Just hear what she has to say. She'll tell a sob story if I have my guess. We'll be waiting outside, in case you happen to need us."

Mr. Van Norden let his caller out by way of the front office—a room with a blackboard on which a boy was chalking up some figures—and returned to his private office, where about an hour later he found himself staring down into a pair of beautiful dark eyes, very soft and feminine. Her cheeks were pale, but without powder. Her gown had simple yet pleasing lines, with a satisfying harmony of color, a shade of tan with trimmings of fine white lace.

"I beg your pardon," he said when the office boy had gone. "But I didn't get the name."

"Miss Summerton," she answered, holding aside a small hand bag.

"Miss Summerton," he went on when she had become seated. "The boy said you wished to see me on a personal matter, I believe."

"I'm coming on rather an odd mission," she began with a touch of color. "I want to interest you, Mr. Van Norden, in a case of charity."

"What is odd about it?"

"Well, nothing—that is, excepting the fact that he once traded with your firm."

"Who is the man?"

"His name is Wentworth—James Wentworth."

"Wentworth," he said, wheeling in his chair so that he faced the other way. "Yes, father once did business with a man named Wentworth—a James Wentworth. A tall, handsome man with black hair. A regular athlete, if I'm not mistaken. Always in the top of fashion."

"He isn't anything like that now," she answered slowly. "He's an old man with snow white hair, and altogether he's quite a pathetic figure."

He caught a tremulous note.

"Did Mr. Wentworth send you?" he asked.

He turned around not too suddenly, yet in time to see her withdrawing her handkerchief from her cheeks.

"No; he didn't send me," she answered, staring at him.

"Yet you come for him," he said almost harshly.

"Yes; I come to you. The truth is Mr. Wentworth is dying in poverty. He may live a week, maybe not that long. Three days ago he expressed a wish—a simple wish that he might see the green fields again. Mr. Van Norden, I didn't know but you might have the money. It would only be a loan."

"Will $100 be enough?" he asked.

"Yes, indeed," she quickly answered

"I'm glad to be able to do it for you, Miss Summerton," he said.

She seemed to be avoiding his gaze.

"Miss Summerton," he said, seeing the color in her cheeks, "not that it makes any difference, tell me how did you come to know of Mr. Wentworth and of his dealings with our firm?"

"I know his daughter very well," she answered, squarely facing him.

He took up the receiver.

"Miss Summerton," he said the next moment, putting down the telephone and getting up, "it seems that I have an urgent caller outside. Would you mind waiting—just a moment? There was something else I wished to say, just a word."

She followed him to an inner room, the door of which he opened for her.

Then he softly closed the door and, taking out a cigarette, struck a light

"Tired out men and run-down women certainly do "pick up" on by some seven years ago, this money was then put to his credit, and that amount, together with the interest at 6 per cent up to date, now makes in all, I believe, some $40,000."

"My father never spoke of this, Mr. Van Norden," she remarked, "you believe me, don't you, when I tell you I'm Mr. Wentworth's daughter?"

He found her eyes uplifting him again, and yet he purposely hid his feeling.

"I see—you still have your doubts," she said.

"There's only one thing I want to clear up," he answered uneasily. "Can't you wait—just a moment?"

He returned to the window, awaiting his man, and presently the office boy ushered him in without knocking.

"Beg your pardon, Mr. Van Norden," he began.

Young Van Norden turned to her.

"Miss Summerton," he said to her, "Mr. Murdock is from the detective bureau at police headquarters. He has a photograph—a rather good likeness—I want him to show you."

"Mr. Murdock," said young Van Norden, speaking to him, "I called you in because, it may be, you'll be running into her more or less from now on. Miss Summerton has an account with us."

Young Van Norden then turned to the girl, who had made her examination of the photograph.

"Miss Summerton," he said, "Mr. Murdock is detailed in Wall street to scare off any crooks who may show a desire to operate before what he calls the dead line."

Murdock took the picture from the girl, saying: "You look something like her, don't you think? But you ain't as tall, and, as your friend here was saying, Miss Summerton, there's real beauty in your eyes."

"A clear case of mistaken identity," said the detective in the front office.

Young Van Norden smiled to himself and immediately returned to the girl.

"Mr. Van Norden," she began, now almost at the point of tears, "you believe me now?"

"My dear little girl," he said, unable to control his feeling any longer, "yes, indeed, I believe you. But that isn't the point. Half an hour ago I gave you a check, which, I believe, you accepted. It's yours by right. Come, hadn't you better see what it says?"

She took out her check, unfolding it, and read, "Pay to the order of Mary Wentworth $40,000."

Animal Actors.

The impression is created by an occasional moving picture of wild animal life that the beasts, in order to force them into poses for the camera, are cruelly treated. Nothing, however, it is said, is further from the truth. Careful investigation has shown that force is seldom employed, and wherever it has been used the film resulting has been unsatisfactory. Mr. Ernest A. Dench, a London naturalist, who has made an extensive investigation of this phase of the movie industry, declares that the dumb actors are given every consideration. The thrills experienced by the spectators are the result, in a majority of instances, of the very innocent expedient of placing a piece of meat at a strategic point. The animal leaps for it, and the cinematograph records every motion of the leap. The spectator, of course, sees nothing of the meat and concludes that cruelty alone could produce the picture thrown on the screen. "The animals," he concludes, "really have a much easier time than those that appear in trick acts on the stage."—Detroit Free Press.

Answering His Prayer.

"Certainly," replied the callous citizen. "Here comes a policeman. If you don't get on your feet and move away from here I'll have you arrested."

Humiliating.

"She was at the rummage sale yesterday and became so interested she took off her new hat and laid it on the counter. By mistake one of the clerks picked it up and sold it for 35 cents, which was all he could get for it."—Exchange.

Rosewood.

Most people have the idea that rosewood takes its name from its color, but this is a mistake, for true rosewood is almost black of hue. Its name comes from the fact that when first cut it exhales a perfume similar to that of the rose, and, although the dried rosewood of commerce retains no traces of this early perfume, the name lingers as a relic of the early history of the wood.

VEALS—BANNAN.

A very quiet wedding took place in the Presbyterian church, Omemee, at eight o'clock on Tuesday, July 13th, when Miss Mary Victoria Bannan, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. Bannon, Omemee, was united in marriage to Mr. William Charles Veals of Omemee, by the Rev. J. P. MacInnes, B.A., of Hamilton, brother of the groom. Mrs. H. F. Veals played the wedding march. The bride, who was unattended, was gowned in white embroidered voile. She wore a bridal veil and orange blossoms, and carried a bouquet of roses and lily of the valley. The happy couple left on the morning train westward bound. The bride's going away dress was of old rose silk trimmed with cream lace, and hat to match. After a tour through Manitoba and Sasaktchewan, Mr. and Mrs. Veals will return to their home near Omemee.

WAS VERY BAD WITH IT.

Mrs. G. A. McKnight, Mulvihill, Man., writes: "I have used Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for nine years, and I would not be without it in the house. I was very bad with dysentery; a friend gave me a dose of 'Dr. Fowler's,' and told me to get a bottle right away, which I did, and it did me lots of good. My brother was bad too, and I told him to take it, and he was cured. I hope there are others who will get 'Dr. Fowler's' and keep it in the house, for it will surely save doctor's bills."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past 70 years, and has been used in thousands of Canadian homes during that time.

THE ARMY MEDICAL

It is interesting to recall to-day when Germany has her fangs in the side of civilization and is trying to get at its throat—with the downfall of the greatness of the British Empire as her objective—that in 1704 John Churchill, the first Duke of Marlborough, was created a German Prince in consideration of his valuable assistance to the Emperor, in having marched into Germany, recon quered for himself that territory between the Lech and the Rhine, and thus saved the Empire.

It was during this campaign that Sir John Pringle, Marlborough's distinguished medical officer, obtained official recognition of military surgeons. Hitherto the sick and wounded of all nations were le ftto their fate; it would have incommoded the armies and impeded the progress of war to have tended them. The general idea held in those days was that the winning of battles was the one and only theme that merited serious consideration.

Subsequent to Sir John Pringle's laudable efforts to improve matters—which undoubtedly effected great good during Marlborough's later campaigns—the care of the sick and the wounded was again neglected until Sir John McGregor, medical officer under Wellington, again brought the subject to the fore during the Peninsular Wars, but notwithstanding these splendid individual efforts, that [illegible] was so sadly neglected, that the public conscience was seriously shocked when the world-famed Florence Nightingale brought to light the condition of affairs at the time of the Crimean War in 1854.

It was officially recorded that at the (in those days) great Battle of Solferino—in Lombardy—on June the 24th, 1859, the fighting, "which lasted sixteen hours," was so desperate as to cost in killed and wounded three, field-marshals., nine generals, 4,565 officers of other grades, and 40,000 rank and file, supplemented within a few weeks by an additional 40,000 who died from wounds or sickness.

It is interesting, too, to recall the fact that in this battle the combined forces of France and Italy, led respectively by Napoleon III. and Victor Emmanuel, gained a victory over Austria, whose army was under the leadership of Franz Joseph.

Let us hope history is repeating itself a century and a half later.

Since that time the Army Medical Service — magnificently assisted by the Red Cross organizations — has grown amazingly, but for which fact it is easy to conceive that the casualty lists to-day would literally stagger humanity, when it is remembered that according to the official figures just issued by France—which figures do not include Italy's casualties—the number of killed in the present war already total 2,228,300 and the wounded 4,837,510.

An Englishman now resident in Montreal, recently received a letter from his son at the Front, in which after stating that the Canadians did all and more than has been published concerning them, the following occurs: "The A.M.C. have gone up a lot in our estimation after that Ypres affair. They were bringing fellows in for half and three-quarters of a mile to the dressing stations, and then doubling back with the stretchers, and that for days on end, without food or [illegible] and all the time under heavy shell fire. All luck to them, say I."

Little wonder we so often hear of Army Medical men being mentioned in despatches and decorated. Not only have officers received promotion but many sergeants, corporals, and privates of the Field Ambulance have have received commissions for distinguished conduct and resourcefulness exhibited on the battlefield.

KIDNEY DISEASE CURED

SWORN STATEMENT

Of Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Who Gratefully Gives All Credit to Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

It is one thing to make big claims for a medicine and quite another thing to produce irrefutable evidence that it actually cures in serious cases.

We prefer to let the cured ones speak for themselves, and that is why you find in almost every newspaper the report of someone who has been cured by the use of Dr. Chase's medicines. To-day we present the sworn statement of Mr. Wesley Maxwell. When a man goes to this trouble in expressing his gratitude there can be no question of the benefit he has received. Mr. Wesley Maxwell, Orangeville, Ont., writes: "I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I must tell you that before I started using them I could only make water with the greatest difficulty, and had many severe pains in the back. I am completely cured now by the use of these pills. Before that I used a lot of doctors' medicine without any benefit that I could see. I am thankful for being cured, and can recommend Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills very highly."

SWORN STATEMENT.

"This is to certify that I, Wesley Maxwell, of the Township of Caledon, was cured of kidney trouble by taking Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

"Wesley Maxwell."

(Sworn before me as correct this 6th day of January, 1915. — Wm. Hawkins, Sen. Justice of the Peace).

This statement is also endorsed by the Rev. Geo. W. Robinson, who is Mr. Maxwell's pastor.

This cure will interest a great many people who are suffering as Mr. Maxwell was with kidney and urinary troubles. It will only cost you a quarter to buy a box of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and put this medicine to the test. We are sure that you will be thankful to the writer for describing his cure to you. "I am Proud to be His Mother" Wrote One Notable Woman Of a Son Killed in Action

An officer who was in the service of the London Times before the outbreak of war, sends from the front the following exceptionally graphic letter descriptive of the part played by the 13th (Kensington) Battalion of the London Regiment in the British advance between Bois Grenier and Festubert. In the words of General Sir Henry Rawlinson, commanding the 4th army corps, "the performance of the Kensingtons was a feat of arms surpassed by no battalion in this great war." Following is the text in part, of the letter:

"What the official and unofficial reports dismissed in a few lines, was to us fifteen and a half hours of desperate bloody fighting. I won't apologize for the second adjective — it is le mot juste and no other will serve. We (the 13th) were the extreme left, the pivot of the whole attack, and we were the only battalion that succeeded in doing its job that day. The minute our bombardment ceased we were over our parapet and charging right through captured the first, second, and third lines of German trenches on our front at the point of the bayonet. We swept straight through while two companies, turning right and left, bayoneted and bombed the Huns back along their trenches for a couple of hundred yards on either side.

A Famous Sunday.

"Then we settled down to hold on to what we had taken. According to programme the —— and —— and —— (not Territorials, but Reguards) should have advanced in the same way on their front and connected with us. They couldn't get through, and never got through. Meanwhile, we held on, and held on, and held on, against steadily increasing German counter-attacks. Our C. O. came with us, though he had been on the sick list for ten days, and the day after we came [illegible]

Our Major went up the bombing party into the German trench on our left where they held them at bay for hours until they brought up trench mortars. But our right was fighting in the air. We stuck it grimly for eight hours or more — until half past 2 on that Sunday afternoon. My —, it was a Sunday I should like to forget. Their guns and ours kept a continuous deafening bombardment the whole day. Shells were pitching everywhere and anywhere. We had a nasty enfilade fire from machine guns we could not locate and from snipers. We got a message in the front trench from the Brigadier, 'You have done splendidly, the — — are coming up to reinforce you.' That was about 11.15, and I remember thinking of you people in England in church or strolling around the country lanes.

"Well, we held on with men getting hit in quite an unhealthy way. We held on—we saw our reinforcements come out, we saw them fade away. We found the Germans coming up in force on our flanks. Then we got the order to retire. There was nothing else to do, and it was bitter and damnable.

Through German Lines.

Moreover, we had to fight our way through the German lines again in order to regain our men. I can't go into details of the hellish afternoon, for hours above our waists in the mud and foul crawling water of the German communication trenches, isolated and cut off by an enemy we could not see, but who was steadily reducing our numbers by very excellent sniping. We were four subalterns in command of 30 or 40 men. Two of the officers were killed. The other man and myself determined to wait until darkness and then try and get through the German lines to our men. It was a risk, but everything was a risk that day.

To cut a long (and in reality too thrilling to be enjoyable) story short, we made the venture and we got through back into our trenches about a quarter-past eight. Incidentally, I found that I was reported killed. (My name, indeed, was so down in the preliminary list of casualties.)) Ho wand why I got through without being hit I shall never know. In advancing under cross fire men on either side of me — within hand's reach of me —were killed. At one point I had halted my men for a breather (it was in the first charge of the morning, after taking first and before reaching the second German trench.) The two men on each side of me (I could have touched any of the four) were in succession. A bullet struck the ground between my forehead and the ground (I was lyin gas flat as possible), put it only covered my face and head with dust. When I took up the first reinforcements to our front line we had to cross a field of a hundred yards of flat, bare ground, with scarcely a blade of grass and with a machine-gun sweeping the place and a sniper doing very pretty shooting—too pretty for my liking though; a corporal and myself were the onl yones of the party who got across without being hit.

The Final Scramble.

Our hottest time I think, though, was the final scramble back over this ground to the British trench in the evening. About 1[illegible] yards through German barbed wire and across ground raked by a withering cross-fire. It was a hailstorm of lead, bullets splitting up the ground and filling the air with a buzz of angry bees and bursting shell. For one hellish moment I was caught in the barbed wire, but managed somehow to wrench myself free, my nose almost burrowing the gorund. Men were being hit all about me. Somehow, I shall never know how or why, I got across the foot of our parapet. There was a slight ridge there; lying absolutely flat, it gave cover. It was still light—about 7.45 —and I told the men about to wait until it was darker before the last dash over the sandbags into our lines.

Asleep Under Fire.

Believe or disbelieve the following, but it is a fact, and it surprised no one more than myself. Lying there flat under the slightest ridge of cadth with shells bursting and whistling overhead, with bullets throwing up earth beind and before and around, one, and going "phiat" against the parapet which was my desired haven 20 yards away —lying there I fell fast asleep from sheer exhaustion. It must have been nearly half an hour when I woke. I made the dash, scrambled up the parapet, and flung myself over and down among our own men I never said "Thank God" as I said it then. I went into the dug-out of the — to rest and get a smoke (my first of the whole day). Somebody came along, and a voice asked in the darkness, "Is Mr. — here." "Yes, who wants me," "Thank God, sir we thought you were killed." It was my company sergeant-major, and we shook hands —not a usual proceeding in the army. From him I learnt the news. "—?" "Killed, sir!" "—?" "Dead, sir, he died in my arms." "—," "Killed" — and so on through name after name. It is impossible to describe —it is difficult even now for us to realize; but we had done our job as a battalion, even though the British forces were at night as they were in the morning before the attack. That was not the least bitter, least tragic feature of it all.

Mild French Beer.

Reduced to the shadow of a battalion, we were withdrawn from our trenches and sent back to billets to rest. General Davies, of the 8th Division, rode over the next morning to congratulate the men. It was only when we had come through it all that we knew what a big thing we had done. By its work in the trenches since November and at Neuve Chapelle the 13th had won a name and honour which were sealed on May 9. The Regular battalions with whom we were brigaded could not say too much. Wherever we went, either individually or in groups, the word went around, "Hi! Theyre the 13th." Officers came up to us —few remaining officers — and expressed their praise, in their terse half-ashamed way. My sergeant said to me, "Our men have no need to buy beer now, sir; wherever we go the other Tommies insist on treating us." (N.B.—It's the mildest, watery trench beer ever brewed. In a letter I censored the other day the Tommy wrote. "Tell Uncle Ned that beer here costs a penny a glass and it would cost him a sovereign to get drunk on it.")

Assisted French Advance.

"To return; we have been sent own to act as guards on the line of communications. (I am writing this in a little French village, where I have to look after a railway station, so far away from the firing line that only very rarely and very distantly do we hear even the biggest guns.) But before we left, General Sir H. Rawlinson, commanding the 4th Corps, rode out to address us. He said many things about us; how proud he was to have us under his command; that our last attack, though it could not be supported, had directly relieved the pressure on Ypres and towards Arras, and thereby in the latter district assisting the French advance. Just one intense verbatim — 'By your splendid attack and dogged endurance on May 9 you and your fallen comrades won imperishable glory for the 13th London Battalion. It was a feat of arms surpassed by no battalion in this great war.' Then he went on. 'Though no accounts of your work on that day have been published in the press, do not think that it is not known and fully appreciated. It is known fully and valued in the highest degree by myself and the staff of the 4th Corps, by General Sir John French and the Headquarters Staff, and by the authorities at home—the War Office.'

Proud, Brave Mothers.

"In our May 9 flutter, I got through with no worse than a twisted knee, and the right shoulder of my tunic torn either by a bit of shell or a bullet — it might have been the barbed wire only.

"It was very sad writing to the relatives of men in my company breaking the news of the deaths. In different forms the letters of thanks and acknowledgments of have had back are all from mothers and fathers, sisters and brothers; variations of what one noble woman wrote to me of her only son, 'I am proud to be his mother.'

"Tell that to the slackers and shirkers."

Took German Boots.

"P.S.—I lost my boots in the mud, so helped myself to a new pair in the German trenches. I shall send them home as a souvenir. By the way, also one point in our tenancy of the German trenches, in order to economize our ammunition, we took the rifles and cartridges from the dead Germans and shot those on-coming, blue-coated sons of Satan with their own weapons. Reading this over, I fancy this might give an impression as light as my description; but it was just blood and death and dying from sunrise to sunset. It was a hideous nightmare that we all try to forget. Men who were at Mouve Chapelle say that was a picnic to May 9. When the strain was over came a terrible reaction—men and ma'alike; we were bundles of frazzled nerves. We are past that now, but memory is still full of horror. Believe me, those who have not been in and seen a battlefield cannot dimly imagine its hideous, ghastly bloodiness. Don't think for one moment though that we are not going through with it — we are, to the one and only end of victory complete and final; but we wish that England would fully realize that war is war, and this war the sternest and most bloody ever waged, so that by throwing every ounce of weight into it, we may finish it the sooner and utterly. Make everybody realize this."

To provide occupants of houses lacking boilers with hot water two Maryland men have patented coils of thin pipe that can be erected on a roof to be heated by the sun's rays.

TO CHECK A COLD.

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortread, B. C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

Local Market Prices

Meats and dairy produce are easier this week. Cheese sold at 13 3-8c on the Peterborough Board, which was regarded as a good price in view of the cheese slump which is partially explained as follows:

With the cessation of buying on the part of British army people, the Canadian firms engaged in the storage of cheese have seized the opportunity and are trying to recover some of their loss occasioned at the time of the first wild buying of cheese when the season opened. With the British buyers at least temporarily out of the way, the cheese manufacturers are the storage men's "meat," and it is only to be expected that the price would be hammered as low as possible. There is a big score to be evened when a warehouseman wanders through the cheese in storage and sees box after box that went in around 18c and 20c. The score is being evened, too.

The Peterborough make was off about 400 cheese under the previous sale, and doubtless indicates the immediate approach of lighter makes which will lend a strengthening effect to the market.

Butter may follow cheese to a certain extent. The price has held firmly around 27 and 28 cents, and with August almost at hand will scarcely recede at this late date.

Wool Advanced.

With the wool clip practically all bought up the price had advanced two cents all around. However there is very little coming forward now.

Meats are generally easier in price, including beef cuts and hams.

The following are local market prices:

PETERBOROUGH - ONTARIO

Farm and Dairy Market Report

TORONTO, Monday, July 19.—In summing up trade conditions for the week, The Trade Bulletin of Montreal says: "Although trade in wholesale circles does not show the same volume as at this time last year, it is in a healthier condition. Our merchants in curtailing their expenses, have been more particular in weeding out the 'slow pays' and retaining the better class of customers. In dry-goods the great difficulty is in getting delivery of the goods ordered. Especially has this reference to imported goods from England and France."

Quotations on grains have firmed considerably and have been soaring steadily during the week. Few price changes have been noted on other farm produce.

WHEAT

Some considerable interest was aroused in wheat circles when it was announced that the British Government was preparing to take over the Canadian wheat crop. It has since been stated, however, that nothing of the sort would be done, as it would be almost impracticable as well as unnecessary under present conditions. Prospects for the billion bushel crop in the winter wheat belt still continue to grow, although harvesting has been delayed, and much ripe wheat is still uncut, owing to wet weather. Quotations have advanced this week and No. 1 Northern is now quoted $1.46 to $1.46½; No. 2, $1.42½ to $1.43, and No. 3, nominal; Ontario wheat, $1.17 to $1.22.

COARSE GRAINS

Quotations on oats have advanced 5½c during the week. Pastures have been impaired by dry weather which has stimulated the demand for grain and feed. Oats, C. W., No. 2, are now quoted 66½c; No. 3, nominal; Ontario oats, 56c to 58c; American corn, 82c, barley, feed, 67c to 68c; buckwheat, 76c; rye, $1.05 to $1.10. The Montreal market quotes: Oats, C.W., No. 2, 63½c to 64c; extra No. 1 feed, 63½c to 64½c; local white, 62c to 63½c; corn, 90½c to 95c; barley, feed, 71c; buckwheat, 75c to 80c

MILL FEEDS

Quotations are firm: Bran $27; shorts $29; middlings $30; feed flour $1.65. Montreal quotes: Bran $26; shorts $28; middlings $33 to $34; mouille $35 to $40.

HAY AND STRAW

Latest advices regarding the hay crop are that allowing for the light reports from some districts it will turn out a fair average. Quotations here are: No. 1 baled hay, $19 to $20; No. 2, $17 to $18; baled straw, $7. The receipts of hay at Montreal during the past week were 44,236 bales against 16,155 bales for the same week last year. No. 2 baled hay is quoted $21.50 to $22; No. 2, $21 to $21.25; No. 3, $19 to $19.50; clover, $18.50 to $19.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

Wholesale quotations on this market are as follows: Cherries, 11-qt., sweet, 65c to $1.35; sour, 40c to 50c; strawberries, box, 7c to 8c; red currants, 35c; black currants, $1.50; raspberries, box, 10c to 15c; potatoes, Ontarios, 45c; Delawares, 55c; new potatoes, bbl., $2.25.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Eggs are coming to this market freely, but owing to the hot weather the quality is not as good as previously, there being a large percentage of stale and shrunken eggs received. Eggs in cartons are quoted 24c to 25c, selects, 23c to 24c; No. 1, new-laid, 21c to 22c; No. 2, 18c to 19c.

Poultry quotations follow: Old fowl, live 12c to 14c; dressed, 15c to 18c; spring broilers, dressed, 17c to 23c; old turkeys, live, 14c to 20c; turkeys, dressed, 23c, to 25c; ducks, live, 13c to 15c; dressed, 17c to 18c.

HIDES AND WOOL

The quality of hides continues to improve and trade is stronger because tannery like the short-hair and grub-free grades that are now coming to market. Hides, flat, cured, 17c to 18c; part cured, 16c to 17c; deacons or bob calf, 75c to $1.10 each; horses, take off, No. 1, $3.75 to $4.25; No. 2, $2.25 to $3 each; sheepskins, 75c to $2 each; shearlings and spring lambs, 35c to 40c; horse hair, 35c to 40c.

Because of the high prices ruling, wool continues to be marketed freely here. Values are unchanged from the advance of last week. Washed, combing fleece (coarse) 30c to 40c per lb.; washed, medium, 35c to 41c; tub-washed, coarse, 32c to 33c; fine, 40c to 41c; washed fleece, fine, 40c to 42c; washed rejects, 28c to 30c; unwashed combing fleece (coarse), 25c to 26c; unwashed medium, 30c to 31c; unwashed fine fleece, 35c to 36c.

DAIRY PRODUCE

The easier butter market noted last week has firmed, and butter at Montreal is quoted 26½c to 27½c for finest. According to statistics, the make is short, as compared with that of last year to date. As cheese is being made so extensively this year, holders do not expect prices to go much lower than at present.

The cheese market is in an unsettled condition owing to the continued large production and also the poor demand from the old country. Prices on country boards have dropped slightly. As it is anticipated that the make of English cheese will be short and that shipments from New Zealand will be comparatively short for a time, as this is their most promising season, cheese prices can hardly go much lower than they are now. Country board prices follow:

DAIRY BOARDS

St. Paschal, Que., July 15.—126 boxes of butter sold at 27 1-16c, and 570 boxes of cheese sold at 14 9-16c.

Belleville, July 15.—705 boxes cheese were offered; all sold at 14½c.

Woodstock, July 15.—2200 boxes were offered; highest bid 14½c.

Vankleek Hill, July 15.—1583 white and 285 colored cheese boarded here to-day. Price offered, 13½c. None sold on the board. Several factories sold on the street at prices offered on board.

Kingston, July 15.—215 boxes white and 470 colored were offered; 150 colored sold at 14½c, and 438 at 14 13-16c. White unsold; 13½c offered.

Brockville, July 15.—2,245 colored and 1635 white. One lot 80 colored sold at 13½c; balance being unsold.

Mont Joli, Que., July, 14.—360 boxes of colored were offered. All sold at 11½c; 75 boxes of butter sold at 25c.

Iroquois, July 15.—850 colored and 25 white were boarded. Price bid on board, 13½c; no sales. A few boxes sold on curb at 13c

Perth, July 15.—800 boxes white cheese and 400 boxes colored; 200 sold at 13½c; the balance being shipped to cold storage.

Napanee, July 15.—Boarded, 795 white, 770 colored; 240 colored sold at 13 9-16c; 250 colored at 13½c; 13½c refused for white.

Picton, July 15.—1660 boxes, all colored, were boarded; 1250 sold at 13½; balance unsold.

LIVE STOCK

There was a large movement of all kinds of stock to this market this week. The demand for export trade still continues, holding the prices of heavy, well finished animals firm. Over 1,000 more cattle were handled this week than last, and 3,000 more than the same week a year ago. Quotations follow:

Heavy choice steers, $8.35 to $8.90; handy choice steers, $8.25 to $8.65; butcher steers, good, $8 to $8.35; com. to med., $6.50 to $8; heifers, $6.75 to $8.40; cows, choice, $6.75 to $7.50; med. to good, $6.50 to $6.50; butcher bulls, $6 to $7.75; feeders, $6 to $7.35; stockers, $5.50 to $7; canners and cutters, $4.25 to $5.50.

Choice milch cows went at $75 to $90; com. and med., $45 to $75; springers, $50 to $90. Good veal calves were quoted at $9.50 to $10.50; com. to med., $6.50 to $9.50; bob calves, $3 to $5 each.

Prices on mutton were easier than the week previous, over 200 more sheep being handled: Lambs, yearlings, light, $7 to $8; spring lambs, cwt., $9.50 to $11.75; ewes, light, $6.50 to $6.75; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $6.50; culls, $3.50 to $4.

Hogs came on the market in large numbers, numerous shipments coming from the West. Quotations have dropped to $8.75 to $8.85 f.o.b., and $9.25 to $9.45 weighed off cars.

Germans Make Nine Rushes West of Munster But Suffered Heavily in Each Attempt to Regain Lost Ground and Finally French Follow Up Their Victory by Taking More German Trenches.

MACKENSEN MEETS WITH RESISTANCE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS (French Official), July 22.—Furious fighting in Alsace in which French Chasseurs drove large bodies of Germans down the slopes of the mountain peak known as "Little Reichackerkopf," was reported in official despatches to the War Office to-day.

Throughout Tuesday night the Germans attacked time and again swarming up the mountainside to the very edge of the French parapets. The French "blue devils" stood their ground in the face of superior forces and played machine gun fire through the German ranks until the enemy abandoned the attempt and retired.

Heavy counter attacks on the fighting north of Hirtzstein, where the Germans made nine distinct rushes during the early hours of Wednesday in an effort to recapture the positions taken by the French in the recent offensive in Alsace. The enemy suffered heavy losses, and at dawn on Wednesday, the French followed up their victory by taking 150 yards of German trenches. This afternoon's communique reported that French airmen are continuing their attacks on the railway junctions through which the German Crown Prince's army is supplied. They have bombarded the station at Autrey in northwestern Argonne.

LONDON, July 22. — The Exchange Telegraph's Amsterdam correspondent cabled the following to-day: "Anti-American feeling in Berlin is again bitter on account of the published forecasts of the American reply in the Lusitania matter. The General opinion is that the situation is serious as Germany is not prepared to modify her attitude."

STRIKE SETTLED.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 22.—The settlement of the Machinists and Workmen's strike in the Remington and other plants here was announced shortly before noon. It was reported that the employers had acquiesced in all requests for readjustment of wages and hours of work.

PARIS, July 22.—After a long silence as to the Dardanelles operations, the War Office said to-day. "In the Dardanelles quiet has prevailed since our success of July 12th and 13th."

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The German note was sent forward from Washington to Berlin at nine o'clock last night. The State Department officials announced to-day it is believed practically all of the note had reached Berlin by 10 o'clock this morning.

MALES OF LUBLIN ARE ORDERED WITH ARMY.

VIENNA, via London, July 22.—The Fromdenblatt prints under a Cracow date the following order issued by the Russian Governor to the civil population of Lublin to evacuate the place:

"On the order of the chief commander of the army I call to the attention of the inhabitants of the Lublin government that in future in case of a retreat of our troops the male population is to attach itself to the retreating troops. (Signed) "Governor STERLIGOW."

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The continuation of friendly German-American relations depends on the Kaiser. If the Lusitania incident is repeated in the case of another ship with the sacrifice of more American lives, a diplomatic break may ensue. This plain and emphatic warning was given in the American not to the Berlin Foreign Office, which to-day was being cabled to the German capital via Copenhagen.

Secretary of State Lansing did not announce until this forenoon that the note was started to Ambassador Gerard last evening. He signed it about 7 p.m. in the White House, in President Wilson's presence, and its transmission was begun two hours later.

Some Citizens Paying For St. Oil Would Like a Share of It

And About the Only Method of So Doing Would be to the Streets Now Oiled—The Oiling Motto is "To Him That Hath Shall be Given"—Fat Chance Unless Watered Last Year—Cheer Up, Think of 1920

On every hand one hears expressions of satisfaction with the oiling of the roads. Not only has the dust nuisance been removed on the oiled streets, but the roadways have been improved by the binding in the oil, and the protection against the ill effects of rain. Alderman Green had not returned to the city more than a few hours before the oil waggon resumed its welcome work. It has been remarked that it should seem a natural suggestion that the main arteries should be treated first; Charlotte street, of course, to the boundary, but also Sherbrooke street to the boundary, for example; and also Park street south to Lansdowne street, and Rubidge to the intersection with Park street; likewise Albert and Chamberlen streets. It should be quite manifest that there are certain streets directly leading to the Byersville suburb. This should be self-evident, just as it should be self-evident that oil should be first laid on the busiest streets. And many opinions support the idea that Bethune street for example, especially between Charlotte and Murray should be one of the last to be treated, and other streets that might be mentioned in this class. It is true that some of the main highways have been oiled, but only some of them. As far as residential streets are concerned the principle of oiling has been a sound one, viz., to them that hath shall be given. That is, the streets watered before shall be oiled first. The whole city pays the cost of the water and oil, but——. There are some citizens who feel that they have a claim under this system of paying for the work, but grousching is poor stuff to keep down dust. There is nothing like oil. And as a prominent citizen remarked last night, every street should be oiled. Another said that the success of the oil treatment lead one to believe that the street paving might be curtailed and careful oiling be carried out instead. The grouches will now rise and sing "There's a land that is fairer than this."

Scarcity of Young Men at Stoney Lake

Reports from Stoney Lake say that there is a noticeable scarcity of eligible young men at the customary assemblies of youth and beauty. At a recent dance the ladies were in a majority of 160 to 6, on the face of it surely an exaggeration but offered as if an actual count had been made. Speaking generally, however, the number of young men is certainly much less than usual at the various resorts, and the ladies who knit for the soldiers are actually making comforts for their holiday companions of recent years. A happy fact, if true.

WARM RECEPTION FOR 8TH C.M.R BOYS IN ENGLAND

Factory Girls Cheered When Mounted Rifles Said They Came From Canada Writes Pte. D. H. Darrat of Peterborough.

NOW AT CANTERBURY

Mrs. Isadore Darrah, 590 Chamberlen Street, has received the following letter from her her son, Pte. D. H. Darrah, of the 8th C.M.R., who left with the first overseas draft, and who is now at Canterbury, Eng.

June 21st.

My Dear Mother,

I am now taking the pleasure of writing you this letter and letting you know we landed safe at Devonport, and that I am still alive and in the best of health, and hope to find you all the same. I will try and tell you about our trip.

We left Kingston about 2 or 3 o'clock on the 9th of June. On our way to Montreal we stopped over at a place called Morrisburg. We got out of the train and marched through the streets, and as we were marching past a corner of one of the streets a crowd of people cried "Three cheers for King George's soldiers," and as we were going past another house an old Irishwoman put her head out of the window and shouted, "Hurrah for our boys of Canada, for they have the grit."

We then boarded the train and reached Montreal at a quarter to eleven that night. We slept on the train overnight and boarded the boat next morning, and got a grand send-off. There were 1,800 soldiers all told. We had a grand voyage across, as the water was not very rough. I was not seasick at all.

We landed at Devonport at 9 o'clock at night on June 19th. We were certainly made welcome. Nearly everybody turned out to watch the boat come in, and we received many cheers.

We stayed on board overnight and marched to the train next morning on our way to Canterbury. We saw some pretty sights as we passed through the villages and towns, and also as we passed through the outskirts of London. When we got off the train and were marching to the barracks, a crowd of factory girls shouted "Who are you and where do you come from?" and we answered "Canada," and then up went three cheers for us. They seem to be real glad to know that there are a lot more soldiers at home ready to do the same as us, and I really believe that Canada ought to be proud of it, too.

Well, I have told you all the news I can think of at present, and I will write again soon. Give my best regards to all those who know me, and ask them to write. I would like you to send a paper to me once in a while.

I guess I will close now.

Your loving son,
DAVE.

RUSSIANS ENTRENCHED AGAINST THE INVADERS

LONDON, July 22.—Von Mackensen's drive from Warsaw on the south, the really important operation in Poland, has met with some success, but also with new resistance. His advance on the Cholm-Lublin, Ivangorod railway has broken the Russian line at points, but Vienna says that he has "made a new stand" south of the railway, while Berlin admits that "between the Upper Vistula and the Bug, the Russians have again entrenched against Von Mackensen's armies."

WARSAW TO BE BURNED

Berlin Reports Say the Polish Capital to be Destroyed by Russians if German Forces Penetrate its Defences.

BIG BATTLE AT LUBLIN

Special Cable to The Examiner:

BERLIN, via Amsterdam, July 22. —Warsaw is to be set in flames by the Russians and destroyed when Von Hindenburg's forces penetrate the last lines of defences before the city, according to information that reached here to-day. The Grand Duke Nicholas is said to be determined that the Polish capital shall not fall into the hands of the Germans with its government buildings and churches unscathed. He is reported to have assigned groups of men to the task of applying the torch all over the city when the Germans close in and force his armies to evacuate. The Russians already have begun devastating villages in the path of their retreat both north and west of Warsaw and in the Riga region to the north. Bridges are being blown up, cattle driven to the rear of the Russian forces and crops either confiscated or destroyed. Despatches from Copenhagen to-day quoted travellers from the island of Gothland as declaring that the flames from the Riga region have lighted up the sky above the Baltic for several nights. South-east of Lublin a great battle was raging along the Wieprz river, when the last despatches were sent to the War Office. The fighting here is of a decisive character. The War Office is confidently awaiting the word that Gen. Mackensen's centre has battered its way through the Russian lines and seized the Lublin-Cholm railway.

SUDDEN DEATH OF MATTHEW GALVIN IN ROCHESTER JULY 21

Special Correspondence to The Examiner:

BUFFALO, N.Y., July 22.—Matthew Galvin, aged 35, formerly of Peterborough, died suddenly on Wednesday morning at his home in Rochester. The deceased moved to Rochester form Peterborough nine years ago. He leaves a wife, one son, three daughters, two brothers and one sister, the latter, Mrs. Maragret Webber, residing in Cleveland, O. Interment on Friday.

Local enquiries show that the late Mattew Galvin had numerous relatives in Peterborough county. He was a cousin of J. F. Galvin of Customs House, and of the late James Galvin of Peterborough. Rev. Father Galvin, of Norwood, is also a cousin. He was born in Otonabee, where his mother still resides. His father was the late John Galvin.

SCIENTIST IS DEAD

Sir Sandford Fleming Passed Away This Morning After a Brief Illness—Formerly Resided in Peterboro, Where He Acquired Much Property.

SURVEYED THE CITY

Death this morning removed one of Canada's distinguished scientists and public men, in the person of Sir Sandford Fleming at his home in Halifax, N.S. Deceased was in his eighty-eight year and had only been ill a short time. He was an engineer by profession and in his early days surveyed the towns of Peterborough, Cobourg and Toronto. He was born in Kirkcaldy, Scotland in 1827, and has resided in Canada since 1845. A year later he came to Peterborough where he resided for a number of years and incidentally acquired considerable property, including that now known at "Fleming Place," on Hunter street. In 1855, deceased was married to Anne Jane Hall, daughter of the late Sheriff Hall. The present Sheriff Hall, "Fleming Palce," is a brother-in-law, also Mr. E. H. D. Hall, former City Solicitor.

Subsequent to his work in Peterborough, the late Sandford Fleming was engaged in survey work for the Royal Engineers and ultimately was appointed to conduct the surveys of the Intercolonial Railway. In 1880 he was appointed Chancellor of Queen's University and has been re-elected every three years since then. He raised a company of militia in 1862, Toronto, and was appointed captain. He was also known as the father of Standard Time in connection with which he published a number of important works.

There is an old plan of the city in the archives of the City Hall which was prepared by the late Sandford Fleming during his residence here.

LIEUT. W. H. MUNRO OFF TO THE FRONT

Another Peterborough man has left for the front in the person of Mr. W. H. Munro, manager of the Peterborough Light and Power Co., and the Peterborough Radial Railway, and lieutenant in the 57th Regiment.

Mr. Munro is an officer in the Mechanical Transport Branch of the C.A.S.C., and is detailed for special duty under General Carson in connection with the operation and maintenance of motor trucks in France.

He has spent three months in the plants of automobile truck manufacturers in the United States and in studying the use of motor trucks in military service.

The Electric Power Co. has granted Mr. Munro leave of absence for the period of the war and Mr. W. G. Ferguson is acting manager of the Street Railway and Gas Company in his absence.

Mr. Munro sailed on the Metagama for Montreal on the eighth and recently cabled that he had landed safely at Liverpool. His work will take him over a wide field of operations where his engineering and mechanical experience and training should be of much value in helping to maintain the heavy motor transport machinery.

Mr. Munro's brother, Alan, is a sapper with the Canadian Divisional Engineers, second contingent, now in England.

TOBACCO FOR THE CANADIAN TROOPS ON THE FIRING LINE

Mr. Arthur Private, Representing Overseas Club, Will Address a Public Meeting in the City Council Chamber To-morrow Night.

A PRAISEWORTHY SCHEME

There will be a public meeting in the City Council Chamber to-morrow (Friday) evening, when the plan of distributing tobacco to the soldiers at the front as arranged by the Overseas Club will be fully explained by Mr. Arthur Private, of London, Eng., who is in Canada for the purpose of stimulating interest in this splendid object. It is scarcely necessary to say anything about the comfort our boys in the trenches find in tobacco. Every letter from the front emphasizes this fact. It is realized that there are moments in warfare when a pipe of tobacco or a cigarette counts for a good deal more than a man's food.

That much accepted as a fact, then the question naturally arises as to the best method. The Overseas Club, which has a membership of 130,000 members, has evolved a scheme by which it is possible to send a dollar's worth of tobacco to the soldiers at the front for 25c.

Mr. Private will explain the whole scheme thoroughly to-morrow night and it is hoped that there will be a very large attendance. Mayor Hiller will preside and all societies who are doing work for the men at the front are urged to be present. The Council chamber should be packed. Mr. Private recently addressed a meeting in Toronto along the same lines and the fund that resulted is responsible for sending a vast amount of tobacco to the Canadian soldiers.

STANDARD OIL STRIKERS SHOT BY THE GUARDS

Tried to Climb Over the Factory Wall and Two of Them are Probably Fatally Wounded as a Result.

GUARD ALSO INJURED

Special to The Examiner.

BAYONNE, N. J., July 22. — Two strikers were shot and probably fatally wounded, and several others less seriously hurt in an attempt by the strikers to scale the wall of the Standard Oil Co.'s plant here to-day. One hundred and fifty strikers secreted themselves behind a church a few yards from the factory walls and made a concerted rush to scale the walls. As their bodies appeared on top of the walls a squad of company guards opened fire from the inside. Two dropped back, probably fatally wounded, while some of the strikers opened fire on the guards. It was reported two of the guards were also shot.

BAYONNE, N.J., July 22.—Two men were killed shortly after noon to-day in another attempt to rush the walls of the Standard Oil plant here. Both were strikers.

Prisoners Taken To Toronto

A bailiff from the Ontario Reformatory was responsible for the removal from the local bastile of a quartette of prisoners, namely, John Martin, sentenced to three months and thirty lashes, William Rose, one year and twenty lashes, and a couple of tramps who were sentenced by Police Magistrate Dumble. The first two were tried by His Honour Judge Huycke. Martin who was sentenced to three months, would likely have remained in Peterborough had it not been for the lashes which were ordered to be administered. These must be given under the supervision of a physician. It has always been the custom to forward such cases to Toronto where there is every facility for carrying out such a sentence.

BANK CLEARINGS

The Bank Clearings for the week ending July 22nd, totalled $331,759, a decrease from last week of $110,579 The same week last year the clearings were $365,840.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY ADOPTED

Utilities Commission Record an Expression of Regret at the Death of Late Engineer Scott

The Utilities Commission met yesterday afternoon and among other things placed on record an expression of regret and sorrow at the death of Mr. Thomas Scott, for many years an engineer at the pumping station. It was decided to forward a resolution of sympathy to Mrs. Scott.

PURCHASE OF TRANSFORMERS

A letter was read from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, acknowledging the receipt of a letter asking that an agreement be prepared with the Canadian General Electric Company for the purchase of transformers.

WILL CONTINUE MAIN.

The Waterworks Superintendent reported on a petition for a main on Chamberlen street from the end of the present main east to Park street, estimating the cost at $1626.40, the revenue from services at $1016, and from frontage rates $34.62, a total of $136.30. The superintendent was authorized to proceed with the construction of the main. The city council will be requested to authorize the placing of two hydrants on that portion of the street.

WAS LAID OVER.

A letter was read from the Henry Hope and Sons Company, asking that the Commission take over the four transformers at their factory, which they had to put in at a cost of $672.10 before they could get power from the Peterborough Light and Power Company. The matter was laid over.

Sergt.-Major Guerin Was In Hospital With Typhoid

Sergeant-Major Stanislaus (Buff) Guerin, of the Peterborough battery, cabled to his parents a few days ago that he had just left a London hospital, where he had been confined with typhoid, and expected to return to the front at once. However, in view of the reports that the battery is on a short forlough in London it is likely that he will remain with them until his time is up.

THE SYSTEM OF RECRUITING

The system by which men are recruited for active service has been greatly improved by recent changes made. One of the most important of these improvements is the removal of the threat from over the head of the regimental medical examiner that if he passes men who, on reaching Niagara, are rejected by the battalion doctor, the men will be sent back at the expense of the doctor who passed them. This threat has been removed [illegible] ought to be done away with everywhere. There must be other ways of enforcing on medical examiners the need for rejecting unsuitable men without imposing penalties that would tend to cause excellent volunteers to be turned away on the possible chance that another doctor might find fault with them. There is a final decision now made as to the medical fitness of each volunteer. He is examined both by the recruiting and battalion doctor, and in case of dispute another examiner is called in. The result is that many a good man who would have been rejected a fortnight ago for some trumpery defect is being accepted, and his flaw remedied. Dental repairs are being made that cost little and mean much.

To put it briefly, a good working system of recruiting is beginning to take shape in Toronto, and the volunteers who come forward are increasing every day. One good point about the new plans is the official recognition of the fact that a volunteer is a volunteer whether he passes the medical examination or not. The man is a volunteer who offers his services. If the medical examiners reject him it is not his fault; it is his misfortune and the country's. It has been announced that all of these volunteers are to be supplied with certificates showing that they came forward and offered their services. We hope that these certificates will not be delayed, but will be handed over to all who deserve them.

There remains, however, what we consider a serious defect in the recruiting system. It is a defect which we should imagine every military man would be keen to see remedied. The men who enlist are in too many instances, not put in uniform, but go for an indefinite period in their ordinary clothes. They ought to be put into the dress of a soldier the moment they enter upon the duties of soldiering. It is their right. They are entitled to it. If a reproach rests upon young man who ought to enlist, but do not, these young men who do enlist ought to be uniformed at once, so that the colours they wear will evidence the decision they have made.

The other day about two hundred men were sent over to Niagara camp after enlisting here and training for a period of from two days to two weeks. During that time they wore their civilian clothes. They marched away as civilians; they arrived in camp as civilians. If there were uniforms for them at Niagara surely these uniforms should have been sent here so that the men could travel as soldiers and arrive in camp as soldiers? Surely it would have been worth while to have had those men looking smart in khaki, drill and march through the streets of the city they live in and where every man of them has relations and friends. In the week or two during which enlisted men are in town before going to camp they are soldiers, and they ought to be enabled to look soldiers as they go and come from their homes and visit among their friends. They are entitled to wear the King's uniform, and the uniforms ought to be ready for them as soon as they are ready. The effect on recruiting would be considerable. Men feel foolish in the stage between—in that period when they are neither in the army nor out of it. Many men leave for camp wearing the oldest clothes they own, intending to throw them away at camp. Instead of leaving the city spick and span, in the smart garb of the army, they depart rather hoping to dodge observation on the way. This is all wrong, and very reverse of what should happen, if it be the desire of the military authorities to really arouse popular enthusiasm and enlist large forces.

There may not be uniforms in plenty. Both there men above all others, ought to be in uniform. The men who enlist for war ought to be uniformed on the minute, even if it were necessary for the local militia to turn in their outfits to meet the need.

LOW GERMAN WAGES.

The Textile World Record, an American textile paper, prints the following, which needs no comment:

The notice of a wage increase recently issued by the Saxon-Thuringian Weaving Association is of unusual interest, not because of the reason assigned, for it is well known that the cost of living has been greatly increased in Germany since the war, but because of the disclosure of the low wages prevailing in the German textile industry and the insignificant increase that has been granted. The German army is giving the world a remarkable demonstration of efficiency on the battlefields of Europe, but even more remarkable is the example set by the army of men, women, and children in German mills and workshops who are patiently and unitedly toiling to supply their country with the sinews of war and to maintain their own existence on the pittance which this wage increase reveals. The notice which appears in the "Wochenberichte der Leipziger Monatschrift fuer Textil-Industrie" reads as follows:

Owing to the increase in the cost of living, the employers have granted a war increase of wages in accordance with the following scale:

1. Men who are or have been married and whose wages on pay day amount to less than 22 marks ($5.28) per week, will receive an increase of 20 pfennige ($.075) for each working day, the total wages, however, not to exceed 28 marks ($6.28) per week.

2. Unmarried male workers whose wages on pay day amount to less than 16 marks ($4.32) per week, will receive an increase of 15 pfennige (3½ cents) for each working day, the total wages not to exceed 18 marks ($4.32) per week.

3. Female workers who are or have been married and whose wages amount to 16 marks ($3.84) per week, will receive an increase of 15 pfennige (3½ cents) for each working day, the total wages not to exceed 15.9 marks ($3.82) per week.

4. Unmarried women whose wages on pay day amount to less than 12 marks ($2.88) per week, will receive an increase of 15 pfennige (3½ cents) [illegible] to exceed 13 marks ($2.88) per week.

5. This increase of wages is not to apply to workers under 16 years of age.

6. Male and female operatives to whom this increase is granted and who have more than three children under 14 years of age to support, will receive a further increase of 5 pfennige (1½ cents) for each working day.

7. This war increase of wages will go into effect on April 20, 1915.

The "Wochenberichte Leipziger Monatschrift fuer Textil-Industrie" in a recent issue, gives the following account of a fund raised in the German hosiery trade to be distributed to soldiers who may distinguish themselves on British soil:

Several customers of the hosiery manufacturers' bourse at Chemnitz recently contributed 1,000 marks ($240) to be turned over to the Saxon Ministry of War. This money is to be divided into 20 equal parts of 50 marks each ($12) and given to the first 20 German soldiers who win marks of distinction by military exploits on British soil. If Britain is not invaded the money is to be expended for the care of cripples.

A MESSAGE.

"Let each man of us see that we spare nothing, shirk nothing, shrink from nothing, if only we may lend our full weight to the impetus which shall carry to victory the cause of our honour and of our freedom." —Lord Kitchener.

HAMILTON'S ACTION.

The action of Hamilton (Ont.) in discharging all unmarried corporation employees is receiving the condemnation it deserves. These men should be picked out and told, by inference, that they must enlist no more than hundreds of other unmarried men. And unless the circumstances of each man were given close scrutiny, grave injustice might be done. Why doesn't Hamilton make its law against street loafers more stringent? It has plenty of them. (And before Hamilton answers, "So has London," we admit it.) —London Advertizer.

How it Feels Under Fire in The Trenches, as Told by a Newspaperman in British Ranks

At the request of the British Government the American Secret Service will investigate charges that unneutral acts have ben planned and committed upon American territory by German agents, says the Mail and Empire. On Saturday and Sunday last the New York Herald printed stories showing that in the United States at the present time is a huge German spy system, which is not only directing operations hostile to the Allies, but is gathering up information that may be of value to Germany in the event of the United States going to war. As a result of the Herald's disclosures there will likely go to Washington a demand that the secret service staff be greatly increased, for it is admitted that at present it cannot hope to cope with the German spy system, since there are at least 500 trained spies operating and only 200 men available for the work of watching them.

Spies in Government Posts.

The United States with relation to Germany to-day is very much in the same position as Britain was a year ago. Men like Le Quex, who insisted that Britain was overrun with German spies, were laughed at, and were supposed to be either unduly nervous or merely seeking publicity. However, events have proved that the worst alarmist did not begin to realise how well founded were his fears. Britain has wakened up, and now the United States is beginning to realize that German spies and secret agents have been as busy in the American Republic as in the French Republic. As a rule their plans are so deeply laid that it is almost impossible to prove the suspicions against them, but now and then facts come to light which point unmistakably to the conclusion that the United States is honeycombed with the burrowings of German spies, and that some of them have risen to positions high in the confidence of the American Government. Hence the demand voiced by the Herald is that there be created a special department of State to which none but Americans shall be appointed, and which will guard State secrets from the pryings of Americans of German birth or descent.

Betray American Government.

How active are the German spies is indicated in the fact that before the officials of the American Government had read the report of the experts who examined the fragments of the torpedo fired at the Nebraskan it was in the hands of the Berlin authorities. Knowing, therefore, that the American Government would be able to prove that the torpedo was a German one, the German Government apologized for the incident. It is asserted by the Herald that an employee of the State Department, of German descent, took from its files a copy of the note addressed to Great Britain re the cruiser cordon, and showed it to a representative of a certain press association, who was also permitted to make a certain covert use of it 24 hours in advance of its publication.

Trail Leads to American Embassy.

There can be not the slightest doubt that the Sayville wireless station, which has been taken over by the American Government, was used to transmit messages from Count Bernstorff and members of his staff to the German Government in defiance of the laws governing the wartime operation of the plant. It is suspected, moreover, that the Sayville station conveyed to Berlin information regarding the sailing of the Lusitania, and that this information was relayed to the submarine that sank her. Further proof that someone high up in the American Department of State, where there are several employees of German birth, some of whom have become naturalised only recently, is working for Germany was adduced at the trial of Rosenthal, the German spy who was shot in the Tower of London a few days ago. He was in possession of a carefully prepared American passport, which he used to bolster up his claim of American citizenship.

Muenter a German Agent.

The activities of Muenter, the German agent who used the name of Holt are evidence of a German spy system in the United States. Since his suicide, which appears to have been connived at in order that he might not be forced to give information against those with whom he worked, it has been established that he was spending far more money than his own income warranted. He travelled about in first-class style, [illegible] regard to money and comported himself, in fact, as though he were a representative of an organization to which expense was no object. The explosion on the Minnehaha, and the letters signed "Pearce" which have appeared in several American newspapers, and which threaten Americans who travel upon British ships, are other indications of a criminal activity on part of German-Americans who are using the United States as a point of vantage from which to attack the Allies. In demanding an inquiry, the British Government is not only protecting itself, but is doing a service to the American people in warning them of the system that has grown up in their midst, and which is as grave a threat against the United States as against the enemies of Germany.

THE LAST RESORT

THE doors of a certain new house had shrunk horribly, as is the way of the modern door made of unseasoned wood. The builder would not send the joiner to repair them, so the householder tried the ironical method and wrote:

"Dear Sir,—The mice can run under most of our doors, but our cat cannot follow them. Will you please send a man at once to make room under the doors for the cat, and much oblige?"

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU

That if there are three houses to rent in this town, anyone of which would suit you, at least two of them will be advertised in these columns.

That YOUR NEXT POSITION may be advertised to-day.

That the next furnished room you'll live in is probably advertised in another column.

That if there's nothing a Want Ad. can help you to accomplish—you're leading too quiet a life!

That [illegible] you have need of a Want Ad.

That a Store should be advertised as REGULARLY as it is opened for business. A merchant who would'nt close up for a while now and then 'to save running expenses' should'nt stop advertising now and then "to save expense."

That sometimes a LITTLE more advertising will mean a GREAT DEAL more business for a store.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

CLOSE GAMES EXPECTED IN THE CITY LEAGUE

Saturday's games in the City Baseball League should prove one of the best of the season. The Empire-Thistle clash is the first on the bill, and will be a battle royal judging by the form shown by the Empires in their last two games. In the second game the old rivals, Classics and East City will meet. East City won the last game by one run, but the Classics say they will not be so lucky Saturday.

Slav People And Czar Are Against War

SAN FRANCISCO, July 22.—An insight into Russia's attitude in the war, which throws a significant light on the disastrous retreat of Grand Duke Nicholas' armies, is given by Alexander Seidel of Petrograd, who has come to America under contract with the Russian government to purchase supplies for the Red Cross and the army. Seidel opened the interview with the bald statement:

"The retreat of our armies has not yet come to an end. I expect and contemplate their continued retreat beyond Warsaw. We will be compelled to give up Warsaw. Why? Lack of ammunition, lack of guns—and the war is not popular.

"The Russian people, all statements notwithstanding, cannot be brought to realize that Germany is their enemy. The court, including His Majesty, the Czar, was pro-German prior to the war, and is still pro-German. The [illegible] be hailed by the Czar. But he is powerless at present.

CZAR DOESN'T RULE.

"I know this seems inexplicable to Americans, who have heard so much of the great power of the Czar. Still, it is true. I was born in the heart of Russia, in the Caucasus, and I know our nation.

"As you know, our present Emperor is Nicholas the Second. But he does not rule Russia at present. Nicholas the Third is the real Czar. Who is Nicholas the Third? It is a nickname which is known to-day in Russia from the Baltic to the Black Sea and from the Ural Mountains to the Carpathians. We mean the Grand Duke Nicholas, commander of the army, the man who wants war, and who has aspirations to the throne of the Czar.

"When war threatened the Czar was adament. He wanted peace like all Russia.

"But the Grand Duke Nicholas and his officers, with whom he has reorganised the army, compelled the war.

"There is bitter feeling to-day in Russia against England," continued Seidel. "We realize it is England's war more than Russia's."

PEOPLE ARE BITTER.

"What do we stand to gain from Germany, the people ask. We understand England's little game in the Dardanelles very well. They want to get to Constantinople before we do—never will England allow Russia in Constantinople. So the Russian people feel very bitter.

"And then when the war broke out—what help did England give us? Not even the ammunition to fight Germany. With plenty of ammunition our armies would have been in Vienna before now, and they could have forced a way through East Prussia. But the help England gave us was ridiculous. Like toys. I was in England to buy supplies just before coming to America. Not a thing could I get in England for Russia. And they had nothing, not even sufficient for the British armies. So I had to come to the United States."

"And what do you expect the inevitable result to be?" Seidel was asked.

"It depends on the achievements of the Grand Duke Nicholas, he whom we call 'Nicholas the Third,'" was the reply. "If he succeeds in what seems impossible just now, he may gain still more influence and power. But if he loses—! Then the Germans will take Warsaw, though they will get no farther. And if Germany then offers to return the conquered territory to Russia in exchange of peace between the two countries, the Czar and his court and the people whose heart is not in this war, will make peace. And this party is strong in Russia just now, and it predicts peace within three months."

COUNTERFEITING PLOT IS REVEALED BY WOMAN'S QUARREL

CHICAGO, Ill., July 21. — After making counterfeit money for more than two years without being suspected by the Secret Service agents of the United States Government, a dispute between Samuel Robbins and his landlady led to his arrest and the finding of a trunk containing counterfeit bills with a face value of $75,000 and counterfeits of Minnesota State bonds to the amount of $25,000, along with dies, plates, engraving tools and chemicals.

Locked up with Robbins in the county jail are Samuel Pinas, in whose home he boarded, and Benjamin Saltaman, a nephew of Mrs. Pinas. The nephew and Pinas are accused of having passed some of the counterfeit bills. The names of two more men who were employed on commission to pass the money made by Robbins have been withheld. The police declare the arrest breaks up the largest "queer" market hand in the country.

Robbins, who is only twenty-two years old, was arraigned before Mark A. Foote, United States Commissioner, and held in $10,000 bail. He stated that he had no accomplices, but employed two men to assist in the making of the counterfeit money in a small western town, and that last fall he moved his outfit in a large trunk to the home of Mrs. Katherine O'Leary, Duluth, Minn. There he worked secretly until April, when he came to Chicago.

It was stated to-night that when the trunk was opened by the police they found $2,000 in genuine $1 bills. Robbins, who is a foreigner, is believed to have adopted the name by which he is known. Although only twenty-two years old, he has since coming to this country, obtained an accurate knowledge of printing, engraving, mechanics, and photography to the extent that he is unusually expert. He has discovered acids by means of which he can split edgewise $1 bills so that both sides can be used in raising them to bills of larger denominations.

So expert was Robbins that the police believe he would have worked without being detected for many months. When the call for the police was put in by Robbins' landlady, the police thought it was a case of disorderly conduct. When they arrived, Robbins and the men he had employed had left the house. As the trouble had started over the removal of the trunk, the police took a look at it. Because of its size and weight they decided to open it.

Then were brought to view the counterfeit money and bonds and the $2,000 in genuine bills. A photograph of Robbins and three other men was in the counterfeiter's room, and three of the four, including Robbins, were located in a Turkish bath.

Captain Thomis I. Porter, of the United States Secret Service, believes Robbins to be the most expert counterfeiter ever captured in Chicago.

WHAT TO DO WITH THE KAISER

(By W. M. Stewart, in the Montreal Standard.)

You may remember that some few weeks ago we published an article on the "Most Delightful Thing in the World" in which we introduced the views of a certain Poet, Artist, Stenographer, Clerk, Landlady, Hobo, Social Worker, Journalist and 'Horse Sense' Sage. Acting on the assumption that the Allies will emerge victorious from this gigantic conflict of nations and that they will do so before the Kaiser is called to his forefathers (or four devils as one local wit has termed them) we are confronted with the question of what is to be done with Kaiser Bill when once peace has been signed. We therefore decided that the best thing we could do was to secure the views of the same characters and celebrities as we before interviewed and see what they had to say on this momentous subject.

Also before tackling the job we decided to go to the real advanced thinkers for 'future' information, so to speak. To go, as it were, to the sect who are so far advanced that they really may be said to know what lies in the future. This is like getting tips on the races but still we have seen a hundred to one shot come off—once; and we had no money on it either.

But to the advanced thinkers we went, and to each of them we put the question, 'What will we do with the Kaiser.'

"Let him alone," was the startling ejaculation of a great big six feet three longshoreman who had a face like a combination of Jim Jeffries and battling Nelson. 'What for?" we asked. "Just so that some guy can get his mitts on him some dark night." "Oh, yes," said we, "now we understand."

"Send him to Mexico," said a little bit of a fellow whose chief occupation seemed to be smoking Turkish cigarettes, and who boasted a beautiful army eye. "Send him to Mexico, they're always looking for trouble there."

"Send him to live with the head of each of the prominent religious sects in turn," said the professed Anarchist who is also a poet. "What he failed to imbibe from one he would scarcely miss from the next." We began to feel that the professed Anarchist and poet was also something of a joker.

"Tie him on a s-s-st-stick," said an elevator man who has been known to take the chair at socialistic meetings dealing with the eternal brotherhood of man, and who is the possessor of a delicious lisp. "Tie him on a s-s-stick, and then hang him up t-to d-d-d-dry." We passed on.

Next we came to a painter who is too proud to paint and a story writer who is not too proud to write but who is singularly unfortunate in having the editors fail to appreciate his immortal outpourings. They were having an argument but when we put the question to them they were kind enough to give it heed. Said the painter, 'This is a complex case. The beauty of colour teaches us that man can be altogether bad and that—"

"You talk like a Roman gladiator who had taken too much hemlock," broke in the writer of fiction. "The Kaiser is plain crazy with the blood lust. That's what makes him so popular with his people. Look at the low brows in all countries who go to see prize fights and howl with unholy joy when the blood comes. The Kaiser's all right only he was brought up wrong. You can take it from me, sir," addressing us, "that the only trouble with the Kaiser is the fact that he has been fed too much ripe, red, raw meat when he was young. That is the truth from the lips of a What could we say? Thus fortified with the thoughts of the advanced thinkers we passed on to the more ordinary folk—the plain folk, like you and I.

We put the question first to a pretty stenographer. After she had removed her gum (in order that she might have more room for conversation we presume) and adjusted her bangs, she said, "Oh my, how I pity the poor man, but I am afraid that in the interests of humanity we must send him to St. Helena. It is the only proper thing to do. Don't you think so?" "Aw, go on," we said, "you read that in a book."

"What'll we do with the Kaiser?" said the woman who works sixteen hours a day trying to mack a living from her boarding house. I'd like to put him in this rooming house, start another war and let him see his best paying roomers go off to join the army, and no one coming along to take their places. He'd get all the h—— that was coming to him then," and taking a look at the lines in her face, we decided that that might be as good a punishment as any for His Royal Madness.

'What'll we do wid de Kaiser?" the gent I met in Victoria Square with a week's beard on his chin and his feet against a tree as he reclined on an iron bench which if it were not comfortable was at least durable. "What'll we do wid de Goirman Emp Wi' me bold buckeye of a noospaper man ders only one punishment fit fur a guy like dat." "And that is?" queried we.

"Send him to work." And Weary Willie again closed his eyes.

And then we asked a mother.

Just an ordinary common mother, a plain Canadian mother, whose husband makes his $22 per week and who has brought up her family of four on that amount.

But one of the boys is at the front. "Somewhere in France" is his post office address and the trenches of the British outposts his bed on many a chilly night.

So her we asked last of all. And from her we expected the most bitter answer of them all. Ten years have been taken out of her life since "Tommy" her first born, up and donned the khaki and the kilt for Canada and the Empire. Never a postman comes to the door but a pain shoots through her heart, and never a paper comes off the press but she has a vision of his name appearing in the deadful and common casualty list. So to her we went with our question, "What will we do with the Kaiser?" and from her at least we looked for sanity. But what we got surprised us:

"Pray for him," she said, "he needs that most."

Pray for him! He needs that most. Pray for the Kaiser! That's a new thought, but it may be nearer the mark than any yet made along the same line.

And it came from a Canadian mother who has a boy at the front! deep thinker."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Lipton Says U.S. Physicians Washed the Serbian Nation

Has Returned From Second Trip to the Little Country—Typhus Completely Checked—Were Nearly 300,000 Cases at One Time.

LONDON, July 21.—"Miraculous is the only proper adjective to apply to the work being done by American physicians and nurses in Serbia," said Sir Thomas Lipton following his return a few days ago from his second trip to the Near East with the hospital yacht Erin.

"As usual," continued Sir Thomas, "The Americans excel in organization and preventive measures. The French and British units are doing good work in the hospitals, but credit for the work of sanitation, which is rapidly making typhus a thing of the past, must go to the Americans, whose magnificent efforts have made them loved by every Serbian, from the King to the lowest peasant, all of whom seem fully to appreciate the efforts of the Red Cross in their behalf.

'When I was in Serbia on my first trip," continued Sir Thomas, "it was unsafe to travel in the country, which was then so badly infected from vermin as to make necessary the use of antiseptics night and morning. But on this trip no such precautions were necessary, thanks to the sanitation reforms enforced by Americans. The hospitals are now as clean as any to be found in Europe, while hotels and dwellings are beginning to observe sanitary regulations.

"At the height of the epidemic there were probably three hundred thousand cases of typhus, but many typhus hospitals now have been closed for lack of patients. At Ghevghell, where Dr. James F. Donnally, now Serbia's national hero, died, there were once 1,400 patients in the American hospital. Now there are only three that are suffering from typhus.

Washing a Whole Nation.

"At Uskub I saw in operation the machinery with which American physicians and sanitary experts are washing the whole nation. Near the town three long railroad trains were standing in the midst of a city of tents. From these tents there poured an army of naked men, carrying their clothing in their hands. Stopping at the first train they deposited their clothes in a car, where they were thoroughly sterilized. Then the owner proceeded to the bath car, where an attendant placed him under high pressure water pipes. When he was completely scrubbed, the next step was an inspection by an American physician, after which the bather received sterilized clothing.

"Members of the Turkish population, which is large in this part of Serbia, protested vigorously against diarobing for the bath, on the ground that such a procedure violated their religious principles, but without avail, for the American sanitary commission has complete power to enforce its regulations. After the army of men had been treated during the day the women and children were given baths during the night.

"The next day I saw a whole regiment inoculated against cholera with a speed and efficiency almost incredible to any one who does not understand American methods. Cholera may come again, but it is no longer feared.

Americans Saved Serbia.

"In brief, it can be said that American methods of prevention and cure have saved Serbia from what threatened at times to be the worst human calamity ever suffered by a modern nation.

"Dr. Edward W. Ryan has three thousand patients, mostly wounded, at Belgrade, in a hospital pronounced by experts to be of the best. Dr. Ryan has not fully recovered from his illness with typhus, but manages to direct the big hospital.

"The whole task is in charge of Dr. Richard P. Strong, of Harvard, to whom the lion's share of credit for the direction of the great work must be given. This is due as much to his magnetic personality as to his skill. While Dr. Strong was in Salonica, the Greek Queen sent for him to see the King."

Sir Thomas brought back with him on the Erin several American physicians and nurses convalescent with typhus.

While attempting to enter the straits of Messina during the night, the Erin was fired on, one shell striking near the yacht, which, unable to anchor in the deep water, cruised about until morning, when the commandant came on board and apologized. He explained that the gunners did not recognize the Erin as a hospital ship.

Sir Thomas came home ill, but is improving. When he is able to travel he expects to go to America to recuperate.

PAVING ON PARK STREET

Street may have to be Widened—Pavement Will be 35 Feet From Curb to Curb

At last night's meeting of the Board of Works a letter was received from Mr. A. B. Colville of the Peterborough Radial Railway Company, respecting the laying of rails on such portions of George and Park streets as may be paved this year. Permission from the Municipal Railway Board is required before the work can be undertaken. The regular formalities will be complied with and the work proceeded with at an early date.

Widen Park Street.

Ald. Dobbin pointed out that it would be necessary to widen Park street to the regulation width. This would necessitate cutting away some of the boulevards on the east side of the street.

Ald. Stratton was of the opinion that a twenty-five foot pavement would be ample. He took exception to any attempt that might be made to cut away the boulevards.

City Engineer Parson said it was proposed to make the street thirty-five feet from curb to curb and have the track laid in the centre of the right of way. Mr. Parsons did not think it would be necessary to cut into the boulevards to any appreciable extent. It was decided to leave the matter in the hands of the City Engineer. Steps will be taken to see that the tracks are laid in accordance with the plans of the City Engineer. The communication submitted was interpreted to read that the tracks would be relaid in identically the same place.

Mayor Buller moved that the matter be left in the hand of Chairman Ald. Green and City Engineer Parsons, who will see that the matter is presented to the Municipal Railway Board in proper form.

The New York Loan to Canada

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., July 22.— Hon. T. W. White, Minister of Finance, in discussing the Canadian loan of forty million, raised in New York, emphasized the fact that the proceeds of the loan are to be used for capital expenditures of the Dominion. The money is to be applied upon works and undertakings authorized and actually under construction at the present time. The government, the Minister of Finance explained, has made complete arrangements for its financial requirements until the end of the fiscal year, which closes on March 31st next, and that the London market will to the extent of the loan be relieved.

The Board of Works Committee Hear Ald. Green's Explanation Concerning The Oil Question

Chairman of the Board of Works Claims to Have Been Vested With the Authority to Purchase a Supply of Road Oil for the City and That the Oil Complained of Was Purchased in Conformation With Such Authority—Some of the Aldermen Were Astray as What Streets Were Actually Treated With the Alleged Offensive Oil.

The olfactory organ of some of the aldermen was put to a severe test at last night's meeting of the Board of Works. Some of them were positive that an inferior and ill-smelling grade of road oil had been used on certain named streets of the city. This, Ald. Green, chairman of the Board, was able to deny with considerable emphasis, not only that he defied any of the aldermen to distinguish the difference after it had been applied for several days. This brought out a volume of contradictory testimony concerning the relative value of the two oils. The only point the committee was unanimous upon, was that the oil obtained on the authority of Ald. Green was a little more odoriferous than the first oil that was used. This was admitted by the oil company's representatives who were present at the meeting.

Failed to Obtain Analysis.

Ald. Green in explanation of his actions regarding the change that was made in the brand of road oil, said that he had simply used the authority that was delegated to him some months ago by the City Council. At that time the question of road oil was thoroughly investigated and it was subsequently decided to leave the matter in the hands of the chairman of the Board of Works, Ald. Green, and City Engineer Parsons. An unsuccessful attempt was made to get a detailed analysis of a number of oils that were recommended. Failing in this it was decided to open the season with an oil recommended by the British American Oil Company, and at a lower price per gallon than the oil of another company. After using three cars supplied by the British American Oil Company, it was felt that it would be an opportune time to try an oil recommended by the Imperial Oil Company. The price of the latter was about twenty per cent lower than that of the former. The company's representative attributed the lower price to to a lower freight rate that was possible to his company alone, owing to a material difference in the respective shipping points. One car of the oil had been nearly used when a number of complaints were registered based on the allegation that the oil of the Imperial Oil Company was offensive in smell and inferior in other qualities.

Assumed Responsibility.

Ald. Green said he was prepared to assume all responsibility for the change that was made. It was done in the best interests of the city and in conformation with the authority that was vested in him some months ago by the Council. He was informed by the City Engineer that on a section of George street, oil of the British American Company was used on one side of the street car tracks and that of the Imperial Oil Company on the other. He would defy any member of the committee to go down and distinguish the difference, if any existed, either by sight or sense of smell. He believed that it was good business to try out more than one brand of oil.

A Voice From East City.

Ald. Weir took exception to the use of what he termed "the cheaper oil."

Ald. Evans reminded the committee that representatives of other wards were as loud in their complaints of the oil as were the East Ward representative.

Ald. Edgar said he would never have heard of it, if it hadn't been for the East Ward representatives.

Ald. Dobbin claimed to have located a streak of offending oil on Water street, which to his mind, was patent to the most casual observer.

Ald. Green denied that a drop of Imperial oil had been used on Water street. He said that much misconception existed regarding the streets treated with the oil complained of and the amount used. It was used on the market square to good advantage.

Ald. Saunders said that the oil used in his neighbourhood bore a close resemblance to the quality of oil used by the city two or three years ago. To this Ald. Green replied that the oil used in the neighbourhood referred to by Ald. Saunders, was supplied by the British American Oil Company, and not by the Imperial Oil Company as was supposed.

Representative Heard.

Mr. Irwin of the Imperial Oil Company and Mr. Clancy, local representative of the same company, were heard regarding their product. Mr. Irwin presented a lucid account of the oil supplied by his company, dealing with its production from the time it left Mexico until it reached Peterborough. He claimed that an analysis would prove that the oil of the Imperial Oil Company would show at least seven per cent. more asphaltic content than that of the British American Oil Company. The more asphaltic content an oil contained the better it was for the road. The oil was not cheaper in price but was subjected to a lower freight rate due to a difference in shipping points. The product of the Imperial Oil Company was shipped from New Jersey and that of the British American Oil Company from Illinois. As regards injury to automobile tires, Mr. Irwin said that it was not the sulphur in the oil which affected tires but the petroleum. The road oil supplied by the Imperial Oil Company was free from such harmful properties and was manufactured from essentially the same material as the asphalt for the streets was obtained. He admitted that the oil possessed a stronger odour. Mr. Irwin named a number of Ontario cities that were using oil supplied by his company. He said that in Western Ontario, the British American Oil Company was able to quote a slightly lower price as the difference in freight rates was in their favour the farther west they went.

Following Mr. Irwin's explanation Ald. Green announced his intention of relinquishing the authority vested in him at the outset of the year as regards the right to buy oil for the city in conjunction with the City Engineer.

On motion of Aldermen Weir and Dobbin it was decided to have an analysis made of the products of the British American oil, the Imperial Oil and the Crown Oil Companies, and until such time as this detailed analysis is available, oil for the present use will be purchased from the British American Oil Company. Ald. Stratton's motion to have the immediate needs of the city equally divided between the British American Oil Company and the Imperial Oil Company failed to get a seconder.

Information Wanted.

Ald. Langford wanted to know if it would be possible to have a portion of Harvey street north, oiled, which was not included in the present list. Some of the aldermen asserted there was no traffic on the street to amount to anything.

Ald. Green informed the North Ward representative that it was practically impossible to undertake any more work of that nature as the appropriation was not large enough. He advised him to keep the street in mind next year and try and have it included in the regular list. It was now too late in the season to alter the present schedule.

Ald. Edgar knew of a case where a number of residents would be willing to pay for the oil if the city would undertake to apply it. This the committee contended would be establishing a precedent. The residents in question were paying for delete oil as it was and it would be unfair to expect them to pay for what they were really entitled to.

The matter of oiling extra pieces of streets in lieu of others already named was left in the hands of the chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer.

A LETTER FROM DRIVER LUTHER

Writing on July 8th from the front to his mother, Mrs. J. Luther, 136 Lansdowne Ave., Driver Sidney Luther of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade says:

Just received your welcome letter and was very glad to hear from you I must say things are very quiet out here just now. We are having an easy time, but always on the lookout for trouble. I must thank you for the Examiners you sent me. They were sure welcome. Another thing I must tell you. There is a rumour goin garound here that we are going to get passes to England for a week but it sounds too good to be true, dosn't it It would do us the world of good to get some change of air, but there is so much of that kind of talk that a fellow has to let it go in one ear and out of the other. Well, I guess I will close. Remember me to the children and the boys at the fire hall. Now, mother, don't forget that box or I will write you a letter like that hungry prisoner of war that I read about in the Examiners you sent.

Your loving son,

THE EXCURSION TRIPS OF THE "STONEY LAKE"

Popular Series of Summer Outings Being Well Patronized.

The popular summer excursion trips of the Stoney Lake Navigation Company to Lindsay and other outlying points, which were so much appreciated last year, has encouraged this steamboat company to continue them this season.

The first of the series took place on Monday last to Lindsay, per Stn. Stoney Lake, and although the morning of the excursion opened very unpropitiously with rain, two hundred and twenty-five excursionists availed themselves of the trip. It was quite evident that a much larger number would have patronized the excursion had the day been more promising, but as it was the number who were undeterred by the wet weather was quite encouraging.

The next trip of the series will take place on Wednesday, July 26th, to Hanley Falls, per Steamer Stoney Lake, with the round trip tickets selling at 60c. This is an all water trip, the distance to Hanley Falls being over 30 miles, and covers an interesting section of the Trent Valley waters.

SLEPT WITH HIS LIFE BELT UNDER PILLOW

Mrs. J. W. Edwards, 485 Sherbrooke Street, has received a very interesting letter from her husband, Pioneer-Sergeant Edwards of the 39th Battalion, and for many years quartermaster-sergeant of the 57th Regiment. Describing the voyage of the 39th Battalion, Sergt. Edwards says:

"We got away from Montreal at 9.30 a.m.. After a sail down the beautiful St. Lawrence we arrived at Quebec. We just merely halted there, took on the mail, put our mail off, and proceeded on our way down the river until we arrived at Rimouski, where we put off our pilot. We passed the spot where the Empress of Ireland went down, down the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the banks of Newfoundland, Cape Race, and then off on our irregular course towards England.

The first day out we ran 192 miles, the second day 199, the third day 306, the fourth day 328, the fifth day 335, the sixth day 337, the seventh day 325, the eighth day 345, and we are now waiting patiently for the first glimpse of the shores of Old England.

We have had lifebelt and boat drill to-day in case we have to leave in a hurry. We have had beautiful weather all the way, meals, as you can see by the enclosed card, and beds accordingly. This Atlantic trip is very nice indeed, but seeing no land day after day, just that broad expanse of water, gets on my nerves, and I begin to long to see some land somewhere. I don't know what part of England we are striking for, but it will make no difference to me. I will try and accommodate myself to place and circumstances.

We have just come into contact with our escort, a torpedo-boat destroyer, a vicious-looking little devil, that looks after those submarines. She keeps running backward and forward across our track on the lookout for subs.

I slept with my lifebelt under my pillow last night, and I will do the same to-night. Oh, this is some life!

Later.—Believe me, it looks beautiful to see the green hills of Devonshire, high rolling land, with hedges around every field. Just across the river is the coasts of Cornwall, with her beautiful fields, some hedges, and strong fortifications, and the historic field where Admiral Drake played bowls at the time of the Spanish Armada. Talk about boats—they are here by the score, all kinds and classes, from the speedy torpedo-boat destroyer to the super-Dreadnought.

I believe we are going to somewhere in the county of Kent.

Everybody on board well.

Wants a Share Of The Work

Local Cartage Company Discovers a Case of Discrimination

Messrs. Wedlock and Barbour, representing the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Company, appeared before the Board of Works Committee last evening. They asked for a fair share of the city's work upon the grounds that they were heavy ratepayers, and claimed a payroll of approximately $300 a week. Mr. Wedlock asserted that competitors were frequently required to work overtime in order to accomplish the work allotted by the city.

Mr. Wedlock was advised to take the matter up with the engineering department and an effort would be made to see that the company secured a fair share of the work.

The matter was left in the hands of the chairman of the Board of Works to see that the wish of the Board is carried out.

Authorities Investigating Disappearance

Old Gentleman Who Left Home of Friend at Buckhorn Has Not Been Located Yet.

In connection with the disappearance of the old gentleman, Van Syne, at Buckhorn, which was mentioned in the Examiner a week ago, there have not been any material developments so far. This morning Mr. Bishop, the old man at whose residence Van Syne was apparently last seen, was in the city and was for some time in consultation with Crown Attorney Hatton and Chief of Police Thompson, in the former's office, but Mr. Bishop does not seem to know anything more about the disappearance than was explained in the article last week.

According to the story, Van Syne came to this county from some point in the States a while ago in search of a daughter, who he had not seen since she was two years of age. The daughter he found to be married, and she is now Mrs. Hynes of Buckhorn. At least his story to her was so plausible that she fully believes that he is her long lost father. He related to her many things which her mother had often told her when alive.

It is understood that Van Syne had quite a sum of money always about his person. A week ago last Sunday he went to the home of Mr. Bishop to have dinner. He remained for supper and went to bed there. Mr. and Mrs. Hynes expected him home that evening and becoming uneasy, Mr. Hynes decided to go to Mr. Bishop's and see if he were still there, as the father was quite an old man. He got there about 9 o'clock and Van Syne was in bed. Mr. Bishop says the old man got up and left about 3 o'clock, after his son-in-law had left. Since that time nothing has been heard of him.

The theory has been advanced that Van Syne was of German extraction and the fact that he might be interned preyed so much upon his mind that he left the vicinity of his own accord. But the authorities cannot credit this theory as they believe he would have been seen somewhere before this time or heard from.

Mrs. Hynes came to the city on Tuesday and consulted Crown Attorney Hatton. The matter is now in the hands of the proper authorities and an investigation is in progress.

There has been a rumour about the city to-day that there was a man in the cells at the police station wanted for the murder of Van Syne, but Chief Thompson assured a reporter that such was not the case. The rumour probably received birth when Mr. Bishop of Buckhorn was known to be in Mr. Hatton's office with Chief Thompson and Mr. Hatton. It was found to be a difficult matter to carry on a conversation with Mr. Bishop as he was hard of hearing and everything had to be written for him.

The Board of Works Committee

Hear Ald. Green's Explanation Concerning The Oil Question

Chairman of the Board of Works Claims to Have Been Vested With the Authority to Purchase a Supply of Road Oil for the City and That the Oil Complained of Was Purchased in Conformation With Such Authority—Some of the Aldermen Were Asleep as What Streets Were Actually Treated With the Alleged Offensive Oil.

The olfactory organ of some of the aldermen was put to a severe test at last night's meeting of the Board of Works. Some of them were positive that an inferior and ill-smelling grade of road oil had been used on certain named streets of the city. This, Ald. Green, chairman of the Board, was able to deny with considerable emphasis, not only that he defied any of the aldermen to distinguish the difference after it had been applied for several days. This brought out a volume of contradictory testimony concerning the relative value of the two oils. The only point the committee was unanimous upon, was that the oil obtained on the authority of Ald. Green was a little more odoriferous than the first oil that was used. This was admitted by the oil company's representatives who were present at the meeting.

Failed to Obtain Analysis.

Ald. Green in explanation of his actions regarding the change that was made in the brand of road oil, said that he had simply used the authority that was delegated to him some months ago by the City Council. At that time the question of road oil was thoroughly investigated and it was subsequently decided to leave the matter in the hands of the chairman of the Board of Works, Ald. Green, and City Engineer Parsons. An unsuccessful attempt was made to get a detailed analysis of a number of oils that were recommended. Failing in this it was decided to open the season with an oil recommended by the British American Oil Company, and at a later date try out an oil of another company. After using three cars supplied by the British American Oil Company, it was felt that it would be an opportune time to try an oil recommended by the Imperial Oil Company. The price of the latter was about twenty per cent lower than that of the former. The company's representative attributed the lower price to to a lower freight rate that was possible to his company alone, owing to a material difference in the respective shipping points. One car of the oil had been nearly used when a number of complaints were registered based on the allegation that the oil of the Imperial Oil Company was offensive in smell and inferior in other qualities.

Assumed Responsibility.

Ald. Green said he was prepared to assume all responsibility for the change that was made. It was done in the best interests of the city and in conformation with the authority that was vested in him some months ago by the Council. He was informed by the City Engineer that on a section of George street, oil of the British American Company was used on one side of the street car tracks and that of the Imperial Oil Company on the other. He would defy any member of the committee to go down and distinguish the difference, if any existed, either by sight or sense of smell. He believed that it was good business to try out more than one brand of oil.

A Voice From East City.

Ald. Weir took exception to the use of what he termed "the cheaper oil."

Ald. Evans reminded the committee that representatives of other wards were as loud in their complaints of the oil as were the East Ward representative.

Ald. Edgar said he would never have heard of it, if it hadn't been for the East Ward representatives.

Ald. Dobbin claimed to have located a streak of offending oil on Water street, which to his mind, was patent to the most casual observer.

Ald. Green denied that a drop of Imperial oil had been used on Water street. He said that much misconception existed regarding the streets treated with the oil complained of and the amount used. It was used on the market square to good advantage.

Ald. Saunders said that the oil used in his neighbourhood bore a close resemblance to the quality of oil used by the city two or three years ago. To this Ald. Green replied that the oil used in the neighbourhood referred to by Ald. Saunders, was supplied by the British American Oil Company, and not by the Imperial Oil Company as was supposed.

Representative Heard.

Mr. Irwin of the Imperial Oil Company and Mr. Clancy, local representative of the same company, were heard regarding their product. Mr. Irwin presented a lucid account of the oil supplied by his company, dealing with its production from the time it left Mexico until it reached Peterborough. He claimed that an analysis would prove that the oil of the Imperial Oil Company would show at least seven per cent. more asphaltic content than that of the British American Oil Company. The more asphaltic content an oil contained the better it was for the road. The oil was not cheaper in price but was subjected to a lower freight rate due to a difference in shipping points. The product of the Imperial Oil Company was shipped from New Jersey and that of the British American Oil Company from Illinois. As regards injury to automobile tires, Mr. Irwin said that it was not the sulphur in the oil which affected tires but the petroleum. The road oil supplied by the Imperial Oil Company was free from such harmful properties and was manufactured from identically the same material as the asphalt for the streets was obtained. He admitted that the oil possessed a stronger odour. Mr. Irwin named a number of Ontario cities that were using oil supplied by his company. He said that in Western Ontario, the British American Oil Company was able to quote a slightly lower price as the difference in freight rates was in their favour the farther west they went.

Following Mr. Irwin's explanation Ald. Green announced his intention of relinquishing the authority vested in him at the outset of the year as regards the right to buy oil for the city in conjunction with the City Engineer.

On motion of Aldermen Weir and Dobbin it was decided to have an analysis made of the products of the British American oil, the Imperial Oil and the Crown Oil Companies and until such time as this detailed analysis is available, oil for the present use will be purchased from the British American Oil Company. Ald. Stratton's motion to have the immediate needs of the city equally divided between the British American Oil Company and the Imperial Oil Company failed to get a seconder.

Information Wanted.

Ald. Langford wanted to know if it would be possible to have a portion of Harvey street north, oiled, which was not included in the present list. Some of the aldermen asserted there was no traffic on the street to amount to anything.

Ald. Green informed the North Ward representative that it was practically impossible to undertake any more work of that nature as the appropriation was not large enough. He advised him to keep the street in mind next year and try and have it included in the regular list. It was now too late in the season to alter the present schedule.

Ald. Edgar knew of a case where a number of residents would be willing to pay for the oil if the city would undertake to apply it. This the committee contended would be establishing a precedent. The residents in question were paying for delete oil as it was and it would be unfair to expect them to pay for what they were really entitled to.

The matter of oiling extra pieces of streets in lieu of others already named was left in the hands of the chairman of the Board of Works and the City Engineer.

SLEPT WITH HIS LIFE BELT UNDER PILLOW

Mrs. J. W. Edwards, 488 Sherbrooke Street, has received a very interesting letter from her husband, Pioneer-Sergeant Edwards of the 39th Battalion, and for many years quartermaster-sergeant of the 57th Regiment. Describing the voyage of the 39th Battalion, Sergt. Edwards says:

"We got away from Montreal at 9.20 a.m.. After a sail down the beautiful St. Lawrence we arrived at Quebec. We just merely halted there, took on the mail, put our mail off, and proceeded on our way down the river until we arrived at Rimouski, where we put off our pilot. We passed the spot where the Empress of Ireland went down, down the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the banks of Newfoundland, Cape Race, and then off on our irregular course towards England.

The first day out we ran 192 miles, the second day 190, the third day 306, the fourth day 330, the fifth day 335, the sixth day 337, the seventh day 326, the eighth day 345, and we are now waiting patiently for the first glimpse of the shores of Old England.

We have had lifebelt and boat drill to-day in case we have to leave in a hurry. We have had beautiful weather all the way, meals, as you can see by the enclosed card, and beds accordingly. This Atlantic trip is very nice indeed, but seeing no land day after day, just that broad expanse of water, gets on my nerves, and I begin to long to see some land somewhere. I don't know what part of England we are striking for, but it will make no difference to me. I will try and accommodate myself to place and circumstances.

We have just come into contact with our escort, a torpedo-boat destroyer, a vicious-looking little devil, that looks after those submarines. She keeps running backward and forward across our track on the lookout for subs.

I slept with my lifebelt under my pillow last night, and I will do the same to-night. Oh, this is some life!

Later.—Believe me, it looks beautiful to see the green hills of Devonshire, high rolling land, with hedges around every field. Just across the river is the coasts of Cornwall, with her beautiful fields, some hedges, and strong fortifications, and the historic field where Admiral Drake played bowls at the time of the Spanish Armada. —Talk about boats—they are here by the score, all kinds and classes, from the speedy torpedo-boat destroyer to the super-Dreadnought.

I believe we are going to somewhere in the county of Kent.

Everybody on board, well.

Authorities Investigating Disappearance

The Old Gentleman Who Left Home of Friend at Buckhorn Has Not Been Located Yet.

In connection with the disappearance of the old gentleman, Van Syne, at Buckhorn, which was mentioned in the Examiner a week ago, there have not been any material developments so far. This morning Mr. Bishop, the old man at whose residence Van Syne was apparently last seen, was in the city and was for some time in consultation with Crown Attorney Hatton and Chief of Police Thompson, in the former's office, but Mr. Bishop does not seem to know anything more about the disappearance than was explained in the article last week.

According to the story, Van Syne came to this county from some point in the States a while ago in search of a daughter, who he had not seen since she was two years of age. The daughter he found to be married, and she is now Mrs. Hynes of Buckhorn. At least his story to her was so plausible that she fully believes that he is her long lost father. He related to her many things which her mother had often told her when alive.

It is understood that Van Syne had quite a sum of money always about his person. A week ago last Sunday he went to the home of Mr. Bishop to have dinner. He remained for supper and went to bed there. Mr. and Mrs. Hynes expected him home that evening and becoming uneasy, Mr. Hynes decided to go to Mr. Bishop's and see if he were still there, as the father was quite an old man. He got there about 9 o'clock and Van Syne was in bed. Mr. Bishop says the old man got up and left about 3 o'clock, after his son-in-law had left. Since that time nothing has been heard of him.

The theory has been advanced that Van Syne was of German extraction and the fact that he might be interned preyed so much upon his mind that he left the vicinity of his own accord. But the authorities cannot credit this theory as they believe he would have been seen somewhere before this time or heard from.

Mrs. Hynes came to the city on Tuesday and consulted Crown Attorney Hatton. The matter is now in the hands of the proper authorities and an investigation is in progress.

There has been a rumour about the city to-day that there was a man in the cells at the police station wanted for the murder of Van Syne, but Chief Thompson assured a reporter that such was not the case. The rumour probably received birth when Mr. Bishop of Buckhorn was known to be in Mr. Hatton's office with Chief Thompson and Mr. Hatton. It was found to be a difficult matter to carry on a conversation with Mr. Bishop as he was hard of hearing and everything had to be written for him.

Lipton Says U.S. Physicians Washed the Serbian Nation

Has Returned From Second Trip to the Little Country—Typhus Completely Checked—Were Nearly 300,000 Cases at One Time.

LONDON, July 21.—"Miraculous is the only proper adjective to apply to the work being done by American physicians and nurses in Serbia," said Sir Thomas Lipton following his return a few days ago from his second trip to the Near East with the hospital yacht Erin.

"As usual," continued Sir Thomas, "The Americans excel in organization and preventive measures. The French and British units are doing good work in the hospitals, but credit for the work of sanitation, which is rapidly making typhus a thing of the past, must go to the Americans, whose magnificent efforts have made them loved by every Serbian, from the King to the lowest peasant, all of whom seem fully to appreciate the efforts of the Red Cross in their behalf.

"When I was in Serbia on my first trip," continued Sir Thomas, "it was unsafe to travel in the country, which was then so badly infected from vermin as to make necessary the use of antiseptics night and morning. But on this trip no such precautions were necessary, thanks to the sanitation reforms enforced by Americans. The hospitals are now as clean as any to be found in Europe, while hotels and dwellings are beginning to observe sanitary regulations.

"At the height of the epidemic there were probably three hundred thousand cases of typhus, but many typhus hospitals now have been closed for lack of patients. At Gheyghell, where Dr. James F. Donnally, now Serbia's national hero, died, there were once 1,400 patients in the American hospital. Now there are only three that are suffering from typhus.

Washing a Whole Nation.

"At Uskub I saw in operation the machinery with which American physicians and sanitary experts are washing the whole nation. Near the town three long railroad trains were standing in the midst of a city of tents. From these tents there poured an army of naked men, carrying their clothing in their hands. Stopping at the first train they deposited their clothes in a car, where they were thoroughly sterilized. Then the owner proceeded to the bath car, where an attendant placed him under high pressure water pipes. When he was completely scrubbed, the next step was an inspection by an American physician, after which the bather received sterilized clothing.

"Members of the Turkish population, which is large in this part of Serbia, protested vigorously against diarobing for the bath, on the ground that such a procedure violated their religious principles, but without avail, for the American sanitary commission has complete power to enforce its regulations. After the army of men had been treated during the day the women and children were given baths during the night.

"The next day I saw a whole regiment inoculated against cholera with a speed and efficiency almost incredible to any one who does not understand American methods. Cholera may come again, but it is no longer feared.

Americans Saved Serbia.

"In brief, it can be said that American methods of prevention and cure have saved Serbia from what threatened at one time to be the worst [illegible] ever suffered by a modern nation.

"Dr. Edward W. Ryan has three thousand patients, mostly wounded, at Belgrade, in a hospital pronounced by experts to be of the best. Dr. Ryan has not fully recovered from his illness with typhus, but manages to direct the big hospital.

"The whole task is in charge of Dr. Richard P. Strong, of Harvard, to whom the lion's share of credit for the direction of the great work must be given. This is due as much to his magnetic personality as to his skill. While Dr. Strong was in Salonica, the Greek Queen sent for him to see the King."

Sir Thomas brought back with him on the Erin several American physicians and nurses convalescent with typhus.

While attempting to enter the straits of Messina during the night, the Erin was fired on, one shell striking near the yacht, which, unable to anchor in the deep water, cruised about until morning, when the commandant came on board and apologized. He explained that the gunners did not recognize the Erin as a hospital ship.

Sir Thomas came home ill, but is improving. When he is able to travel he expects to go to America to recuperate.

TURKISH ATTACKS REPULSED BY THE RUSSIANS

PETROGRAD, July 23.—The repulse of several strong Turkish attacks in the region of Muah, was reported in an official statement to-day dealing with the Caucasus fighting. The enemy was thrown back and forced to evacuate his positions at Kurmundy. The Russian troops are in pursuit.

HIS SHOULDER WAS DISLOCATED

PAVING ON PARK STREET

Street may have to be Widened—Pavement Will be 35 Feet From Curb to Curb

At last night's meeting of the Board of Works a letter was received from Mr. A. B. Oolville of the Peterborough Radial Railway Company, respecting the laying of rails on such portions of George and Park streets as may be paved this year. Permission from the Municipal Railway Board is required before the work can be undertaken. The regular formalities will be complied with and the work proceeded with at an early date.

Widen Park Street.

Ald. Dobbin pointed out that it would be necessary to widen Park street to the regulation width. This would necessitate cutting away some of the boulevards on the east side of the street.

Ald. Stratton was of the opinion that a twenty-five foot pavement would be ample. He took exception to any attempt that might be made to cut away the boulevards.

City Engineer Parson said it was proposed to make the street thirty-five feet from curb to curb and have the track laid in the centre of the right of way. Mr. Parsons did not think it would be necessary to cut into the boulevards to any appreciable extent. It was decided to leave the matter in the hands of the City Engineer. Steps will be taken to see that the tracks are laid in accordance with the plans of the City Engineer. The communication submitted was interpreted to read that the tracks would be relaid in identically the same place.

Mayor Buller moved that the matter be left in the hand of Chairman Ald. Green and City Engineer Parsons, who will see that the matter is presented to the Municipal Railway Board in proper form.

The New York Loan to Canada

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., July 22.— Hon. T. W. White, Minister of Finance, in discussing the Canadian loan of forty million, raised in New York, emphasised the fact that the proceeds of the loan are to be used for capital expenditures of the Dominion. The money is to be applied upon works and undertakings authorised and actually under construction at the present time. The government, the Minister of Finance explained, has made complete arrangements for its financial requirements until the end of the fiscal year, which closes on March 31st next, and that the London market will to the extent of the loan be relieved.

A LETTER FROM DRIVER LUTHER

Writing on July 8th from the front to his mother, Mrs. J. Luther, 139 Lansdowne Ave., Driver Sidney Luther of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade says:

Just received your welcome letter and was very glad to hear from you. I must say things are very quiet out here just now. We are having an easy time, but always on the lookout for trouble. I must thank you for the Examiners you sent me. They were sure welcome. Another thing I must tell you. There is a rumour goin garound here that we are going to get passes to England for a week but it sounds too good to be true, doesn't it. It would do us the world of good to get some change of air, but there is so much of that kind of talk that a fellow has to let it go in one ear and out of the other. Well, I guess I will close. Remember me to the children and the boys at the fire hall. Now, mother, don't forget that box or I will write you a letter like that hungry prisoner of war that I read about in the Examiners you sent.

Your loving son,

SID.

THE EXCURSION TRIPS OF THE "STONEY LAKE"

The popular summer excursion trips of the Stoney Lake Navigation Company to Lindsay and other outlying points, which were so much appreciated last year, has encouraged this steamboat company to continue them this season.

The first of the series took place on Monday last to Lindsay, per Str. Stoney Lake, and although the morning of the excursion opened very unpropitiously with rain, two hundred and twenty-five excursionists availed themselves of the trip. It was quite evident that a much larger number would have patronized the excursion had the day been more promising, but as it was the number who were undeterred by the wet weather was quite encouraging.

The next trip of the series will take place on Wednesday, July 26th, to Healey Falls, per Steamer Stoney Lake, with the round trip tickets selling at 60c. This is an all water trip, the distance to Healey Falls being over 60 miles, and covers an interesting section of the Trent Valley waters.

Wants a Share Of The Work

Local Cartage Company Discovers a Case of Discrimination

Messrs. Wedlock and Barbour, representing the Peterborough Fuel and Cartage Company, appeared before the Board of Works Committee last evening. They asked for a fair share of the city's work upon the grounds that they were heavy ratepayers, and claimed a payroll of approximately $300 a week. Mr. Wedlock asserted that competitors were frequently required to work overtime in order to accomplish the work allotted by the city.

Mr. Wedlock was advised to take the matter up with the engineering department and an effort would be made to see that the company secured a fair share of the work.

The matter was left in the hands of the chairman of the Board of Works to see that the wish of the Board is carried out.

Authoress' Blighted Love Told in Letter

Myrtle Reed's "Death Note" Tells Pitiful Story of Husband Who Gets Her Fortune.

NEW YORK, July 22.—Four years ago the love story of Myrtle Reed, the author, who had immortalised her husband, James Sydney McCulloch, in prose and verse, came to a tragic end when she committed suicide in "Paradise Flat."

During the five years of her married life her "model husband," as she called McCullough, was believed to have furnished the inspiration for "Lavender and Old Lace," "The Master's Violin," and other love stories from her pen.

Mystery surrounded her death and an effort was made to hush up the suggestion that she was convinced that her husband no longer loved her. A note addressed to her aged mother made all clear. It was submitted to the Surrogate yesterday as a will in favour of the mother. Mrs. Reed left about $91,000. The letter read:

"Dearest Mother: After five years of torment I have set myself free. I suppose you'll think it's cowardly, but I cannot help it. I cannot bear it any longer. Last night was the twelfth anniversary of our meeting. He was to come home early and bring me some flowers, and instead of that he came home at half-past 1 so drunk he couldn't stand up.

"Last year my birthday and the anniversary of our engagement were the same way. This morning he went out of town without even waking me up to say good-bye to me or telling me where he was going, or when he would be back. All I asked of him was that he should come home sober at half past 6 as other men do, but he refuses to give me even this. I am [illegible] exasperated, drugged.

"I enclose two bank savings books. This is for you and father and for nobody else under any circumstances whatever, aside from the provision I have made for you in my will. I've tried my best, mother. I've tried to bear it bravely and to rise above it, and not to worry, but I cannot. I loved my husband so until he made me despise him. I should have done this five years ago, only you and father needed me.

"You've been the dearest father and mother that anybody ever had, and my being dead won't make any difference in my loving you. My will is in Mr. Fowler's vault. Oh, mother, I've loved so much, I've tried so hard, I've worked so hard, and I've failed, failed, failed. Forgive me, please. With love always,

"Myrtle."

McCullough said that his wife had probably taken her life while mentally unbalanced.

"Have you any comment to make on the letter to her mother?" he was asked.

"Oh, I could tell you a long story if I wanted to," said he carelessly.

As the letter was not witnessed and was written by typewriter, Circuit Judge Winds refused to admit it, and the husband was appointed administrator of the entire estate, instead of the mother.

Motor-Driven Handcars The Latest Caper in Section Work

Mr. Delahaye of the Fraserville Section of the G.T.R. Breezed Through the City Last Night Illustrating the Advanced Ideas They Obtain on His Line—The Old Order Passeth.

Wonders never ceasing; constantly increasing; till at length you hardly can believe your eyes.

So ran the words of the "Every William Has His Little Tell" song, from the "Ginger Bread Man," in the happy, untroubled days when the world walked in a fool's paradise over the inactive but simmering volcano of the Teuton Cyclops hammering out weapons for a world war. All of which is remote from the idea of a motor-driven handcar which passed through the city last night. It is used by Mr. Delahaye, section foreman of the G.T.R. on the section from Fraserville half-way to Peterborough.

It is simply an ordinary, everyday handcar, which the ordinary every-day section man would have been content to pump in the same way as of old. But Mr. Delahaye had imported a special motor made for handcars, with a short belt connecting the motor shaft with the shaft of the gearing beneath the car platform.

The motor handcar is extensively used in the United States, and will enable the section men to cover their territory more rapidly, although it is not guaranteed to do the actual work of keeping the roadbed in good condition. Hardly! When the motor is under way, it can work up a very comfortable speed, and the idea may come to be more extensively used by railwaymen.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

Mr. J. P. Hickey desires to have Elm street repaired, claiming that it suffered considerable as a result of the recent rains. The matter was referred to City Engineer Parsons.

IN GOOD REPAIR.

A number of Hunter street ratepayers take exception to the proposal to pave Hunter street between Water and Sheridan streets. That portion of the street is in good condition and has been oiled. Ald. Stratton brought the matter up at last night's meeting of the Board of Works. The Committee did not feel inclined to have the contract altered.

WILL OIL THE STREET.

Ald. Stratton asked to have oiled that portion of Hunter street from Rogers street to the top of the hill. Ald. Green intimated that it was the intention of the council to have Hunter street oiled as far as the Lift Lock.

A PRESSURE GUAGE.

The waterworks superintendent has been authorized to purchase a recording pressure guage for the pumping station. This action was decided upon by the Utilities Commission.

POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

A meeting of the Police Commissioners will be held to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock, when business of a routine character will be disposed of.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Last night was the 1,000th meeting of the council since Stratford was incorporated as a city. Frank A. Copus, eight years secretary of the Stratford Board of Trade, has resigned, and ex-Mayor John Stevenson has been appointed in his stead.

WILL BE INSURED.

All citizens of Windsor now serving at the front, who are bonafide residents and have others dependent on them, will be insured at the city's expense.

A CIVIC WELCOME.

A civic welcome was given Captain T. G. Delamere at Stratford when he arrived on sick leave from the front.

ENDORSED AGREEMENT.

The ratepayers of Welland sanctioned the agreement with the street railway company by which the company pays $60,000 in twenty yearly instalments as its share of the cost of street paving.

WILL ENFORCE BY-LAW.

THIS PRECOCIOUS GENERATION

WILLIE looked solemn and was evidently thinking. Papa was reading and mentally shut in from the world.

"Papa," said Willie.

"What is it, son?"

"Do they get whalebone out of whales?"

"Yes, my son."

A moment more of thought and then:

"If we were in Cork would we be corkers?"

No answer.

Another slight interval.

"Papa, are boys that shoot crackers cracker-jacks?"

Papa still silent. Discouraged with his quest for information in that direction, Willie turned to his ma.

"Ma, when women wore hoops, did Indian squaws wear war-whoops?"

Papa turned with emphasis: "Willie, it is time for you to go to bed."

Willie started, but turned at the door and innocently asked: "Is this house on sleepers because we sleep in it?"

Reign of Terror in Turkey Plots and Counter-Plots

NEW YORK, July 22.—A cable to the Tribune from Milan says despatches from Salonica paint a sombre picture of conditions in Turkey, particularly in Constantinople. In Adrianople, sedition is spreading among the regiments of the garrison, which refuse to leave for Constantinople because they are afraid they will be sent to the Dardanelles.

A reign of terror exists in Adrianople. It is caused by emissaries of the Young Turk Committee. When Enver Pasha arrived there, a plot against his life was discovered. More than fifty officers and soldiers were arrested, conveyed by night across the Jungia River, and shot. During his whole sojourn, Enver Pasha did not dare to leave Konak, except at night, and then only when escorted by a number of troops and secret service agents.

In Constantinople, Adrianople, and other towns, an anti-Christian agitation is being fomented by the Young Turks, whose committee is sitting continuously. Greeks and Armenians go in terror of their lives.

The committee is sending emissaries to various places in Europe, Asia, and Africa, especially Egypt, Tripoli, and Tunis, to stir up revolts or arrange for the assassination of prominent persons, among them Venizelos, the Greek Premier, and the Sultan of Egypt.

The secret police of Constantinople are hunting night and day for emissaries of the Liberal League, who are said to have arrived at the capital to assassinate Enver Talaat and other chiefs of the Young Turks.

Boy of Fourteen Builds a Submarine of Own Invention

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 21.—Beneath the placid waters of Lake of the Isles before summer is over, while canoeists paddle about on the surface unaware, there may glide a real submarine. Although almost as intricate in detail as the U terrors of the Teutons, it will be a miniature and its inventor and builder has purposely desisted from equipping it with the torpedoes such as have wrought havoc with shipping in the water zones of warfare.

The idea of building the submarine first came to him soon after the outbreak of the European war, when the newspapers were filled with tales of destruction. If submarines could be built on a large scale in navy yards, he soliloquised, there was no reason why one could not be built on a small scale by a boy with some ingenuity who was handy with tools.

A search of the scientific papers followed, and in one he discovered plans of a type of submarine being constructed for the United States. He studied it until he thought he had a fair grasp of the general principles of construction, and read everything that could be had that dealt with the underwater boats.

Then he put the mechanical drawing instruction he had received in school to practical use. Taking the plans of the big submarine in the scientific journal as a model, he drew plans for his own boat. He found that there must be some radical changes because of the difference in size and that the most serious problem that confronted him was to devise mechanical means of guiding the crawless boat.

At times in the planning of the boat, the difficulties seemed almost insurmountable. They used to keep him awake at nights, he says, but one by one, with the aid of more reading and wracking of a fertile brain with a mechanical bent, they disappeared. At last the plans were far enough advanced, and after several months of planning the building operations began.

Even after the materials for the little diver were at hand, and it was in the process of construction, more changes were discovered to be necessary, and several new starts were made.

At present, the shell of the boat is completed and the motor is in place and attached to the propeller. Trial trips in the bathtub and on the surface of Lake of the Isles proved that all was well so far as the work had progressed.

The first trial of the boat as a diver is soon to be made, and to judge from the thoroughness with which its builder has gone into details in planning, it should be a brilliant success. Just now he is going to do it, and with what mechanism, the boy defends as a secret, but he is willing to say that the boat will be driven by electricity. It has a small but strong motor, and the power will be furnished by a battery of dry cells. If it works as planned, it will dive and come to the surface by its own mechanism. The duration of the cruise under water can be regulated before it plunges. It is complete in every way, except for the torpedo tubes, and these are not needed on the peaceful inland waters of a Minneapolis park lake.

According to experts the force of the rotation of the earth on the gyroscopic compass which has been adopted by the United States navy, is 29 times as great as the force of magnetism on the magnetic needle.

INVITED TO PLAY THREE DAYS AT THE ISLAND

The band of the 57th Regiment has been paid a signal honour in the form of an invitation for a three-days' visit to Hanlan's Point, Toronto, on Saturday, July 31st, Sunday, August 1st, and Monday, August 2, the latter being the Toronto Civic Holiday.

Only the recognized leading bands in Canada are invited to play at the Island, and that the 57th should be invited for three days speaks well for their reputation.

The band will discuss the question at a meeting to-night.

RUSSIAN ARMY OF 250,000 WAS READY FOR DARDANELLES

NEW YORK, July 19.—Among the passengers arriving here on the Bergensfjord was Alfred C. Berghoff, American representative of an agricultural machinery firm, who had been in Russia since the war started.

"About two weeks before I left Odessa," Mr. Berghoff said, 'about 250,000 troops were assembled there. They were embarking for the Dardanelles when word of a possible change in Roumania's attitude caused a prompt and hurried revision of projects. The embarkation halted and these troops were held at Odessa when I left, ready for use against Roumania should she show signs of favouring the Teutonic Allies.

"I anticipate one of the bitterest battles of the entire war if the Germans attempt to take Warsaw," Mr. Berghoff added. "I had the opportunity to take a look at the defences that have been thrown up around the city. On all sides there has been built an extensive system of well defended trenches. About eight miles from the city the inner trenches end, the next trenches bein gat a distance of about twenty miles. The space between the two lines is an open plain, swept bare of all obstructions and commanded by many concealed guns which could execute fearful slaughter."

Mr. Berghoff said that the Turkish cruiser Medjidieh, which was sunk by a mine opposite Odessa in April, had been raised by the Russians, placed in a dry dock and will be fitted out as a Russian war ship.

SCRAPING THE BOWL

WHEN mother lets us scrape the bowl, after the cake is done,
We take it out into the yard, and sit down in the sun
Where we can see to get it all—because it's good to eat!
She doesn't have to wash it when we clean it with a spoon.
Sister's a little thing, but myt how spoon goes a-whiz!
I got the first scrape: but I'm scared she's going to get the last.
Well, anyway, when we're grown up, all big and old and tall,
We are going to make a cake to eat—and not to cook at all.

"TAXES AND UNEMPLOYMENT"

Sir: Taxes are about due, and I see by the paper that the penalty is to be enforced if they are not paid when due. This may be necessary to secure funds for joy trips for our aldermen, and other necessary expenses. But what is to become of the small property owner out of employment, and no funds to pay taxes with?

I understand that enemies of our country are occupying responsible and other positions in some of our suthend factries, which have received assistance from the city. If these manufacturers are not loyal enough to the city which assisted them, and the country under which flag they prosper, to discharge these alien enemies, cannot our city fathers prevail or force them to do so and thus give employment to loyal married citizens and tax payers? These citizens have indirectly contributed their hard earned cash to start these manufacturers on the road to prosperity.

If nothing in this line can be done, will not our city officials arrange relief from adding what is practically compound interest on unpaid taxes during war time.

Have Completed A Big Contract

Messrs. Morrow and Beatty Have Finished the Abitibi Power and Paper Co.'s Plant.

Messrs. Morrow & Beatty, the local engineering contractors, have completed their big contract in constructing the Abitibi Power and Paper Company's plant on the Abitibi River.

The work commenced in April, 1913, and the plant is spoken of by the Canadian Engineer as one of Canada's largest hydraulic developments for direct consumption.

The Engineer says: 'The plant is in many respects one of the most unique of its kind. It is particularly well arranged, and is equipped with most modern and complete pulp and paper making machinery."

Many Necks Bent at Harmless Baloons

Several illuminated balloons floating over the city about nine o'clock last night attracted a great deal of attention from the George street crowd who stretched and bent their necks trying to decide whether it was carrying bombs or not. The absence of the whirr of a propeller suggested that it was last summer's star shining as brightly as ever, but the final conclusion was that it was an ordinary balloon. They were donated by Grafton & Co. to a local garden party last night, and of course were sent skyward as an extra attraction.

EXAMPLE TO WHOLE OF ARMY

"The General says your latest deed has set an example to the whole British Army. Men of the Black Watch, you have made for yourselves a name that will live for ever!"

The grime of the battle was on them, smoke stains, mud stains, and blood; tunics were torn to tatters, bonnets had disappeared; their ranks had been slashed to ribbons by shrapnel, machine-gun, and steel. But they had broken the German line, and what else mattered?

They had broken the German line near La Bassee; had done single-handed what a whole brigade had failed to do. They had done it, bayonet in hand.

The Heart of the Foe.

By a brilliant charge, a charge of colossal courage in the face of stupendous odds(they had carved a way for the British troops to the very heart of the foe!

For hours the Black Watch had lain in reserve, listening to the roaring of the guns and watching with straining glances the British attempts to break through the German line.

Repeatedly, desperately, English and Irish corps had rushed to the assault, only to be hurled back headlong. Those trenches three hundred yards away, with shell-swept ploughed fields before them, utterly naked of cover, seemed to be impregnable.

A last broken wave of troops surged back; there was an ominous lull in the firing, and then the great British guns, having gathered up all their breath, launched forth in an outburst of sound that blotted out earth and sky.

The world was a whirling blurr, the sunlight was dancing blackness to those in the ice of that uproar: but all of them knew that it heralded some great deed. As for the Black Watch, they grimly removed their knapsacks and fitted bayonet to rifle. It was their hour which was at hand!

To Almost Certain Death.

As suddenly as if turned off at a tap the deafening thunder ceased. Half a minute of sweating silence. Then the clear, cold call of a whistle shrilled through the wrecking air.

The men of the Black Watch bounded to their feet. With a roar they lept the parapet of their trench. Keeping splendid line for the whole hundred yards of them, they sprang towards the Germon position three hundred yards away.

"Not a man of us but knew we were going to almost certain death," says one of storming party, who now lies wounded in Edinburgh. "But no thought of that held us back."

Remember the Lusitania.

As they dashed forward into the open, through the cloggy soil, every German gun belched out. In struggling swathes they fell, but above the roar of the battle, like a Valwyrie's call to victory, rose the voice of the pipes chanting "The Highland Laddie," and, cheering, the line rushed on.

Leaping ahead like lions ran the officers, armed like their men with bayonet and rifle, and the German sharpshooters took awful toll of their number.

"Come on, C Company," yelled a Captain in fierce excitement: "Remember the Lusitania!" But just as he steadied his tride to hurl the battle-cry back to the charging ranks a bullet struck him.

"Remember the Lusitania!" In his swooning ears as he fell came the regiment's answering roar, and over the spot where he lay the Black Watch charged, fired with a fresh incentive.

Germans Run.

The way lay uphill now, and rolling smoke filled the air. Men stumbled headlong into the shell-holes and lurched into broken barbed wire barriers as wanderers through fields in darkness blunder among hedges and dykes. It was like a midnight steeplechase, the last thirty yards of that charge, except for the blasting death that smote from behind the cloud.

The skirl of the pipes rose in the long, stern swell that bids the Scots men "Close!" and then the last of the pipers, a mere lad he was, dropped in his tracks — only ten yards from the trenches!

Across that last ten yards the Scotsmen raced, each striving to be first to drive home the gleaming steel.

But hundreds of the bayonets went thirsty. Only a handful of Germans had awaited the charge. The rest had retreated a minute before to the second line of trenches.

Trapped!

Forward the Black Watch surged to storm these too, and then they realized they were in a trap. A barbed wire entanglement faced them, appalling high, and almost untouched by the British shells, and as they wrenched at the hateful strands, hacked at them with blade or but, or frenziedly groped for wire-clippers German machine guns from cunningly hidden positions opened on them a terrific enfilading fire.

It seemed as though the Black Watch must retreat or be wiped out. But grimly they stuck to the ground they had won, blazing away and praying the while for reserves.

Never a Man Faltered.

[illegible] and while regulars swore and wondered they swung from their place of shelter and marched towards the zone of death.

"With bayonets fixed," says one of them, "our men advanced like veterans, and although bullets and shells rained thick upon us, never a man faltered. Chums fell on all sides, yet never a man hung back, and the way we advanced has been spoken of by regualrs from the General downwards to the meanest private. In fact, some regulars were betting that we wouldn't cross the field, but they didn't know the 'Jocks.'"

Shot, but Cool.

"The regulars in the attacking line thought no regiments would dare come up to support them," says another Black Watch Territorial, "and they cheered like mad when they saw the kilts of the 'Jocks' coming up the field at the gallop. We came up as if we were on parade."

But it was no parade experience that. "As soon as our company got into the open our casualties commenced," a third Territorial says. "One Kirriemuir chap was blown to pieces, and another two wounded. The chap's body was blown over beside me. I shall never forget some of the sights I saw that day. Poor Milne was next. About a hundred yards further on he was shot through the hips. He turned to tell me when another shot got him in the head. He never knew what stuck him.

Lay Down Among the Dead.

The support came just in time. While the Territorials crouched in the shallow trenches "under the heaviest shell fire 'imaginable' the attacking force leapt to the assault once more.

At many points the Germans gave back, and length after length of reserve trench was captured. But around one section the fighting raged no less than for eight hours!

"Now we gained the upper hand."

Then the men of the Black Watch, worn out with heroic slaughter, lay down among the dead of both armies, and slept till morning on the red field of victory.

Great Battle For Warsaw In Its Decisive Stages

No British Ships Have Been Sunk In The Past Week

RUSSIANS TO MAKE SUPREME EFFORT TO STOP THE GERMAN ADVANCE ON WARSAW WHICH IS GROWING SERIOUS

Officers of the Russian General Staff Say the Battle is to be on a Vaster Scale Than That on the Dneister---Germans Unable to Break Through Outer Fortifications of the City.

ENEMY SACRIFICING LARGE NUMBERS OF MEN

Special Morning Cable:

PETROGRAD, July 23.—Russians are to make a supreme effort to stop the German advance on Warsaw. The situation is the most serious since the war began. Officers of the Russian General Staff say the battle is to be on a vaster scale than that on the Dneister.

The great battle for Warsaw has reached its decisive stages. South of the Vistula the Russians have withdrawn to their strongly fortified outer defences extending from Novogeorgeiwsk to Ivangorod, and are checking the Austro-German advance. North of the river, the right arm of the Russian army is holding Von Hindenburg at the Narew River and inflicting severe losses by sudden jabs against the German line. Despite a terrific bombardment, the Germans have been unable to break down or break through the outer works of Warsaw lying west of the city near Blonie. For forty-eight hours an avalanche of explosive shells has been crashing against the Russian redoubts, perfected during the winter months, but without serious damage. With minimum expenditure of ammunition, the Russian infantry have beaten back every assault, and the War Office is confident that the western approaches to the city cannot be stormed. The Germans are sacrificing men on a scale only comparable to the Galician campaign. Von Hindenburg in particular has driven whole battalions to certain slaughter against Russian strongholds north of Warsaw, according to official despatches. The Russian losses thus far have been comparatively light.

ITALIAN ARMIES DESTROY MOUNTAIN FORTIFICATIONS OF AUSTRIA NEAR GORIZIA

No British Ships Have Been Sunk by the Enemy in the Week Ending Yesterday---The First Week Since War Began---French Armies in Sight of Rhine.

Special Morning Cable:

ROME, July 23.—Italian armies are driving ahead their heavy artillery destroying the mountain fortifications of the Austrians near Gorizia and Tolmino.

LONDON, July 23.—No British ships have been sunk by German submarines in the week ending yesterday. This is the first week since the war began that none have been sunk.

LONDON, July 23.—French troops occupied positions north of Munster after severe fighting. Progress brings the French armies within sight of the Rhine.

LONDON, July 23.—In the report last night General Hamilton at the Dardanelles stated that the Turks fled in disorder before the latest British attacks. Reports add "We are progressing daily."

LONDON, July 23.—Several victories over the Turkish and Arab forces in the Garden of Eden District was reported in official despatches last night. Many prisoners were taken.

BERLIN, July 23.—Three German airmen were brought down by two French monoplanes along the Thann river. Bavarian troops repulsed hot enemy attacks in the Vosges. Near the Bug River Austrians are storming Russian positions, capturing three thousand prisoners.

PETROGRAD, July 23.—Grand Duke Nicholas sent an inspiring message to the Russian troops battling to save Warsaw to-day.

BERLIN, July 23.—German armies again forced the Russians to retreat south of the Vistula toward Warsaw. The line now reaches the Fortress of Ivangorod.

ROME, July 23.—It is reported here that Bulgaria permitted Germany to send ammunition through Bulgarian territory to Turkey under pretense of Red Cross supplies.

LONDON, July 23.—Premier Borden is visiting British headquarters in France and has inspected the Canadian troops.

LONDON, July 23.—Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton reported to the War Office this evening that he had made further advance against the Turks on the Gallipoli Peninsula. British forces captured a redoubt with "insignificant losses" according to the general.

Austrians Lose 8,000 in Week On the Isonzo

GENEVA, via Paris, July 23.—A despatch to the Tribune from Villalch says:

"The Austrian losses since July 13 along the Isonzo have been 8,000, including 1,100 taken prisoners. On the Cadore front 1,800 prisoners have been taken, and in the Carnic Alps 2,300.

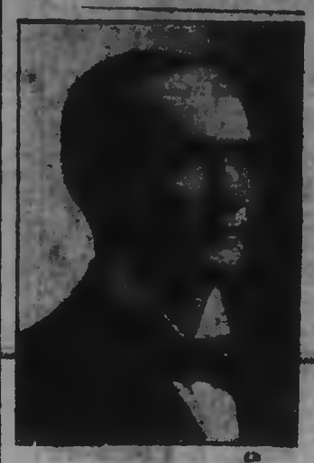
"The Austrian front on the Isonzo has been pierced at three points, Tolmino, St. Lucas and St. Avre.

"The Italians continue to progress in Val Sugana.

"With the aid of aeroplanes the Italians located several Austrian batteries near Revereto and succeeded in destroying them.

ITALY IS ORGANIZING FOR LONG WAR

ROME, July 23.—The National Munitions committee held its first meeting yesterday under the presidency of Premier Salandra. A number of proposals were adopted for the insuring of a continuous supply of munitions in the event of a long war and for the organizing of the industries which produce other supplies for the army.



Major Clarkson James, secretary to Lieut.-Col. Pyne, Minister of Education in Ontario, who has been given the military rank of major. He is in England with his chief in connection with Ontario's gift of a hospital.

Foe Is Uneasy Over Future

Germany Begins Movement to Keep Markets After the War.

LONDON, July 23.— The Morning Post's Amsterdam correspondent says:

"In German industrial circles great uneasiness prevails about the suggestion in the allied States to exclude German experts from the world market after the war.

"One result is that the formation at Berlin of a central export office to promote the interests of German export trade after the war is being suggested by the industrial union and central association for German industry."

$35,000 IN Greenbacks Hid Under Boulder

WINFIELD, Kan., July 23.—Thirty-five thousand dollars in greenbacks is concealed under a boulder which overhangs the railroad track near Bald Knob, Col. It has been there twenty years. A band of outlaws concealed it, were captured and imprisoned and were never able to return and take the fortune from the cache.

So says Harry Rhoades, for fifty years a resident on the border. He was in the oil fields and cattle country when it was infested by outlaws and train robbers and knew many of them.

Several years after the money was hidden Rhoades learned where it was buried from a man, who confided in him that he was once a member of a gang of outlaws. He was old and unable to stand the fatigue of a long search and because he liked Rhoades told him of the fortune. He offered to split if Rhoades would hunt for it.

Rhoades and a companion sought to locate the money. The search proved futile. The topography of the locality had been changed in twenty years and without exact information it was almost a hopeless task. Rhoades believes the money is still there.

The plainsman is too old now to hunt for the buried money. But he is willing to stake any man who wants to make the search. He tells how the money was hidden:

"The $35,000 in greenbacks was obtained by outlaws. It was necessary for them to cache the money at once. They climbed the bluff near Bald Knob, put the money in a cleft in a rock and then with crowbars turned a large boulder on top of the cleft.

"The money was drapped in a piece of buckskin and encase in copper," he says. "I know it has never been recovered, and perhaps never will be, for it would be necessary now to remove a vast amount of accumulated earth and debris. Still, I'm willing to take a chance and if any man wants to donate his services I'll grubstake him and pay for a couple of men to go out there and start digging. It's worth the risk because the greenbacks are there and the man who finds them would be on easy street."

Several years ago a banker living in Winfield paid $1,500 to a man who claimed to know the location of the greenbacks for a map which he said would show where the money was hidden. The banker gathered an outfit, went to Bald Knob and spent almost a year in the hunt. But the map proved a fake and he threw it away and continued the search without guidance.

Much of the debris has been torn up since Rhoades made his attempt to find the money by other men who have searched. And Rhoades believes it would be much easier now to find the heavy boulder than it was ten years ago.

TIME FOR ACTION, NOT NOTES, AMERICAN PATIENCE WEARIES

NEW YORK, July 23.—Under the caption of "The end of words," the Tribune, yesterday morning says editorially:

More than two months have now passed since the American citizens on the Lusitania were murdered by German officers and men. The crime itself was one of the most unparalleled acts of brutality of which history has any record.

Now for the third time the Government of the United States is to dispatch a note to Germany asking the Imperial Government to make reparation for a foul murder and give assurance that henceforth American citizens may sail the seas in safety, when complying with international law.

In the whole history of international relations there is no record of patience, forbearance, indurance to equal that shown by the United States in recent wars. More than this, if there were the smallest prospect of benefit to humanity by a prolongation of the exchange of words it is certain that thet American patience would be adequate for further trial.

But there is no such prospect. The note that now goes forth is the last sacrifice of a great nation to the cause of international amity and pacific relations. When it has gone, American resources for conciliation are at an end. If the German Government shall again refuse to meet the issue, again evade the question and seek to put upon a free people the shackles of its own purposes to bend us to its alleged "necessity," then diplomacy is bankrupt, then the greatest good-will any people has even shown another will have proved without avail.

The message we are sending is not in any formal sense an ultimatum. It is not a promise or a threat, whatever wise and necessary warning it may convey.

Whatever be the text of the President's message the real communication of the American people to the German must be: "Do you mean to make war upon us?" And to this question words alone can be no answer. We are then, for better or for worse, at the end of words.

THIS LETTER SHOWS SPIRIT OF FRANCE

Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, President of the Ontario Branch of the Secours National, has received from Monsieur Gabriel Louis Jaray, General Delegate of the French American Committee, a letter enclosing a copy of a letter from a private soldier, Georges Belaud, to his wife, printed by direction of the Society of Men of Letters and of the Century Club.

"The Society of the Men of Letters contrists the letter of Georges Belaud, French workman without education, with the manifestos of the 'intellectual' Germans as an expression of French feeling struggling against the barbarians for the humanity and liberty of the world."

"My Dear Yvonne:

"Do not worry, I have good hopes of seeing you again as well as my dear Raymond.

"I beg you to take care of yourself as well as my boy, for you know I will never forgive you if anything happens to you or to him.

"Now if by chance anythink happens to me — for after all we are at war, and in truth we run some risk—I hope that you will be brave, and remember if I die I place all my confidence in you and ask you to live to bring up my son like a man of courage and give him as good an education as you can with the means at your disposal.

"And above all you will tell him when he grows big that his father died for him, or for a cause which will be of service to him and to all generations to come.

"Now my dear Yvonne all this is only a simple precaution and I expect to be there to aid you in this task, but as I have already said one does not know what may happen. In any case, we all depart in good spirits and in the firm hope of conquering.

"For you my dear Yvonne, remember that I have always loved you and that I love you always no matter what happens.

"As soon as you can, set out for Fontenay, for on my return I shall prefer to find you there; and once more I count upon you to be courageous, and I do not offer you any further suggestions for I know it would be superfluous.

"Your dear husband who embraces you warmly as well as my dear little Raymond.

GEORGES."

World's Greatest Multiplies

A LITTLE boy was once overheard saying to his pet rabbit:

"How much is seven times seven?"

There being no response from the rabbit, the boy said:

"How much is four times four?"

Still there was no response.

"Now I will give you an easy one. How much is two times two?"

Still the rabbit refused to respond.

"Well," said the boy, "I know father was fibbing when he said rabbits are the greatest multipliers in the world."

The Superiority of Tone

In Columbia Double-Disc Records

is due to the PATENTED and EXCLUSIVE COLUMBIA PROCESS OF Manufacture.

Columbia Records are BUILT-UP. Instead of economising and using one mixture for the whole record, Columbia records are made in THREE LAYERS, using the cheaper material in the centre only where it doesn't count in the reproduction. The best and most expensive material the world can provide is used on the outer surface on which the sound wave or music is engraved.

THAT'S WHY COLUMBIA RECORDS SOUND BETTER and WEAR LONGER—the same difference in value as there is between an ordinary pine and an expensive built-up oak door.

You are not getting the utmost value for your money or the best out of your machine—no matter what make—unless you use Columbia records.

Of Course, Columbia Records are made in Canada.

If you have never tried Columbia Records, ask to hear the following selections. We will gladly play them and any others for you.

AN EXCHANGE OF GERMANS AND RUSSIANS

BERLIN, (by wireless telegraph to Sayville, L.I. July 23.)—The Overseas News Agency to-day gave out the following:

"Negotiations between Germany and Russia for the exchange of incapacitated prisoners of war finally have been successful, after many fruitless efforts. This is due largely to the work of Mr. James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador at Berlin.

"The suggestion to exchange the prisoners by transports with escorts has been abandoned. The prisoners will be forwarded through Sweden by way of Karungi. Exchange stations have been selected, and the Swedish government has undertaken to transport German and Russian prisoners to the frontier at the same time.

"An agreement has been reached for the designation by the Danish Red Cross of men to inspect prisoners' camps in Russia and Germany for the purpose of determining conditions there. Three Danish officials will inspect the German camps and three others will go to Russia."

Five Hundred of Garibaldi's Crew Were Saved

BARI, via Paris, July 23. —More than five hundred of the crew of the Italian cruiser Giuseppe Garibaldi, sunk on Monday by an Austrian submarine, were saved. This leaves only about fifty who are missing and who probably were drowned.

Survivors say that the Giuseppe Garibaldi was attacked by three submarines which came from the direction of Ragus, and Spalate, in Dalmatia. The Italian war ship opened fire on the submersibles, one of which is believed to have been sunk.

"It's the Panhandle Kid," sez he. "I've been tryin' to find out exactly what our rights are and the last time I was down to Elliot, the sheriff told me that the Governor of Kansas had offered a thousand dollars reward for him, and that he had been seen in these parts. He said that the government also had a reward out for him, and if our organization could get a chance at him, it would be a fine thing."

"If he's been around here," says I "the odds are that he's thrown in with Big Jeff and Panther Emmons, so they're the ones for you to get track of."

"..hat's what I think," sez Bradin, "and we give the Wold Crick ranch a look-over every day or so."

"How did he get that scar on his lip," sez I.

"I don't know how he got it," sez Bradin, "except that a bullet burned it there when his face was turned sideways. Just keep this to yourself and if you can put our organization on the track, you'll get your share."

After a few words with Bradin, I started back and Tom Smith hung like a millstone around my neck. This settled it! If he did have a ward out for him, there was no more use in talkin' about his settlin' down and tryin' to get respectable. It was Mexico or Canada and he couldn't start too soon. It was goin' to be hard on Kate, but she had been gettin' temyered the last two years, and I reckoned 'at this was what she was gettin' tempered to stand.

It was late in the afternoon when I came down the west bank of the Red Deer Crick towards the Horseshoe, and some twitch of the curiosity took me around by way of the hill where Kate did her signallin' to Tom Smith. It seamed mighty pitiful to me that all the heart throbs she had sent out with her flashes would be wasted, and I rode along slow, lookin' up at the hill and wonderin' if the cards Fate dealt us were stacked, or if nothin' but a lot o' luck and a little skill counted after all. The pony was tired and just shuffled along without makin' any noise, the timber was thick, and as I glanced up through the leaves, I saw a man crouchin' near the top of the hill. I just caught a glimpse of him through a tiny break; but he seemed to be watchin' something, so I hopped off, let the reins fall and proceeded to scout him.

When I got close enough, I saw he was a half breed, but a fine lookin' man. I got out my gun and crept up the little wash he was in, and he didn't hear me until I was within a hundred feet of him. I threw my gun on him and put a finger on my lips. He held up his right hand palm open towards me and grinned friendly. His grin was so natural friendly that it surprised me some, but I hurried on up to him as noiseless as possible, and he seemed to think everything was goin' just about as he'd have chose to have it.

When I got beside him, he gave way for me a little, and I looked down through a bush into a small cupped-out-pace. A big man with a heavy face and a scar under his eye was seated on a stone lookin' a little ashamed of himself, and in the centre stood Kate talkin' to a short one. The short one was wearin' goat chaps and a coat, but I knew who it was the minute I took one look.

Kate was standing with her hand on Placido's head and her own head was held more haughty 'n I'd ever seen it. The one in goat chaps, which I knew was Belle Stern, commonly known as Banty, was speakin', and her voice sure had snap in it. I listened to [illegible] brother, and I knew the' was four times as much devil in her as in him.

"That's all I have to say," she sez, "neither you nor any other woman'll ever have him. He was a fool when I took charge of him, an utter fool; but I kept him straight, and I kept straight for him, and no other woman can have him. I know about your coming out here, and I know how you've thrown yourself at him ever since. You think he cares for yuh? Huh, any woman in the world can wind him around her finger, when I'm not near. He came back here to find me, I know he did, he cannot live without me and he knows it. He ran away because he shot my brother and he knew how we held together; but he had to come back, and he'll never marry any woman but me— so you might as well give him up."

"He is not bound to me in any way," sez Kate, quiet and cold, "so I can not give him up; but if you will tell me where you can be found I shall tell him the first chance I get, and I shall tell no one else."

Kate looked down at her the same as if she were sightin' along a rifle, and I'd have given a purty to have seen Banty's eyes. From the set of her head, I knew they were shootin' fire. "Do you mean that you don't care for him?" asked Banty, after a time.

A queer, bitter, scornful smile came to Kate's lips. "I mean that I would never fight for any man, and least of all, one who had to be fought for," she said, as though she was stickin' in a knife and twistin' it around.

Banty drew a full breath and then said in a steady tone: 'You don't know what you'll do before you've finished. I've lived more like a man than a woman, but I still feel like a woman. I'll allus feel like a woman until he marries some other woman; and then I'll—no, I never could feel like a man. A woman is either a woman or a devil. I'm going to let you have full swing. You have said you would tell him where to find me, I am goin gto risk the best. We are at the camp in the Palo Duro Canon—he knows where it is."

"I shall tell him, you need not fear," said Kate, and she did not turn her head as Banty walked past her and out of the little pocket. The big man with the scar under his left eye, got up, looked a moment at Kate with a sheepish grin on his face, then shook his head and followed after. He took my full sympathy with him.

A man, a hoss, or a dog can allus be reasoned with, even a boy has fleetin' moments when it's possible to scratch up his sense o' responsibility; but when a woman once starts to stampede, why a man might just as well sail up the [illegible] of prejudice, law, and religion which he has strung up to keep her on her own range; for if he dont', she'll ruin 'em so complete that he wont 'be able to pen her up again after she has run out all the fever and is ready to gentle down and be tame once more.

After givin' 'em time to get a start, Kate walked over to the openin' out which they had passed, looked down at 'em a moment, and then turned with all the haughtiness gone from her face which was now broken up into lines of suffering. I motioned to the breed to pull his freight down the gully as it didnt' seem right he should see her this way; but I took one more look to make sure she wasn't coming over to our side. She had thrown herself flat on the ground, her hands were gripping at tufts of grass, and her whole body was shakin' with dry sobs. Placido, her wolf dog, was nestlin' beside her, lickin' her hair and ears, and I knew she couldn't be in better hands just then.

The half-breed was a tall man once he straightened up and after we reached the mouth of the little gully, I asked him who he was and what he was doin' there. He grinned friendly at me again, shook his head, and said, "No savvy."

"No savvy plenty," sez I to him, and you'll either tell who you are and waht you were up to, or I'll take you in to them who'll make you savvy.'

I had left the pony on some fat grass and thought he'd stay put; but he was too near home, and had travelled quite a lot. The trail down to the crick was windin' and I saw him on the bent below drillin' along with his wise old head to one side to keep from trippin' on the reins. The way the trail led, he was goin' west while we were goin' east, but the drop was too steep to head him. The half-breed was walkin' in front of me limpin' a little and I was herdin' him with my gun, and feelin' tol'able competent. Suddenly he glanced to the right, then dodged to the left; I looked up to the right like a bloomin' weather-vane, and he threw himself to the edge of the drop, and rolled over right at the feet of my pony. He hopped on to the critter's back, and whirled him around a corner before I had made up my mind whether or not I had a right to shoot him.

'Anyhow," said I to myself, "I'm glad he didnt' take my gun away from me, 'cause he could have done i tas wel las not, and my clothes, too."

I went down the same way he had and after turnin' the corner, I saw my saddle at the side of the road and that blame home-sick pony, steppin' along with his head to one side and not carin' a hang what happened just so he wasn't delayed in gettin' back to headquarters.

I put the saddle on my head and all I regretted was that it wasn't a pack saddle made for a long-eared burro so it would have fit me better. The pony forded just ahead of me and when I came up to the cabin, the old hermit was sittin' there puffin' thoughtful at his long red pipe, and hanged if I could catch a twinkle in his eye. "If I'd been dividin' the load," sez he between puffs, 'I'd 'a' took the bridle and made the pony tote the saddle, but every to his own choosin'."

'Where did that pony go?" sez I.

"Right along the path," sez he, and I took my rope off the saddle, caught the beast, took my bridle, and drew back to give him a kick; but I was cool enough by then to pick out who it was which had rightly earned a kick, so I delivered it on my left ankle and went back to Josiah on good terms with myself again.

"If ever you meet up with a light-complected red-man," sez I to Josiah, "you tell him never to try dodgin' out of my range again, 'cause if I happened to be out of humour, I'd shoot just for that."

"Oh, you'll grow up and be a man some day," sez the old hermit, "providin' somebody don't take you as serious as you take yourself. I reckon you'll stop over and do a little eatin' with us?"

"Well," sez I, "I dont think much o' your vittles; but I will chance 'em one more time."

I sat at the door of the cabin with the old hermit, and I listened so intent that my ears got tired tryin' to point backwards, the way Isaac claimed my forefathers' did. I was mighty curious about how big an outfit that sly old pipe-stoker kept to amuse himself with, but he was too many for me and I didn't hear any sound of gettin' ready. When Kate came in a few minutes later, her lips were white and hard and her eyes big and bright, but she carried it off powerful convincin' and even stirred up a smile or so at sight of me. We all went in to supper, and the table was set for three, her father not feelin' fit that evenin'.

I left as soon as I had eaten hearty, for it still rankled in me the way that breed had put it over me. I was glad was sorry I hadn't kept enough sense handy to grab him when he started his tricks. I was willin' to stick up a fair bet that he could 'a' told who did old Josiah's cookin' and spyin' and scoutin' around, and I had intended to wring somethin' out of him. I'm not actually vain, but it jolts around in me to think 'at some feller is laughin' to think how easy he dropped a pebble into my gapin' mouth the same as if I was a suckin' robin.

When I got out on the open I stopped and looked back and was surprised to see the bright light of a small fire. At first I couldn't quite place it, but finally it came to me that it was on Kate's signal-hill. The hill was some to the north of Horseshoe, and I had been headin' south to skirt the mouth of the gully down which the bulls had charged, so that while I was still some to the east, I was south enough to catch the signals which she was makin', but I couldn't see Tom Smith's mound from where I was, and I registered another kick right then because that bloomin' country didn't have any hills worth mentionin'.

A Veritable Solomon.

"Why such an outburst?"

"He can tell a woman's disposition without marrying her."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Taking the Blame.

"Of course it was all my fault!" exclaimed the young married man.

"What happened?"

"My wife tried to sharpen a lead-pencil with my razor and cut herself."—Washington Star.

Poetic Justice.

"Yes. A man who once swindled me out of $600 in an irrigation scheme died of water on the brain."—Chicago Herald.

Two Travelers' Tales.

HOW TO SUCCEED.

Believe in yourself, believe in humanity, believe in the success of your undertakings. Fear nothing and no one. Love your work. Work, hope, trust. Keep in touch with today. Teach yourself to be practical and up to date and sensible. You cannot fail.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON.

The blood must be filtered otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

Wise Girl.

"What? You're going to marry Tom Speed? Why, he's awful!"

"What makes you think so?"

"I hear he's been blackballed by every club in town."

"Yes, I heard so too. That sort of husband won't have much excuse for staying out nights, will he?"—Cleveland Leader.

More Than His Share.

A raw Irishman shipped as one of the crew of a schooner. His turn at the wheel came around, and after a somewhat eccentric session in the pilot house he found himself the butt of no little humor below. "Begorrah," he growled at last, "and ye needn't talk. CHAPTER XXIX.

Ruth to the Rescue.

IN honor of their engagement Sir Donald Faversham gently insisted that Ruth Gallon attend a ball which was to be given by the British officers. Ruth pleaded to be allowed not to go, but Consul Reynolds and his wife added their urgings to the baronet's, and even the time honored excuse of "nothing to wear" was firmly refused.

Though she said nothing to any one else about her feelings, she really could not refrain from accusing herself of disloyalty to John Dorr.

He was out in the hills risking his life to regain her fortune. Could she dance and take pleasure with a cheerful heart when she did not know whether he was living or dead?

However, she went and received the formal congratulations of a great many natty officers and the informal compliments of certain young Americans, who vowed that she was unpatriotic in choosing an English husband, and danced with Sir Donald and his friends and smiled and blushed at the compliments and frowned laughingly on the flirts and generally conducted herself as a happy bride to be should.

Remember was solicited, and told her so in many ways. And long after midnight, when Mrs. Reynolds was preparing to go home, he took Ruth out under the shadows of the garden trees and would have kissed her.

"Don't!" she said simply.

"What is the matter, darling?" he asked tenderly.

She stared out into the darkness, and he saw the pallor of her face.

"I am sure something has happened to John."

Faversham frowned. It was too bad that this man should always come between him and his betrothed. But his voice was very gentle as he answered:

"That is out of the question. Achmet is very faithful, and if anything had happened I should know of it."

Ruth shook her head and insisted that she was sure. The baronet laughed at her, but she was not to be put off.

"I know John is in trouble," she said determinedly. "If you won't help me I'll go myself!"

Sir Donald argued as strongly as he could and in vain.

"I'm perfectly sure that John Dorr is in trouble," she repeated. "He's all alone up there among those awful natives and"—

"Achmet is with him," interposed Faversham.

"You poor girl!" murmured Mrs. Reynolds. "I know how you feel, but you must get some rest. We'll talk it over later in the morning."

The consul's wife found Ruth too stubborn to handle by herself, for she insisted that, as no one else would go, she would set out herself, and to emphasize her assertion began to change from her ball gown into a riding habit.

He added many common sense arguments, but Ruth would not listen.

"I know that he is in trouble," she repeated.

"But if he were, which is most unlikely, you couldn't help him," Mr. Reynolds said bluntly. "In fact, you merely make matters worse."

When they found her obdurate they took silent counsel of one another, told her to wait a moment and vanished.

The instant they were gone Ruth slipped out of the house and boldly turned her face toward the hills now black against the unlit sky.

All day she traveled, strangely alone in a populous country. Many natives she met, but they merely looked curiously at the white girl in western riding clothes, and no one suspected who she was nor that she was fleeing from justice. Her disguise escaped the notice of any one in authority.

"I am sure something has happened to John."

She knew that when her absence was certain both Mr. Reynolds and Sir Donald would come after her.

Night came, and she was still pushing on, though hungry and weary. In the darkness she perforce kept to open paths, and it was on one of these that a panting native found her.

"Achmet!" she whispered when he raised his contorted face to hers.

In a few words he told her what had happened. She said curtly, "I know that. Where is he?"

Sir Donald's former servant looked at her and remembered the strangeness of things done by white women.

He led the way back toward the hut, muttering now and again of the terrible things he had seen.

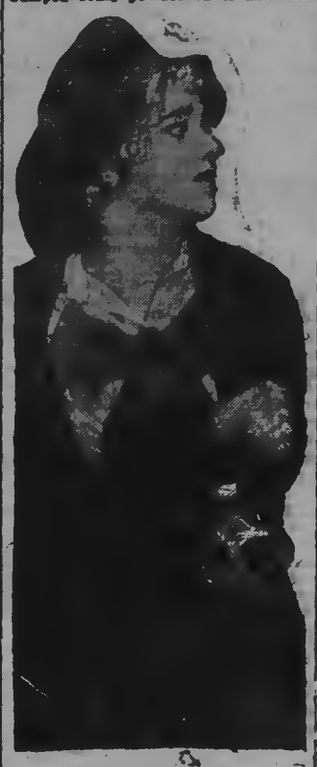
And while Ruth was thus defying all precedent and going to the aid of the man she loved Wilkerson had found himself again hemmed in, cut off in the darkness from escape to the city.

Though he and Dorr had driven the hillmen away from the hut and quenched their eagerness of assault, they still hovered in the little gullies, and on every hand the fugitive found himself confronted by a beard but unseen enemy.

He stole back to the hut and peered in. John was still bound in the chair, and Drake's body lay huddled on the floor.

He made his preparations quickly, piling some dried grass and fine rubbish against one corner of the hut.

When the pile was once alight he dumped some powder on it and ran



"Achmet!" she whispered.

The hut took fire slowly, but the glare accomplished his purpose. It slowly drew the watchers toward it.

Satisfied that no one would be spying on him now, but that all would have eyes only for the fire, he set forth quickly, careless of the fact that John Dorr must be burning alive.

In the darkness he passed Achmet and Ruth.

The blaze had almost entirely enveloped the hut when Ruth finally staggered in and with a sob of joy cut John's bonds and half dragged him through the swirling smoke into the open.

When she had done this she promptly fainted.

The smoldering embers were sending up blue spirals of smoke into the morning sky when Consul Reynolds and Sir Donald spurred their wearied horses up to where John and Achmet squatted with Ruth between them, still but dimly conscious.

Dorr briefly explained his experiences and related how Ruth had suddenly appeared, just as he had given up hope.

Sir Donald, kneeling by Ruth's side, merely patted her hand.

The next morning Mrs. Reynolds laid down the law in set terms to the party assembled around the breakfast table.

"You must get this young lady back to America," she said, "papers or no papers!"

Thus it was that a couple of days later old Tom Kane at the "Master Key" mine received a cablegram reading:

Thus it was that the struggle between Wilkerson and John Dorr was again transformed to the valley in which lay the "Master Key" mine.

Wilkerson and Jean Darnell, with the precious papers in their possession, slipped away hurriedly, taking the first steamer that sailed.

He had told her about Drake's death, though unable to say how it had happened. Privately he had no regrets.

The young man had served his purpose, and it was by no means doubtful that Mrs. Darnell would have seen to it that he had his reward, for she liked him as much as it was in her nature to care for any man, he thought.

"He was an awfully good sort," she said to Wilkerson one night as they leaned over the rail and watched the long swells from the bow speed fanwise into the infinity of the sea.

"Yes, the fellow had his good points," he admitted.

"I miss him," she said simply. Later she added thoughtfully, "I think he was in love with me."

Wilkerson laughed.

Mrs. Darnell glanced at him with an expression strange on her handsome face. "Yes, I am sure he loved me."

"In vain," he returned lightly.

"I don't know whether it might have been wholly in vain after all," she murmured. "Life has given me little love of that kind. It seems as if I had always been a woman who for mere self protection could not let any one love me or let myself love him."

"I should not have let you love him," was the quiet response. "I have struggled too hard and fought too long for you to allow any one else to have you."

"And what does your love amount to, after all, Harry?" she asked. "Tell me plainly. Has it done either of us any good? Will it ever do us any good?"

"Good?" he repeated. "All that I know is that I love you more than anything else in the universe. You love luxury and jewelry and gold and silk. Because I know what you love I am trying to get it for you, because I want you more than I want anything else. I—I think we are even."

"Even?" she said in a suddenly strained voice. "Yes, we are even—you the felon and the murderer, I the receiver of stolen goods, stolen happiness, stolen life, stolen gold!"

When they finally reached San Francisco Wilkerson found her oddly distrait. She did not know whether to go to the mine or to return to New York.

One moment she was in a tigerish rage; the next hour she was staring at the fog haunted hills with eyes that saw nothing.

He stormed and argued to no purpose. He recalled to her constantly the fact that he had the deeds, the master key itself, the plans of the location of the mother lode.

She either listened listlessly or drove him away with furious upbraidings. Yet in the end she accompanied him to Silent Valley.

It was a bitter moment for old Tom Kane when the stage drove up and Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell got out instead of John Dorr and Ruth.

He had hoped against hope, and now his dreams were in ashes, for Wilkerson instantly took charge, the man, as Tom put it to himself, followed the paymaster, and so far as outward appearance went the "Master Key" mine was firmly in Wilkerson's possession.

Mrs. Darnell here proved herself the shrewder mind. Though she was little seen, her influence was potent.

And more than anything else she worked on Wilkerson so that he did not use the plans and open up the rich vein.

"Wait," she told him. "Don't let the world—Dorr, whom I hate, in his this fact that we have the secret. Once that is public we'll likely lose everything."

"But we ought to be at work before Dorr gets back," he would argue.

"Yes, and every court in the land will help him to regain this mine and its wealth. Don't you see? Compromise!"

"Compromise!" he repeated dully.

"Yes, you fool!"

"But how?"

"Wait—wait till John and Ruth get back. They'll be glad enough to buy those plans, Harry."

When John Dorr and Ruth arrived on the following steamer Everett met them at the pier and told them the notes as he had gathered it from faithful Tom Kane, whom Jean Darnell had insisted should resume his duties as cook, sagely observing to Wilkerson that it would be well for them to have a witness whose veracity Dorr would not impugn.

Settled in the hotel, Dorr briefly recited the experiences of the past months and then bluntly asked, "What are we to do?"

Everett was ready with his answer, "Compromise!"

The dull red flooded John's face, and he bit his lip. Had all his work gone for nothing?

Everett laid a friendly hand on his knee. "Now listen," he said gravely. "Here is Miss Ruth minus her key, practically ousted from possession of her property and, if we are not mistaken, unable to lay her hands on her most precious inheritance—the plans of the mother lode. They're in Wilkerson's possession."

"And he's digging the gold night and day!" John burst out.

With a swift glance to reassure Ruth, who sat in mournful silence, Everett went on:

"That is the shrewd part of Wilkerson's play. He knows that the law will give Miss Ruth here back her mine and all that it contains. It would take time, but as sure as we are sitting here, and no one knows it better than he—justice would strip him of every ill gotten cent and send him to prison with his accomplice. So what does he do? Plainly, he must [illegible] prize? No. He conceals it still and merely works the original mine."

"But we can put him out of father's mine, can't we?" demanded Ruth.

"And when we do we shall still be no wiser as to the location of the real gold. All our trouble and expense will have gone for naught. Wilkerson will still hold the secret of the 'Master Key.'"

"And how are we going to get it from him?" demanded Dorr, clinching his fist.

Everett smiled. "By buying it from him."

"He will ask millions!"

The broker smiled again.

"Consider Wilkerson's position for a moment. He is liable to arrest, trial and long imprisonment on a dozen charges. Within twenty-four hours we can have him behind the bars. But we wouldn't be helping ourselves much, would we? Yet Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell don't want to go to jail. We hold that club over them.

"They have the secret we must have and we can rule their lives. Therefore we make a trade. We give them assurance that we will not prosecute them, that we will even enrich them if need be, and they in return for this hand us over the plans that Thomas Gallon made."

The story of The Master Key will appear each Friday and Saturday in the Evening Examiner, and will be shown in Photo Play at the Tiz-It Theatre on Monday and Tuesday of each week.

Rapping the Jury.

In ancient British courts of quarter sessions when the jury were enjoined to lay their heads together they were expected to dive beneath the level of the box. The usher stood near them armed with a willow wand, and this was smartly applied to the head of any juryman appearing above the partition before the twelve minds had come to an agreement.

Longer or Shorter.

Umson—Have you noticed the cigar holder Beanbrough is using?

Amley—Yes; he likes it because he can smoke his Havanas longer.

"That's odd."

"What?"

"I asked him about it, and he said he bought it so he could smoke his cigars shorter."—Youngstown (O.) Telegram.

Somewhat Caustic.

"This is the greatest town in the world," said the proud citizen. "It's so healthy here that people never die. They simply dry up and blow away."

"Umph!" replied the saturnine stranger. "Some people about here evidently blow away at such a great rate that they don't know what it means to dry up."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

SOLDIERS' UNIFORMS

How the Various Nations Clothe Their Troops—Khaki Becoming Popular

Every regiment engaged in the war has exchanged its elaborate parade uniform for a less conspicuous fighting garb, but all warring nations do not clothe their troops in costume so plain as the British khaki. The French infantry wear a single-breasted blue tunic with a red collar, shoulder-straps, and cuff-flaps. Their trousers are red, and the bottom are generally tucked into ankle-boots. In some cases, however, the red trousers have given way to a sort of khaki.

Grey-green cloth is the standard uniform for all the soldiers of the Italian army, and it is rare to see anything but grey-green being worn even in peace times. The uniform worn by Italy's finest troops, the "Alpini" and "Bersaglieri" regiments, however, is of a darker shade. In peace times these latter regiments are distinguished by their broad-brimmed hats adorned with immense plumes.

Green is the predominating color of the Russian uniforms, which are cut in a very stylish fashion. The tunic is double-breasted, and knickerbockers, high black boots, and a flat-topped cap complete the outfit of the Czar's foot-soldiers. In severe weather the Russians wear heavy, greyish-brown waterproof overcoats, which are lined with sheepskin and possess a cape which can be lifted so that it completely envelope the head. The Russian dragoons wear trousers of blue-grey, and a peaked cap. Footcloths are substituted for socks in the Russian army.

The Cossacks rival the French in the picturesqueness of their uniform. They wear blue coats to the knees, black riding-boots, and a cloth-topped, conical lambskin cap.

The German uniform is very dark, and consists of bluish grey which so blends with the landscape that troops thus garbed are very difficult to detect at a distance. In cut, the uniform of the Kaiser's troops resembles that of the British costume. The German cavalry are more brightly garbed than their comrades on foot, for they wear blue tunics, with grey trousers and black leather helmets. The Kaiser's hussars are noted for their gay uniforms, which they cover with all manner of metal ornaments, and they wear fur busbies, grey trousers with colored stripes, and white pouch-belts.

British Bayonet Useful

The sword bayonet used by the British infantry, is about 17 inches long. The blade is ground to a very fine point, and both edges are sharpened. The accuracy of the short Lee-Enfield rifle is not appreciably affected by fixing the bayonet, which is not directly attached to the muzzle. Some military critics were of the opinion that the bayonet, owing to the development of rifle fire, would be of little or no use in modern warfare, but during the whole course of the great war it has been amply demonstrated that the "cold steel" is the decisive factor so far as infantry engagements are concerned. Artillery may do much to shake the morale of the enemy, but it requires the last wild rush with the bayonet to set them out on the run.

Corporal's Charmed Life

The Gainsborough News printed the charmed experience of Corporal Bowyer. The corporal told the following story: "In a rush I was struck by a bullet, which hit my ammunition pouch. Instead of entering my body, it glanced away off the ammunition, exploding fifteen rounds of it, and tearing my equipment all to pieces on that side."

IN A ZEPPELIN

The chief impression produced by a voyage in a Zeppelin is one of overpowering noise and intense exhilaration. The noise of the Zeppelin proceeds from the roaring of her four gigantic propellers and also from the detonations of her petrol engines, of which in the newest type four each of 200 h.p. are carried. Attempts have been made in L 5, one of the very latest, to apply silencers; but if report is to be trusted the noise is still excessive, even when the observer is on the earth and the airship is high up in the air.

The movement when the airship ascends is precisely like that of a rapid lift rushing up to the top of a skyscraper. In fine weather there is no unpleasant swaying or seasickness. The movement is swift and even. The crew of the airship are accommodated in two long gondola-shaped cars.

The newest naval Zeppelins of the pattern of L 5 and L 6 now engaged in patrol work in the North Sea are about 525 ft. long and 80 ft. in diameter. Their shape is familiar; it is that of an enormously elongated cigar. Their gas capacity is about 1,000,000 cubic feet.

The airship of this type is divided into eighteen separate compartments, in each of which is a balloonet or small balloon. Each of these has a valve for admitting fresh hydrogen, a valve for emptying it, and a special automatic valve, which is one of Count Zeppelin's secrets, for preventing any dangerous pressure of gas inside. In theory the airship would still float, provided ballast were discharged, if two of the balloonets were damaged.

The shape of the structure is maintained by a framework of wood and aluminum of special design and considerable rigidity. Outside the gas compartments is a double-button containing air or non-flammable gas on the side next the cars.

The engines are contained in the two cars, which are built into the framework of the airship and almost flush with its keel. One is placed forward and the other aft. A pair of propellers is coupled to each ends.

of the cars, so that there are four propellers in all, two forward and two astern. The thrust is delivered from the side of the airship and the propellers are rigidly fixed to the framework of the ship.

Zeppelins, like submarines, carry two distinct sets of rudders, one for horizontal and the other for vertical steerage. With the first set the airship ascends or descends, just as the submarine, after being brought to a proper trim, rises or falls in the water according as her hydroplanes, or horizontal rudders, are turned.

The vertical rudders after the direction of the airship to right (starboard) or left (port.) There are five at the stern in modern airships, two small on either side and one of great size at the extreme stern. Airships, however, are slow in answering the helm; their fragility compels the steersman to be exceedingly careful in making turns.

The weight which can be lifted by a large Zeppelin is about seven tons, but included in this is the weight of the crew, petrol, oil, and other requisites, so that not more than 1 1-2 or 2 tons of explosives and guns can be carried. It is understood that two machine guns are mounted in the Zeppelins, one in each car.

The bombs dropped from these airships are of various sizes. In the disgraceful raid on our Norfolk villages bombs of at least 100 lb. weight were thrown down, and in the attack on the King of the Belgians in Antwerp a bomb weighing 150 lbs. was recovered which had not exploded.

The supreme defect of the Zeppelin is its fragility and inability to face a strong wind. In February the Zeppelin L 3 and the Schutte Lanz L 4, a rigid airship similar in most respects to the Zeppelins, were caught by a storm in the North Sea and both wrecked on the Danish coast. L 1 was destroyed by a storm off Heligoland in 1913 and half her crew were drowned. L 2 a few weeks later was destroyed by an explosion at Berlin and all her crew perished. Thus the first four German naval airships all met violent

'NEW MACHINE GUNS FOR CANADIAN TROOPS— A sum of $500,000 to supply 500 machine guns immediately for the Canadian troops, has been voted by the Ontario Government. The guns, which are in great need at the front, will be of the type shown here. This is the Lewis Automatic Machine-Gun.. It weighs 28½ pounds complete, and can be fired from the shoulder. It will fire 440 rounds a minute, and can be used for defence or offence.

REGIMENTAL BADGES.

British Distinctions Laden With Sentimental Value.

To the civilian mind it is perfectly impossible to grasp the great sentimental value which regiments attach to their badges, mottoes, and even buttons. It may seem almost childish, but the abolition even of the smallest device—one which has been gained by some honorable deed of a regiment—might almost bring about a mutiny in that regiment.

Every portion of a regimental badge has, of course, some meaning. Take that of the famous Gordon Highlanders. The cross, of course, is the cross of St. Andrew, the patron saint of Scotland. The sphinx was gained in recognition of valiant service done by the Second Battalion in Egypt, the royal tiger on account of nineteen years' hard fighting in India by the First Battalion.

"The stag of ten" rising from a coronet in the crest of the Marquis of Huntly, for the Second Battalion was raised by George Marquis of Huntly afterward the fifth and last Duke of Gordon, while the ivy in the floral emblem of the clan Gordon. The thistle wreath which appears on the battalion badge of course represent Scotland. The motto of the regiment is the motto of clan Gordon, viz., "Bydand," meaning "Watchful."

The badge of the Gurkhas is merely two crossed kukris, the kukri being a sharp, heavy, curved knife, which is never out of a Gurkha's hand when in his own country, and is primarily used for cutting tracks through the dense forest of Nepal, but is also an extremely handy weapon for chopping off the head of a bullock, a goat, or even a man.

The badge of the Connaught Rangers is a more simple one. The harp, of course, is the harp of Ireland, while the motto, "Quis Separabit," alludes to the union. It will be noticed that from the scroll of the badge a sprig of shamrock issues from each end, being the national floral badge of Ireland. The collar badge of the regiment is an elephant, an honor gained for service in India.

The famous Guards' regiments are distinguished from all other regiments by each company having a badge of its own in addition to that of the regiment. Thus the first company of the Coldstreams has a white lion passant, a badge of Edward IV.; the second company has the Prince of Wales' feathers, a badge of the black prince; the third company a spotted panther, the badge of Henry VI. and so on, but the actual regimental badge of one of the Coldstreamers is simply the Star of the Garter.

As one would suppose, the badge of the Welsh regiment deals with Wales, and consists of the Prince of Wales' feathers surmounting his motto, "Ich Dien," while the regimental motto is "Gwell angau na Chywilydd," meaning "Death rather than dishonor." On the belt buckle is the Welsh dragon in gilt metal. Princess Patricia's Regiment has adopted the beautiful marguerite as a fitting badge for the corps.

WHY PEOPLE FEEL DEPRESSED

IN THE DRIA WEATHER IN THE COLD WEATHER

Why is tiredness and langour so prevalent just now? A physician explained that the cold of winter drives blood from the surface of the body to the liver. Normally one-fourth of the whole blood supply is in the liver, and when more blood is accumulated, in that organ everything goes wrong.

No better remedy exists than Dr. Hamilton's Pills which are composed of such vegetable extracts as Mandrake and Butternut, and possess wonderful liver stimulating powers. It's a marvel the way Hamilton's Pills clear the blood of the poisonous humours. They put new life into worn out bodies, build up the appetite, bring back a reserve of nerve energy, tide folks over the cold days of winter and the depressing days of spring. For your health and body comfort get a 25c. box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills to-day.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

Golden Text. My house shall be called a house of prayer for all peoples. Isaiah 56: 7.

1. Verses 1-11. These verses describe a great gathering of the king, the priests, and the people, for a grand religious festival. Why would it not be a good thing for every church to have such gatherings, something in the nature of the old time camp meetings?

2. What is the chief institution of a nation, and what the chief duty of man?

3. How much more of "the glory of the Lord" is manifested in a church to-day than elsewhere?

4. Verse 12. Why would you say that "darkness" may be as much a sign of God's presence as light?

5. Verse 13. What is the best thing for a man to do with his surplus money?

6. Verse 14. Why should not every person, constantly "bless" every other person, and what would be the effect if this were done? (This is one of the questions which may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

7. Verses 15-21. What evidence is there that the promises which God to-day makes "with his mouth," are "with his hand fulfilled"?

8. What was God's chief purpose in choosing Israel to be the repository of his truth?

9. What reason is there to believe that each individual is a link in the chain, which draws out of events, as they occur, God's purpose, as in the case of David and Solomon?

10. Verse 22. Ministers, like Solomon, often spread out their hands when about to pray in the pulpit, is there any important significance in this gesture, or is it simply useless pulpit mannerism?

11. Verses 2 , 24. Granted that there is but one Almighty God, is there any evidence that theer are other powerful spirits, good and bad, which exercise an influence over us, answering to what the ancients called "the goods"?

12. God's promises are as dependable as are the laws of gravitation, but what proof is there that such is the case?

13. Verses 25-26. Which is better and why, to keep God reminded of his promises or to take it for granted that they will be fulfilled?

14. Verse 27. What is the supreme evidence that God does dwell on the earth, and in the heart of each individual?

15. Verse 28. Speaking from actual experience, what are the benefits of prayer?

16. Verses 29-52. Was this great prayer of Solomon extempore or prepared before hand? Why?

17. Why would you say or not that ministers should prepare their prayers as carefully as they do their sermons?

18. Solomon assumes in this prayer, that all calamities, national and personal, are a result of sin. Why would you agree with him or not?

19. What avail is it, for a minister to pray for God to forgive the sins of the people, if they do not repent?

20. Verse 53. What is the chief purpose of the church, and of worship?

Lesson for Sunday, Aug. 1, 1915. The Queen of Sheba Visits Solomon. 1 Kings, 10: 1-10, 13.

WAR SPECTACLE AT EXHIBITION

The mammoth war spectacle, "The March of the Allies" and the "Review of the Fleet," will be the big scenic production in front of the Grand Stand at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, and will be one of the most elaborate ever staged and a fitting climax to each day's entertainment in this "Patriotic Year."

The background is the ancient city of Calais, saved by the Canadians when they so gallantly stopped the German drive at St. Julien at such enormous cost. Its picturesque chateaus and historic environment adapt themselves admirably to reproduction. On either side beneath frowning cliffs are seen military camps with the soldiers of the allied armies in all the hustle, bustle and action of war time. The brilliant uniforms of the Field Marshals, Generals, etc., add splendour to an impressive scene.

Suddenly the fleet appears over the horizon under full steam with the Queen Bess leading the first battle line and the Lion in advance of the others. The Iron Duke majestically appears with Admiral Jellicoe aboard, and, as she passes between the watch dogs of the Empire lined up in battle array, the Admiral is greeted with salvoes of broadsides.

It will be a faithful portrayal of the scene just before war was declared last summer when the fleet had been mobilized on the orders of Churchill off the British coast.

The cannonading continues as the officers go ashore to review the troops, which swing past the Grand Stand in the final wonderful tableau. It will be a panorama of Empire greatness, a picture of such striking reality as to evoke a veritable hysteria of patriotic fervor among the thousands who will nightly crowd the Grand Stand.

MILITARY CAMP AT THE EXHIBITION

Every branch of war activity to be vividly portrayed at Toronto Fair

Every branch of war activity to be seen in Europe to-day will be vividly portrayed at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto. Aeroplanes will land at the Military Camp after taking observations in mid-air; miniature battleships will be blown up in the lake; there will be bridge and sheltered trench building, armoured cars, hospital autos, field ambulances with stretcher bearer sections, field dressing stations, field bakeries and cookeries ammunition columns, bomb throwers, signal corps, observation masts, etc. The Camp will be occupied by several hundred officers and men now training for overseas service at Niagara and other camps for the infantry, cavalry and artillery units.

THE MIDWAY AT TORONTO

There will be no freaks on the Midway at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, but the carnival world has been scoured for attractions and "The Pike" should be livelier than ever. A Wld West Show and a water circus including log rolling, diving Venusesn, trick canoeing, etc., Streets of Cairo, the Garden of Allah, the Giggler, the Hippodrome and a dozen other thrillers are among the features.

Seized With Paralysis Could Not Walk

Most Extraordinary Cure Effected by the Use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

To have the nervous system paralysed, to be unable to walk and scarcely able to talk, and then to be completely cured, is not a usual experience, but Mr. Hyatt tells in this letter what he passed through. Doctors told him that his case was hopeless, and when they gave up he turned to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and obtained complete cure.

Mr. Avery Hyatt, blacksmith, St. Anns, Lincoln Co., Ont., writes: "I am a blacksmith by trade and ten years ago became afflicted with paralysis. I could not walk or read or write, and could talk with difficulty, so that it was a hard matter to understand anything that I would say. Being only a young man I was nearly discouraged. Two doctors told me it was brought on by overwork, and that my case was hopeless.

"One day my father read about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and advised me to try it. I bought 12 boxes, and when the fifth was used I saw that I was getting better. By the time the 12 boxes were used I was cured. I am well and strong and working every day, thanks to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Elmon J. Hodgkins, J.P.

No ailment is more dreaded than paralysis. And yet how few people realize that paralysis of the nerves is only the natural result of neglected nervous troubles.

At first you do not sleep well, have nervous headaches or indigestion, find yourself easily irritated and annoyed, can hear noises which in good health you would never notice. You do not consider yourself sick, and yet you lack the usual energy and vigour and feel out of sorts.

Restore the nerves by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50c a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S APRON.

By Anabel Worthington.

The apron is at all times an important article of woman's apparel, even though it be worn not more than once or twice in a year. When it is needed it is very much needed, so it is well to have one or two at least on hand.

The model which is shown in our illustration belongs to the bungalow class, so called. These are frequently worn without any dress at all beneath them, but they are also to be worn to protect the dress. The garment herewith shown is in a single piece and is of most ingenious construction.

The bodice and the centre of the front are plain and the material is slashed and a small gore cut out at the waistline in the back. This allows of gathering the material of the skirt section. In the back the material forms a very short waist or a very deep yoke, whichever one may please to call it, and this has two buttons which retain it in place.

By trimming the edges of the neck and sleeves and also the hem and the waistband with a braid or bias band of contrasting material quite a pretty apron may be made.

Gingham, calico and anything else that will wash may be used for this apron.

The apron pattern, No. 7,257, is cut in sizes 36, 40 and 44 inch bust measure. Medium size requires 1¼ yards of 36-inch material, with ½ yard of 27 inch contrasting goods.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

PURE BLOOD

The Greatest Blessing Mankind Can Have

Millions of people need this powerful vegetable remedy that puts the digestive organs in fine condition; that clears the skin of pimples, rash, blemishes and eczema; that dissolves boils and carbuncles; that makes nerves stronger and steadier and gives to pale, weak, rundown people the fullest measure of health and happiness.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, free from alcohol or narcotics and extracted from roots and barks with pure glycerine, does just what is stated above, simply because it banishes from the blood all poison and impure matter. It dissolves the impure deposits and carries them out, as it does all impurities, through the Liver, Bowels, Kidneys and Skin.

DESPERATE FIGHTING IN ALSACE

LITTLE NEWS FROM EASTERN FRONT

HAND-TO-HAND FIGHTING ON THE SLOPES OF THE VOSGES IN ALSACE

Germans Driven Down Mountain Side After a Desperate Charge Into the French Trenches.—Indecisive Fighting of the Fiercest Kind Has Been Raging at Half a Dozen Positions.

FRENCH GAIN AT SEVERAL POINTS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 23.—Hand to hand fighting up and down the Vosges slopes in Alsace with the Germans attempting to stop the French attacks by massed assaults was reported in the official despatches to the War Office this afternoon. On the crests of the peaks of Ling and Barrenkopf, an impetuous German charge threw the enemy into the French first line trenches. They were speedily ejected by the French Chasseurs and hurled down the mountain side. East of Metzeral, and at several points along the River Fecht, west of Colmar, desperate fighting is proceeding, neither side being able to make satisfactory gains.

In the region of Bagatelle we captured part of the enemy trench, advantageously strengthening our lines, said this afternoon's communique. We also made progress near Pont a Mousson. The Paris newspapers to-day called attention to the fact that this is the first anniversary of the delivery of the Austrian ultimatum to Servia that led to the world war. They declare it is France's purpose to carry on the war, however long it may be prolonged, until the Allies are victorious.

GENEVA, July 23.—Fresh rumours of an impending Zeppelin attack on London were brought here to-day from the German air base at Friedrichshaven, and with them reports of a remarkable new invention to shield the big dirigibles from attack. The next fleet of Zeppelins that bombards London will be unseen and unheard by the terror-stricken crowds in the street, if the latest Austro-German experiments prove successful. It is known here that the "silent engine" with which Count Zeppelin has been experimenting for two months has been installed on several of his airships, making it possible for them to move silently through the clouds. As a further safeguard to insure their dirigibles from attack, the Germans have been experimenting with huge illuminating bombs which, when dropped from airships, throw out curtains a brilliant light, obscuring them from the sight. The Austrian aviators tried out the new dazzling bombs in the last air raid on Venice. They proved surprisingly successful, but the Austrian aircraft were not equipped with the silent motors, and their presence over the city was revealed to the Italian birdmen.

BERLIN, via The Hague, July 23.—Warsaw's fall appeared imminent to-day. Official despatches reported that the German troops now hold all three railways entering from the west and that the city is nearly half surrounded by the German ring at an average distance of less than fifteen miles. Unless Von Hindenburg's forces meet with some unexpected reverse, the Russian evacuation cannot be long delayed. It is believed here that Grand Duke Nicholas will repeat Gen. Ivanoff's tactics at Przemysl and Lemberg, withdrawing his major forces and leaving behind a garrison strong enough to prevent rapid pursuit by the enemy, and at the same time capable of inflicting considerable losses on the victorious Germans.

ATHENS, July 23.—Under cover of fire from the Allied warships the Anglo-French forces have driven the Turks from several armoured trenches near the slopes of Achibaba. Mytilene despatches to-day said the Turks suffered heavy losses.

HALF BROTHER TO LORD PENRHYN DEAD.

LONDON, July 23.—Lieutenant the Hon. Charles Dougglas Pennant, of the Coldstream Guards, is unofficially reported killed. Lord Penrhyn thus has lost his eldest son and his two half brothers in the war.

BERNE, Switzerland, July 23.—General Wille, Commander-in-Chief of the Swiss army, in an address at the celebration of the anniversary of the battle of Sampach, declared that while Switzerland hopes to remain at peace her future is still uncertain. "It would be almost unmerited luck if our nation is spared in the midst of the heavy storms beating around her," he declared.

843,000 MARRIED MEN IN THE BRITISH ARMY.

LONDON, July 22.—Speaking for the Government in the House of Lords Wednesday, Lord Newton said the number of married men at present ation allowances paid to wives and children of these men has been in the British army was approximately 843,000. The aggregate cost of separ- £25,000,000 ($125,000,000).

WASHINGTON, July 23.—That a German submarine attacked the Cunarder Orduna on its way from Liverpool to New York without warning, is conclusively shown by Collector Malone's report to the Government.

ROME, July 23.—An Austrian squadron bombarded the Italian town of Ortona, and the Tremiti Islands to-day, the War Office announced this afternoon.

Two Italian dirigibles bombarded the Austrian railway station and town of Nabresina, midway between Monfalcone and Trieste, it was officially announced.

AMERICAN NOTE IS HANDED OVER BY AMBASSADOR

Reached Berlin in Full To-day and Was Delivered to German Foreign Secretary This Afternoon.

NO COMMENT MADE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

BERLIN, (via wireless), July 23.—The American note in the Lusitania matter reached here in full to-day and Ambassador Gerard delivered it to Foreign Secretary Von Jagow about 1 p.m.

Gerard remained at the Foreign Office in conversation with Von Jagow for thirty minutes. When he left he was immediately surrounded by newspaper men, but he would give no intimation of the contents of the note. Secretary Von Jagow was equally reticent.

A Peculiar Auto Accident

Car Burst Into Flames and Was Destroyed.

A peculiar accident happened to an automobile belonging to Tanner's livery, Madoc, when en route to Arden. The report states that Mr. Tanner was accompanied by the county constable from Arden who had in his charge a prisoner whom he placed under arrest at Madoc. When nearing Kaladar something happened to the car that allowed it to catch on fire and the occupants were forced to make a hasty exit. Fearing an explosion of the gasoline the owner of the car kept a safe distance away and every bit of inflammable material about it was consumed leaving a charred and desolate looking mass of rods and iron work standing in the highway. The tank of gasoline, strange to say, did not explode as was expected.

Programme For To-night's Concert

By permission of Lt.-Colonel Walker and the officers of the 57th, the band of the regiment under the direction of Lieut. Gliddon, will render the following programme in Victoria Park to-night:

March, ... "The Moose"
Overture ..... "Marsaniello"
Band Sergt. W. Hughes.
Selection, "Reminiscences of Ireland"
Dance ..... "In the Shadows"
Novelty ..... "A Dervish Chorus"
Grand Selection ..... "Atilla"
March ..... "Selected"

Girl Killed In Explosion

Special to The Examiner:

ORILLIA, Ont., July 23.—One girl, Miss Myrtle Beach, lost her life, and two men, George Fraser and a man named Tregasa, received severe injuries in a fire which followed a heavy explosion of gasoline, and completely destroyed Walker's garage here to-day.

DIED.

BAYLOR.—At the homestead, "Duntaheene," in Fermoy, Cork County, Ireland, on the 8th of June, 1915, Peter Baylor, oldest brother of Mrs. William Menzies, 291 Rubidge St., this city, aged 81 years.

Horse Had Its Leg Broken

Mr. L. Green of Peterborough lost a valuable horse to-day. He had purchased a heavy draught six year old horse in Toronto, but when it arrived this morning and was examined in the car it was found that one leg had been badly broke during the journey. Dr. Fortune, V.S., was called, but could do nothing for the animal which had to be killed.

NEW MANAGER OF LOCAL BRANCH

Mr. Gordon H. Logie of Toronto, the new manager of the local branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia, took charge yesterday.

Mr. A. F. Tomlins, who has been manager here for several years, has been transferred to Toronto, where he will be manager of the Bloor and St. Clarens branch. Mr. Tomlins had made a host of friends here, who will regret his departure.

TWO WELL KNOWN BROTHERS WHO ARE WITH THE 39TH BATTALION

PTE. STANLEY WADE.

PTE. ALLEN WADE.

The two sons of Mr. Edward Wade, London street, a life-long citizen of Peterborough, who are now in England with the 39th Battalion. Both are well known athletes and have a host of friends here. Pte. Stanley Wade played hockey with the local junior O.H.A. team some years ago and afterwards played rugby and hockey for the Hamilton Rowing Club. Pte. Allen Wade pitched a no hit game for the Empires against the Thistles in the opening game of the local City League. Now he's going to throw bullets for the Empire instead of baseballs for the Empires.

ATHLETES OF THE COUNTRY CALLED TO RALLY TO COLOURS

President of Amateur Athletic Union Appeals to Canadian Athletes to Enlist—Suggests the Elimination of League Games in Football and Other Sports.

WINNIPEG, July 22.—A lessening in sporting activities is suggested by the president of the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada, Thomas Boyd, in a statement which he has given out, appealing especially to the unmarried members of athletic organizations in Canada to join the overseas corps. Elimination of cup games in football and other sports is a principal suggestion. President Boyd's appeal is as follows:

"Kitchener says he needs more men, and we all realize that when he says it he means it.

"This is the reason I am appealing to all those who have no ties to hold them back, and especially to unmarried members of the many athletic organizations throughout Canada, to join at once the various corps now being recruited.

"The elimination of cup games at this juncture would, I feel, give to the men engaged an opportunity to realize the gravity of the situation and enable them to put their fighting qualities at the disposal of their King and country.

"The athletes of Canada have done nobly in filling the ranks of previous contingents. All honour to them.

"Those of you to whom this appeal reaches, show your patriotism by enlisting at once and 'do your bit.'"

HIGHLY CRITICAL SITUATION IS DEVELOPING IN GREECE

MILAN, July 23.—The situation in Greece is becoming more critical daily. The great majority of the people favour intervention on the side of the allies, but the King, Court and General Staff are more pro-German than ever. Their influence has succeeded in getting the meeting of parliament postponed until August 16th, the last day allowed by the constitution. The General Staff is also taking measures to suppress any interventionist manifestations which might influence parliament.

Bit by bit large bodies of troops are being concentrated in and around Athens. The struggle between parliament and the army may lead to grave incidents in Nationalist and Democratic circles. Great anxiety prevails. The interventionists, including Venizelos, do not conceal their discouragement as the long delays and hesitation of the Gunaris Cabinet have greatly compromised chances of success if Greece intervenes in the war. At the same time the delay in the meeting of parliament is not altogether unfavourable to the Venizelos party, as it gives it time to agitate and reorganize its forces.

Meeting Has Been Postponed

Owing to unexpected business, it is impossible for Mr. Arthur Private to be in Peterborough to-night and the meeting called to discuss the question of tobacco for the soldiers has been postponed.

Installation Of Officers

The officers of Peterborough Lodges I.O.O.F. have been installed for the ensuing term by District Deputy Grand Master Sills as follow:

P.G., Bro. Currie; N.G., Bro. W. H. Young; V.G., J. Price; Rec. Sec., Bro. J. White; Fin. Sec., Bro. W. Green; Treas., Bro. W. Madill; Warden, Bro. Oxford; Conductor, Bro. W. Barry; Chap., Bro. Hartman; R.S.S., Bro. F. Read; L.S.S., Bro. Robinson; R.S.N.G., Bro. R. Jones; L.S.N.G., Bro. Target; R.S.V.G., Bro. King; L.S.V.G., Bro. Carter; I.G., Bro. R. Reid; O.G., Bro. T. Duncan.

Car Dropped Ten Feet Overturned In Ditch

Six Passengers Escaped With Only a Few Light Injuries in Accident on Chemong Road Last Night—Narrowly Missed a Fatality.

PROTECTIVE RAILING BROKE

Breaking through the guard rail on the east side of the Chemong Road at the foot of Fleming's Hill, three miles from Peterborough, Mr. Bert Sugden's car last night dropped ten feet, turning over and alighting on its top in the boggy ditch.

It carried six passengers:

Mr. and Mrs. Sugden, 424 George Street,

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Brown, who have resided at 490 George Street, but who were to have left for England on the midnight train last night;

Mr. Thomas Yost and daughter, Miss Mary Yost, 547 Downie Street.

It was almost miraculous that the party escaped with a few minor injuries. Mrs. Brown was reported to have slight internal injuries, and Mrs. Sugden was unconscious for a short time, but this morning had only a bruised shoulder as a memento of the incident, and was otherwise quite well. All the other passengers escaped uninjured.

Cause of Accident.

The party were returning from the lawn social at the Gilmour Memorial Church. Mr. and Mrs. Sugden had motored out alone. Coming into the city they invited the other members to share their car, especially as Mr. and Mrs. Brown were scheduled to depart for Montreal a few hours later. Members of the Salvation Army Band also returning from the garden party had preceded them in a large omnibus driven by Mr. E. Lawrence.

The 'bus had just entered the stretch of road which is guarded on either side with what appeared to be a stout railing.

According to Mrs. Sugden it came to a standstill when the automobile drew up close behind. The road was too narrow for the car to pass. Apparently it had drawn up close to the rail, for it was stated that the ground around one of the posts gave way and the car slowly settled against the rail and broke through, overturning in its backward plunge.

Top Was a Preventive.

The fact that the top of the automobile was up undoubtedly saved at least some of the passengers from being crushed under the car, and another mitigating influence was the soft condition of the bed of the ditch, which was almost boggy.

Immediate assistance was rendered by the Salvation Army bandsmen, who quickly raised the car sufficiently to liberate the passengers.

Mr. George A. Gillespie, M.P.P., and Dr. Mann, who drew up just then, returning from the social, brought the ladies into the city.

Mr. Yost, who, when leaving the grounds is said to have welcomed the idea of motoring in, declined Dr. Mann's offer after the accident. "Thank you, but I'll walk in first," he is said to have replied.

The only damages the car sustained was a crushed top, the pieces of which were gathered up this morning. The car itself was righted and hauled on to the road, and apparently was none the worse for the accident.

Repairing the Guard Rail.

Smith Township workmen were engaged in repairing the guard rail this morning. One of them stated that he could not understand how the railing was broken.

Dr. Mann, who attended Mrs. Brown, stated this morning that she was quite recovered, and had no internal injuries. Mr. and Mrs. Brown postponed their sailing until July 29th.

Hydro Radial Passenger Rate

Mr. J. H. Burnham Predicts a Low Rate for the Peterboro' District

That the passenger rate for Hydro-electric railways need not exceed a cent and a half a mile, is the opinion of Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., who has returned from the official opening of the London and Port Stanley Railway. This is the first Hydro-electric railway to be operated in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Burnham said that the event was a success in every way. Over six hundred delegates were present.

"Peterborough," said Mr. Burnham, "must have Hydro-electric railways radiating in all directions. The passenger rate need not be higher than a cent and a half per mile, with the freight rate accordingly. They could be even cheaper if it were not the desire to build and equip them in accordance with a very high standard. The reason for this is that we have unlimited water power right at our door. Peterborough district would then prove a great attraction for tourists. Electric railways running in all directions is just like good circulation for the body. It affords a higher state of industrial health."

Mr. Burnham said he had the good fortune to be invited by the Toronto delegation to share their private car. Among the guests was a distinguished officer recently from the Front, who complained bitterly of the methods that were being adopted to make capital out of the present war. He was indignant at the alarming increase of this sort of thing. "We have the best and the worst people in the world," he said.

THE PRINTERS' BIG PICNIC

Jubilee Point the Place, Saturday, July 31st the Date.

The annual Printers' Picnic will be held on Saturday, July 21, per Str Stoney Lake, to Jubilee Point. A full list of sports will be on the programme and good prizes have been arranged for the different events. In addition there will be a drawing contest, which is open to every purchaser of a ticket. Refreshment booth on board, also good orchestra for dancing. Don't forget the Printers a week from to-morrow, and come along and have a good time. Boat leaves George street wharf at 1.30, Street Railway wharf at 1.45. Watch for programmes which will be out in a few days.

THE WEATHER

Some particularly low temperatures for July are being recorded these nights. Last night was the coolest yet, the thermometer going down to 43 degrees, and a particularly heavy dew was to be seen; water dropping from the tips of leaves and flowers as if there had been a smart shower. July has also had an unusually heavy rainfall, the total to the present date being close to 4 inches.—W.P.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

FRIDAY, JULY 23, 1915

MUST WAKE UP.

The young men of Peterborough must awaken to the call of the Empire. The 59th Battalion is now nearly complete and Peterborough has not done its share. There are only 45 or 50 Peterborough recruits in the 59th, when they should at least have been 100. There is still time to improve this representation and to make a better showing in the 77th Battalion, which is the new regiment to be mobilized in this division. The Recruiting Committee organized three weeks ago has so far given no public demonstration of its purposes. The committee, as well as the young men, should realize that it is now—to-day—that men are wanted. The message on one of the recruiting banners used in Toronto is striking: "You said you would go when you were wanted. You are wanted now."

AN AMERICAN TRIBUTE.

Whatever the outcome of the European war its history must reserve a brilliant page for recounting the valor of "The Patricias," known in the records as Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry. No regiment in any army has achieved a more glorious record, though, sadly enough, the path which it followed has led straight to the grave.

When the regiment took to the trenches in Flanders it comprised 1,015 men. Five months later, on May 7,835 answered to the roll call. On the following night when the regiment was relieved from its position, which it had defended through repeated attacks by artillery and infantry, only 150 men responded. Lieutenant-colonel Farquhar, the commanding officer, was killed on March 20, Lieutenant-colonel Buller, who succeeded to command, was wounded on May 5, and two days later Major Gault, next in command, was wounded.

"The Patricias" contained a far larger proportion of experienced soldiers than any other unit of the Canadian division. For this reason the regiment was hurried to the trenches. The men behaved like veterans from the very first, says the official record which has just been published. Certainly they behaved like heroes. They defended the colours in the very jaws of death—colours which Princess Patricia worked with her own hands. The world will ever do homage to such gallantry.—Buffalo Courier.

DUTCH SYMPATHY.

If Germany desired additional information as to the way in which her methods of warfare are viewed by the rest of the world she should find it in the changed attitude of the Dutch towards her, says the Ottawa Free Press. At the commencement of the war the people of Holland were distinctly pro-German in their sympathies. This was natural because of the racial connections between the two peoples and also because of the memory of Britain's war with the Boers. But this pro-German feeling in Holland has given place to an unmistakable sympathy for the allies. No longer are the Dutch giving their moral support to Germany.

And the reason for the change is the knowledge the Hollanders have gained of the German methods of making war. They have had an excellent opportunity of observing these methods. Belgians refugees flocked into Holland bringing tales of German atrocities. Germany submitted Holland to the indignities of a clumsy campaign to distribute through Dutch newspapers information favourable to the Germans. There has been evidence that Germany was prepared to violate Dutch territory if it suited her "military expediency." The Dutch have contrasted these German methods with those of the allies and not only have they developed a fear of Germany but a feeling of moral support for Germany's adversaries. The knowledge that the war lords would not hesitate to invade Holland without provocation should such an invasion help their military plans has led the Dutch to fortify their German and Belgian frontier —and to prepare for the defence of their country. They know they have nothing to fear from the allies, but that they must be always ready to resist an ambitious attempt by those with whom they formerly sympathized.

CANADA'S NEW LOAN AND WHAT IT MEANS

The placing of $40,000,000 five per cent. notes of the Dominion Government in the United States is the most important Canadian financial transaction of the year for several reasons. It completely shatters what was once President Wilson's disapproval of loans to belligerent Governments by United States bankers. It increases the total of Canadian securities purchased in any one year by the United States to a new high record. It illustrates once again that legitimate Canadian financing, despite the troubles caused by the war, is being carried on without difficulty. It also points to the possibility that in the comparatively near future Canadians will be asked to subscribe to a war loan issued in their own country.

Canada has sold this year, according to the figures of the Monetary Times, and including the $40,000,000 loan just placed in the United States, $168,000,000 worth of its securities. The issues were made in the following markets: United States $100,000,000, Canada $27,000,000, Great Britain $41,000,000. In addition, through an arrangement made with the British Government, Canada has received since the outbreak of war approximately $160,000,000, or $10,000,000 monthly, in the shape of war loans. These loans will be repaid by the issue of long-term loans in London, and probably in Canada, at times to be agreed upon by Finance Minister White and Chancellor of the Exchequer McKenna. Adding to the ordinary loans of $168,000,000 sold to date, this year's war loans amounting to $60,000,000, the total borrowings of the Dominion, war and otherwise, amount to $228,000,000 to date. This compares with total borrowings in 1914 of $257,000,000. In other words, the Dominion's borrowings for approximately seven months of this year are only $20,000,000 less than for the entire twelve months of 1914.

Borrowing from United States.

The most striking phase of this borrowing is the transfer of Canada's money market since the outbreak of war from Great Britain to the United States. Our neighbour across the line is the only lending country to which we can apply, and was therefore the natural money market for Canada in this time of trouble. That we have borrowed there is therefore not a matter of surprise, but what is especially gratifying are the facts that we have been able to change entirely our borrowing arrangements from one country to another without delay and to borrow a large amount in that new market.

The following table, compiled so far as the years up to 1914 are concerned, from Mr. E. R. Wood's yearly bond statistics, shows the share of Canadian bonds which the United States has purchased in recent years:

Year.	Canadian Securities Purchased by United States—Per Cent. Share
1910	1.50
1911	6.58
1912	11.35
1913	13.65
1914	19.77
1915 (to date)	59.50

A Domestic Loan Seen.

The United States has therefore purchased nearly 60 per cent. of our bonds this year to date, which is 200 per cent. more than the previous high record, which is a very striking fact. In his memorandum issued from Ottawa yesterday giving details of the $40,000,000 loan placed in the United States, Finance Minister White stated that in view of the heavy financial demands which will be made for the movement of this year's crop, and for the extension of credit to those engaged in producing war munitions and supplies, and to the business and agricultural community generally, he had "not thought it expedient for the present to resort to a Canadian domestic loan issue." This is the first occasion since August last upon which a Cabinet Minister has made a public utterance regarding the possibility of a Canadian loan issued to Canadians in Canada. The placing of such a loan has evidently been taken into serious consideration. In the British House of Commons, on June 30th, Chancellor of the Exchequer McKenna said: "While anxious to give the residents of the Overseas Dominions every opportunity of subscribing to the British war loan, I hope they will not lose sight of the fact that they can do a greater service to the Empire by lending their resources to their own Dominion, and so reduce the calls made by those governments on the United Kingdom."

This obviously was a hint that Canada should help itself as far as possible, especially in view of the fact that we are obtaining regular loans, for war purposes, of $10,000,000 monthly from the British Government. The big loan of $40,000,000 in the United States is made partly with that view in mind. Mr. White has outlined the objections to a Canadian domestic loan at the present time, bu it is quite likely that such a loan will be issued, possibly early next year and probably for $50,000,000. By proper economy, Canadians might subscribe such an issue out of new savings, without drawing to any extent on savings already established in the chartered banks and elsewhere.

A size-up, therefore, of the general situation in regard to Canadian financing is extremely gratifying and is given a pleasing touch by the $40,000,000 loan in NewYork. The ease with which the nation is financing, despite war's alarms, is still another reason why business men should be optimistic regarding the Canadian position.

TELLS VIVID STORY OF FALKLAND FIGHT

The following vivid description of the naval battle off the Falkland Islands last December was written by Vice-Admiral Sturdee's Flag Lieutenant on board the British Invincible to a friend in England, who forwarded a copy of it to a mutual acquaintance in New York.

I went through six hours' hell yesterday—I'll start at the beginning. We arrived at Port Stanley, in the Falkland Islands at 11 o'clock, the day before yesterday, and we all started to coal, getting in stores, etc., and of course there was lots of signaling to be done, and lots to arrange, and I was busy all day till very late. About 7.30 a.m. yesterday, I was sitting in my dressing gown and feeling very sleepy, drinking a cup of tea, when a signalman came in and reported, "Sapper Hill reports two men-of-war approaching." So I tore into the Admiral's cabin and told him, then flew to my cabin, and got into some clothes. We had colliers alongside and steam was not up, at least it was at two hours' notice; so there was a proper fustle and scurry, and we told the colliers to shove off at once.

Meanwhile, on came these two, the Gneisenau and the Leipzig. Then came the Scharnhorst, the Dresden and the Nurnperg over the horison. They never knew the Invincible and Inflexible were anywhere but in the North Sea, and as soon as they saw us they turned and ran. Well we got out of the harbor in an hour and a quarter, and off we went after them. We got within ten miles of them at noon, so we slowed down to let the men have some food before the fight. At a quarter to 1 we went on at full speed, the Glasgow and ourselves, followed about three miles astern by the Carnavon, Cornwall and Kent. The last three couldn't keep up.

At 1 o'clock we opened fire slowly, just trying the range, and we hit the Nurnberg or the Leipdig, I don't know which it was. Anyhow, she steered away, and I signalled to the Kent to chase her. The Glasgow turned around, too, without signal, and went after her.

We were going about 25 knots and closing the enemy fast. The Dresden and Leipzig turned away, so it left the Scharnhorst and the Gneisenau to fight a duel with us. After the German small cruisers left, the Scharnhorst turned around and opened fire on us; so did the Gneisenau, and they shot fiendishly well.

Germans Score Hits.

We went on hammering away for some time, getting closer and closer, and they were hitting us pretty badly. I thought one foremast had gone once. The Admiral and I were half way up so as to get a good view. One of the legs of the mast was shot away. Shell fire is unpleasant to put it mildly. Exploding shells, when they hit the ship, are worse, as one wonders how many she will stand. The Admiral was wonderfully cool and collected, and I bobbed my head at every shell, and got a stiff neck from doing it. Well, we turned then, and they turned, too; but it threw their fire off the shell hitting the ship and bursting splinters flying, and the ship catching fire here and there, and the awful din, all rather upsetting to the nerves. They turned again, so off we had to go after them and at it again; then the Scarnhorst suddenly heeled over and went down bow first, her engines still going, colours flying, and guns firing.

Gneisenau's Hard Fight.

The Gneisenau hesitated, or seemed to, as she passed her flag ship. We were still shooting at them, and then she came on, hammer and tongs; still we went on till 6 p.m., when she turned right around and ceased firing. She still had her colours flying, so we went on till I reported to the Admiral that all her men were assembling on the forecastle, and she was turning over. Away she went, and some 300 were left swimming and hanging on to the wreckage in the water. They had all been through hell, poor devils.

It was the most awful sight that I had ever seen. The water was just about freezing and they were all calling out; one could hear them three-quarters of a mile off. We steamed up and lowered what was left of our boats and we picked up seven officers and ninety-eight men. The Inflexible picked up a lot more, but they were drowning right and left, too weak to hang on. Some were wounded, of course. One couldn't help being upset about it. I counted twenty-four men sinking in one small patch; the water was very clear.

The Glasgow and the Cornwall sank the Leipzig, and the Kent sank the Nurnberg, so we had a great victory. We were pretty badly knocked about, and you never saw such a mess of twisted iron and huge holes, and the wonderful thing, it is really almost beyond belief, we hadn't got one casuality. Commander Townsend was knocked down and bruised his head, but that was all. It will take some repairing. We were hit thirty-four times by 8-inch shells, and they do make a mess of things, I can tell you. One of the German officers is rigged out in my old blue Norfolk jacket and an old pair of flannel trousers. Fourteen of the survivors have died; we buried them at sea this morning.

Dec. 29—We put in at Montevideo yesterday. The Consul and Minister came off to see the Admiral on business about 10 a.m. I had to go ashore to bring them off. Everybody ashore seemed pleased with us, and the tramway conductor shook me warmly by the hand, and I had my picture taken twenty times at once. Well, the Admiral and I went ashore at 12 o'clock, to lunch, and once more we were snapped every two minutes. After lunch we went to the Embassy, and after a lot more business we had to sit down and be photographed again. We were then taken to a big "bun fight" given by the English colony. They all clapped and clapped when we came in. Awful crash, speeches and more photographs. I escaped at 5 p.m. A Uruguayan bloke came up and said to the Admiral: "May I take your Flag Lieutenant in my car and show him something of Montevideo." So off I went. It's a fine town, and he took me to a place where he said all the smart people went on Sunday. It's on the sea, a sort of summer resort, enormous houses, and lovely flowers, palms, etc. It was raining when we got there; a tropical shower; so we got an umbrella and dashed into the lounge, and to my horror, the whole place was packed with people who stood up and clapped and cheered. However, I did the idol smile and bowed right and left.

I cursed my host softly, and I told him he was a blighter. So with everyone staring at me as if I was a freak we walked across a huge ballroom place and out into the verandah, where there swarms more of very smart-looking people, and I am bothered if the band didn't burst forth into "God Save the King." Then they all clapped again; it was awful. Then we sat down and drank champagne. After a bit we left, and went to the Cacino, where once more the band played "God Save the King," and I had to bow and grin like a fool. So when I came out I said to him: "Am I drunk or am I the King, or what am I?" Anyhow it was time I went back to fetch the Admiral; so off we went. I got on board at 7.30. It was a funny experience.

I have got bits of shells as mementoes, and my brand new cap is full of holes. The two money chests were hit by shells, so at present we have no money. We intercept the press telegrams, so we get the war news every day.

DID IT EVER OCCUR TO YOU

That if there are three houses to rent in this town, anyone of which would suit you, at least two of them will be advertised in these columns.

That YOUR NEXT POSITION may be advertised to-day.

That the next furnished room you'll live in is probably advertised in another column.

That if there's nothing a Want Ad. can help you to accomplish—you're leading too quiet a life!

That if you have need of a worker, you have need of a Want Ad.

That a Store should be advertised as REGULARLY as it is opened for business. A merchant who would'nt close up for a while now and then 'to save running expenses' should'nt stop advertising now and then "to save expense."

That sometimes a LITTLE more advertising will mean a GREAT DEAL more business for a store.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

WHITHER THOU GOEST

By E. HOWELL NEUMANN

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"And thou wilt return to me, my husband?"

"Soul of mine, why dost thou doubt? Lorinka, I go. There remains but the night between me and Sakhalin, the grave of my country. And we be starving, little Madonna, and a man's work is a man's work.

"Why do you tremble so? It is but a little mouse gnawing my boot, a bold little starveling. I will return quickly from America and wait for you in Italy, where the Russian police may not seek me out and the sun always shines.

"And if thou die, my life?"

"I cannot die, beautiful child, without thee."

"And—and some one else—Olga, who goes with thee?"

"Ah, soul of mine, I am thine! My body goes unwillingly, and my soul stays with thee. A body without a soul, I wander—a body torn by the separation.

"Ah, Lorinka, there is but one thing left to me—the mercy of thy letters—but thou must guard well the contents, for they will watch thee."

"I cannot let thee go."

He wrapped his great shouba with its warmth of sheepskin about her, but the girl still trembled, yet not with the deadly cold.

She was a beautiful girl and nearly as tall as he. Her blue black hair was in great plaits around her head.

Her wide black eyes, lidded with long lashes and the eyebrows arching delicately above them, were now wild with terror.

She was the bride of a year, and her husband was fleeing in the night from the Russian police.

There was a noise outside, the wheels of a cart dragging in the mud, and above it rang clearly the silver tones of the bells of the drosky, which arches from the shaft above the horse's neck.

Lorinka straightened her body till it was rigid in suspense.

Before the narrow door of the little hut drew up a Siberian horse, white and beautiful as the snow it stepped on, with long, flowing tail and mane and the peculiar grace of its species.

She stood half embarrassed, half smiling, her glance lingering over every feature of Michael's—the straight even brows that were drawn, the shadows beneath the high maxillary bones; glancing down to his neck and shoulders, which were strong like a bull's; seeing even on the floor at his feet the old cap, that he had worn six years when a Cossack, fast freezing to the ground, and a tiny silver cross on its chain on his breast.

Then her lashes drooped as her eyes turned to Lorinka, whose dark head, with its plaits, rested close to where the cross lay.

Lorinka raised her head and nodded to the little woman in the door, who seemed to her as the embodied instrument of fate.

Olga and she had been rivals.

Olga had loved Michael long and would now drive the tarantas, the rough cart—perhaps walk beside it part of the way, as driving was freezing work, and Michael, living, would pass as the corpse of her brother, which she, poor peasant, was driving to the church—and perhaps he would be a real corpse when the long, weary ride in the cold should be ended.

Who else but some one who loved him would venture it, risk liberty and help him escape?

Olga would go to America with him, for she dared not return, while Lorinka, his wife, must stay and bide her time.

Under the urge of Lorinka's hands, like a man in some evil dream, he went out to the tarantas and laid himself flat on its boards, while she pulled a black cover over his prostrate figure, placed a bundle of hay beneath his head and two heavy loaves of ten pounds each of black bread done up in jute beside him, with teakettle and glasses and an old worn Bible.

The white horse and the tarantas drew out into the white still night and the vast steppes.

Michael made a little hole in the cover, and his eyes watched the slowly receding hut in the snow field.

He wanted to impress her image in his soul for dark nights in alien lands, and he strained his eyes till her white face and arms, luminous in the door, seemed frozen there, and he felt that he, too, was frozen in the watching.

Olga drove into the slumbering village of Alexandrovska with the reins in one hand and crossing herself piously with the other.

The police watched her go past, and her eyes were ever on the gold cross of the domed church at the far end of the village.

A day brought them into the city of Habarovska, where the nearly frozen Michael revived, and they took the slow train of the fourth class of the Usuriski railway, stopping at every little station for hot water for tea, and in seventeen days they reached Odessa and took ship for America.

Always Olga stayed close to Michael with her naive little smile, biding her time and waiting with the infinite patience of woman.

And ever Michael turned on her dull eyes, his tall figure never relaxing into ease, his black eyes hollow, as if his soul had indeed stayed back there in the snow and whiteness, close to the soul of Lorinka.

Once he was gay—as the ship sailed into the harbor of New York and the sun flashed its welcome from the towering skyscrapers.

His slow, plodding soul had the new land fixed as refuge, freedom, liberty—the peasant's dream.

Thereafter and for many days he abode as an exile, working on contract down in Mulberry street, making Russian cigarettes for a Greek firm.

He did well and gave a bit of his earnings to Olga.

He bore himself toward her with a gentle good will, guarding her from any chance of harm, and the blue eyed Olga, in her Russian blouse and with a yellow kerchief outlining the oval of her face, sold the red and blue prismatic embroideries that her busy fingers made.

Slowly, as all things came to him, entered the spirit of the new land, most marvelous as it opened great sweeping spaces of life and laughter and freedom of men, newspapers without the columns blotted out by the ink roller of a Russian censor, gatherings at night with old acquaintances.

Days went by without the mercy of her letters, and Olga became a song bird for joy, but he seemed, as he had said that night on the steppes, a body without a soul.

Then word came that Lorinka had been sent to prison in Siberia for the vague reason of aiding her husband to escape, and during the ensuing fever Olga tended him when his hot, parched lips called forth in delirium: "Lorinka! Lorinka! Liuboff moia!"

That was the only happiness that Olga snatched to her breast—the delirium of a sick man who saw her as the form of his beloved—and she waited and watched ever after with the memory of those hours.

The next day Michael greeted her with a rare smile, and her heart trembled within her.

"Olga, Olga, doragola!" he called her "Lorinka has escaped! She comes by the next steamer!"

Wild with delight that Thursday, Michael waited down in the big government building at Ellis island in the room that has been called the "kissing post," where bare walls and supporting columns have been known to glimmer and sparkle.

The minutes dragged, and Lorinka did not come.

Michael went from one official to another. He saw Mishka, from his old village. She had been on the boat with him. She must be detained in the building somewhere.

Swiftly the soul swept passionately into them and she lay in his arms, knowing no world beyond their shelter, her heart singing.

"Her eyes—trachoma," he said softly. "She must go back. Perhaps—who can tell?—she may soon be cured and then come again."

Slowly the words sank into the deep waters of Michael's soul.

His face was heavy, his straight brows were drawn.

"She is my wife." He spoke brusquely, his deep voice filled with still passion. "I am a citizen, an American citizen"—

"Perhaps—in a year or six months?" The doctor's words trickled into silence.

Michael put his hand to his head and glanced round the room with the same dull glance with which he had gazed at the bare hut that night on the steppes, and his thoughts were there in the bitter cold.

"My very soul! Go back"—

He looked at her and laughed. It was a hard, strange sound.

He leaned down and drew her mouth to his.

And gray skies, the expanse of eternal snows, whistling blizzards, the steppes everlastingly the same with their vastness and loneliness, their undulating waves of lush grass, the purple voloshki with its pall of color, the white kashka with its mushroom heads drooping, the sallow drok and the silver, timid moon—Siberia, the dungeon—and she!

Lorinka's eyes, charged with dreams, were on his.

Suddenly and passionately both his arms shot up in supplication.

"Go back!" he cried. "Da-da. Yes, yes, I go, I go—if it were to hell! Where she goes there go I."

His hands dropped down again in a mighty embrace, encircling the woman, and in his passionate, primitive way he took her off her feet.

The steppe, that Russian sea, surged up before him, but now it enfolded them in the arms of night, with love like a rich and lustrous coat shutting out the cold.

The bare walls echoed again and again and again, softly, triumphantly.

"Together!"

She now knew her patient waiting had been in vain—that she had lost him forever.

Gold Hunt of 36 Years Is at Last Rewarded

CHICAGO, July 23.—Here is another romance of the gold fields. It differs in one respect from most of the stories of the days of '49—it is true. Its beginning and its last chapter, to date, are in Chicago. The intervening scenes are laid wherever men seek with pick and shovel, pan and sluice-way the yellow metal called gold.

Now the hero of a true gold romance, Joseph Perazzo, plans to devote his wealth to bringing happiness to relatives who had thought him dead long since.

Thirty-six years ago Perazzo was a Chicago clerk. Then the fever that sends men over the burning desert and into the bitter cold of the frozen North seized him. The Black Hills gold strike had just been announced, and he set the counter forever behind him.

Only discouragement and privation were his rewards in the Dakotas. Then Utah, Montana and Colorado in order called him. No better success greeted him. He passed up the Klondike rush and hiked for Arigona.

A few days ago, bronzed by thirty-six years of life in the open and erect and vigorous despite his sixty-eight years, Perazzo returned to Chicago. He holds control in a mine near Oatman, Ariz., and while he declines to give any idea of his wealth, he says:

"It's plenty for me and mine as long as there are any of us to enjoy it."

Mrs. Jacob Kneip, a sister, leaves with him in a few days for the California expositions and will spend the winter with him in a beautiful bungalow he plans to build at San Diego. Her daughter, Mrs. C. O'Gorman, will go with them.

Two other daughters, Misses Grace and May Kneip, have been taken from their employment in downtown department stores and started on the musical education they longed for, but never expected to get.

POTATOES ROTTING IN THE FIELDS

Prof. Jones of the Ontario Agricultural Society Suggests Treatment

Prof. Dan H. Jones, B.S.A., of the Department of Bacteriology, of the Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, has issued the following bulletin:

During the last few days we have received from various districts in the Province of Ontario samples of diseased young potato vines, which requests for information regarding the nature, cause and cure of the disease. We had just previously noticed the same disease amongst the potato crops both on the experimental grounds and in the general crop of potatoes on the College farm. As the disease appears to be fairly wide spread this season, we have deemed it advisable to issue a circular letter respecting it.

Appearance of the Disease.

In the growing crop an affected plant will have a wilted appearance, being dull dirty green in colour, the stems flaccid, the leaves will have a tendency to curl. The stems near the ground and below will be blackened, and in the various stages of decay from a soft wet rot. On digging out the seed potato, it will be found to be soft and pulpy, and when broken open, the inside is usually slimy and gives off an offensive odour.

Nature and Cause of the Disease.

This soft rot of potatoes is a bacterial disease. Its development in ground where it has not been before is nearly always due to disease seed potatoes having been used for planting. As long as affected seed potatoes are kept dry, the disease will not spread, but as soon as they become moist the soft rot develops as the bacteria which cause it have then a chance to develop rapidly. An affected seed potato in which the disease has been checked by drying out will have brown, or blackish discolourations which are easily seen on cutting. The rot may be present in varying degrees, but as it has dried out it may look like a dry rot. When such affected potatoes are planted the moist conditions in the soil which are necessary for growth, are favourable for the further development of the disease. Some of the eyes of the potato will send up their shoots, but these are usually weak and spindly. As the disease continues to rot the seed tuber it enters the young shoots and rapidly passes upwards, causing the stems to blacken and rot near the surface of the ground, then the top wilts and topples over.

Treatment.

Spraying of any kind is of no direct use with this disease. The treatment is preventive rather than curative. As pointed out above, the disease develops in the first place from affected seed tubers. But when once it is established in a crop it may be spread from the diseased plants to neighbouring healthy plants by the cultivator, hoe or other implement used getting contaminated by coming in contact with a rotting plant and then with a healthy plant. Biting insects, as the potato bug, also spread the disease to some extent, and it is only by spraying for these that spraying is helpful in preventing the spread of the disease.

The crop should be carefully inspected and every plant that is found to be rotting should be dug out and either burned or buried in quick lime.

When harvesting the potatoes, any tuber that shows any signs of the disease should be placed on one side and not allowed to be stored with the main pile. Should the disease not be far advanced in the tuber, the affected part may be cut off and the rest used for food. If any of these affected tubers get into the seed pile to be used the following year, they will either rot during storage and cause those around them to rot also if they are not kept dry, and, if they are kept dry, the disease will be checked until they are planted, when they will rot and destroy the plant that springs from them.

New Mexico's production of 3,877,659 short tons of coal last year was the greatest in the history of the state.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

WHITHER THOU GOEST

By E. HOWELL NEUMANN

Copyright by Frank A. Munsey Co.

"And thou wilt return to me, my husband?"

"Soul of mine, why dost thou doubt? Lorinka, I go. There remains but the night between me and Sakhalin, the grave of my country. And we be starving, little Madonna, and a man's work is a man's work.

"Why do you tremble so? It is but a little mouse gnawing my boot, a bold little starveling. I will return quickly from America and wait for you in Italy, where the Russian police may not seek me out and the sun always shines.

"And if thou die, my life?"

"I cannot die, beautiful child, without thee."

"And—and some one else—Olga, who goes with thee?"

"Ah, soul of mine, I am thine! My body goes unwillingly, and my soul stays with thee. A body without a soul, I wander—a body torn by the separation.

"Ah, Lorinka, there is but one thing left to me—the mercy of thy letters—but thou must guard well the contents, for they will witch thee."

"I cannot let thee go."

He wrapped his great shouba with its warmth of sheepskin about her, but the girl still trembled, yet not with the deadly cold.

She was a beautiful girl and nearly as tall as he. Her blue black hair was in great plaits around her head.

Her wide black eyes, lidded with long lashes and the eyebrows arching delicately above them, were now wild with terror.

She was the bride of a year, and her husband was fleeing in the night from the Russian police.

There was a noise outside, the wheels of a cart dragging in the mud, and above it rang clearly the silver tones of the bells of the drosky, which arches from the shaft above the horse's neck.

Lorinka straightened her body till it was rigid in suspense.

Before the narrow door of the little hut drew up a Siberian horse, white and beautiful as the snow it stepped on, with long, flowing tail and mane and the peculiar grace of its species.

She stood half embarrassed, half smiling, her glance lingering over every feature of Michael's—the straight even brows that were drawn, the shadows beneath the high maxillary bones; glancing down to his neck and shoulders, which were strong like a bull's; seeing even on the floor at his feet the old cap, that he had worn six years when a Cossack, fast freezing to the ground, and a tiny silver cross on its chain on his breast.

Then her lashes drooped as her eyes turned to Lorinka, whose dark head, with its plaits, rested close to where the cross lay.

Lorinka raised her head and nodded to the little woman in the door, who seemed to her as the embodied instrument of fate.

Olga and she had been rivals.

Olga had loved Michael long and would now drive the tarantas, the rough cart—perhaps walk beside it part of the way, as driving was freezing work, and Michael, living, would pass as the corpse of her brother, which she, poor peasant, was driving to the church—and perhaps he would be a real corpse when the long, weary ride in the cold should be ended.

Who else but some one who loved him would venture it, risk liberty and help him escape?

Olga would go to America with him, for she dared not return, while Lorinka, his wife, must stay and bide her time.

Under the urge of Lorinka's hands, like a man in some evil dream, he went out to the tarantas and laid himself flat on its boards, while she pulled a black cover over his prostrate figure, placed a bundle of hay beneath his head and two heavy loaves of ten pounds each of black bread done up in jute beside him, with teakettle and glasses and an old worn Bible.

The white horse and the tarantas drew out into the white still night and the vast steppes.

Michael made a little hole in the cover, and his eyes watched the slowly receding hut in the snow field.

He wanted to impress her image in his soul for dark nights in alien lands, and he strained his eyes till her white face and arms, luminous in the door, seemed frozen there, and he felt that he, too, was frozen in the watching.

Olga drove into the slumbering village of Alexandrovska with the reins in one hand and crossing herself pious ly with the other.

The police watched her go past, and her eyes were ever on the gold cross of the domed church at the far end of the village.

A day brought them into the city of Habarovska, where the nearly frozen Michael revived, and they took the slow train of the fourth class of the Usuriski railway, stopping at every little station for hot water for tea, and in seventeen days they reached Odessa

and took ship for America.

Always Olga stayed close to Michael with her naive little smile, biding her time and waiting with the infinite patience of woman.

And ever Michael turned on her dull eyes, his tall figure never relaxing into ease, his black eyes hollow, as if his soul had indeed stayed back there in the snow and whiteness, close to the soul of Lorinka.

Once he was gay—as the ship sailed into the harbor of New York and the sun flashed its welcome from the tow-

His slow, plodding soul had the new land fixed as refuge, freedom, liberty—the peasant's dream.

Thereafter and for many days he abode as an exile, working on contract down in Mulberry street, making Russian cigarettes for a Greek firm.

He did well and gave a bit of his earnings to Olga.

He bore himself toward her with a gentle good will, guarding her from any chance of harm, and the blue eyed Olga, in her Russian blouse and with a yellow kerchief outlining the oval of her face, sold the red and blue prismatic embroideries that her busy fingers made.

Slowly, as all things came to him, entered the spirit of the new land, most marvelous as it opened great sweeping spaces of life and laughter and freedom of men, newspapers without the columns blotted out by the ink roller of a Russian censor, gatherings at night with old acquaintances.

Days went by without the mercy of her letters, and Olga became a song bird for joy, but he seemed, as he had said that night on the steppes, a body without a soul.

Then word came that Lorinka had been sent to prison in Siberia for the vague reason of aiding her husband to escape, and during the ensuing fever Olga tended him when his hot, parched lips called forth in delirium: "Lorinka! Lorinka! Liuboff moia!"

That was the only happiness that Olga snatched to her breast—the delirium of a sick man who saw her as the form of his beloved—and she waited and watched ever after with the memory of those hours.

The next day Michael greeted her with a rare smile, and her heart trembled within her.

"Olga, Olga, dorogoia!" he called her. "Lorinka has escaped! She comes by the next steamer!"

Wild with delight that Thursday, Michael waited down in the big government building at Ellis Island in the room that has been called the "kissing post," where bare walls and supporting columns have been known to glimmer and sparkle.

The minutes dragged, and Lorinka did not come.

Michael went from one official to another. He saw Mishka, from his old village. She had been on the boat with him. She must be detained in the building somewhere.

Swiftly the soul swept passionately into them and she lay in his arms, knowing no world beyond their shelter, her heart singing.

"Her eyes—trachoma," he said softly. "She must go back. Perhaps—who can tell?—she may soon be cured and then come again."

Slowly the words sank into the deep waters of Michael's soul.

His face was heavy, his straight brows were drawn.

"She is my wife." He spoke brusquely, his deep voice filled with still passion. "I am a citizen, an American citizen"—

"Perhaps—in a year or six months?" The doctor's words trickled into silence.

Michael put his hand to his head and glanced round the room with the same dull glance with which he had gazed at the bare hut that night on the steppes, and his thoughts were there in the bitter cold.

"My very soul! Go back"—

He looked at her and laughed. It was a hard, strange sound.

He leaned down and drew her mouth to his.

And grey skies, the expanse of eternal snows, whistling blizzards, the steppes everlastingly the same with their vastness and loneliness, their undulating waves of lush grass, the purple volooshki with its pall of color, the white kashka with its mushroom heads drooping, the sallow druk and the silver, timid moon—Siberia, the dungeon—and she!

Lorinka's eyes, charged with dreams, were on his.

Suddenly and passionately both his arms shot up in supplication.

His hands dropped down again in a mighty embrace, encircling the woman, and in his passionate, primitive way he took her off her feet.

The steppe, that Russian sea, surged up before him, but now it cradled them in the arms of night, with love like a rich and lustrous coat shutting out the cold.

The bare walls echoed again and again and again, softly, triumphantly.

"Together!"

She now knew her patient waiting had been in vain—that she had lost him forever.

EXAMINER TO PUBLISH THE FULL FINDINGS OF THE BRYCE COMMISSION

Commencing on Monday the Examiner will publish daily, portions of the report of the committee on the alleged German outrages appointed by His Majesty's government, and presided over by the Right Hon. Viscount Bryce, O.M., etc., etc., formerly British Ambassador at Washington.

The Warrant of Appointment is as follows:

I hereby appoint the Right Hon. Viscount Bryce, O.M.; the Right Hon. Frederick Pollock, Bt., K.C.; the Right Hon. Sir Edward Clark, K.C.; Sir Alfred Hopkinson, K.C.; Mr. H. A. L. Fisher, Vice-Chancellor of the University of Sheffield, and Mr. Harold Cox, to be a committee to consider and advise on the evidence collected on behalf of His Majesty's Government as to the outrages alleged to have been committeed by German troops during the present war, cases of alleged maltreatment of civilians in the invaded territories, and breaches of the laws and established usages of war; and to prepare a report for His Majesty's Government showing the conclusion at which they arrive on the evidence now available. And I appoint Viscount Bryce to be chairman, and Mr. E. Grimwood Mears and Mr. W. J. H. Brodrick, barristers-at-law, to be joint secretaries to the committee.

15th December, 1914.

Sir Kenelm E. Digby, K.C., G.C.B., was appointed an additional member of the committee on 22nd January, 1915.

Sentence Was Suspended

William Chorley, Who Stole a Rain coat While He Was Drunk Was Given Another Chance.

William Chorley, who stole a lady's raincoat from the Palace Hotel, was such a bright-looking young man that Magistrate Dumble thought he would give him another chance to make good. Chorley was accordingly directed to pay into Court the sum of $10.50 and let off on suspended sentence. His employer was present in Court, and this morning he had visited Chorley in the jail and paid him the balance of his wages, and the defendant was in a position to pay the costs of the Court.

Before Chorley left he was given some good advice by the Magistrate. The circumstances of the theft were that Chorley was under the influence of liquor at the time. He sold the coat at a second-hand store on Simcoe street for two dollars. The Magistrate did not think the purchaser of the coat could have been acting right when he paid a man for a woman's coat, and in the pocket was a handkerchief, especially when the man was drunk. He therefore would not order the money to be refunded to the second-hand man, but remarked that he deserved to lose it.

Captured Gun Of The Germans At Exhibition

TORONTO, July 23.—Some idea of the dimensions and destructive power of the captured German gun which the British war office is loaning to the fair as part of the war trophy exhibit, may be gleaned from the fact that for purposes of crating a box 16 feet long, 9 feet high and 8 feet wide, was required. This is just about the dimensions of the modern sized room of the average building.

The exhibition's representative in sending along the inforamtion that the gun is now on the way to Toronto, writes that "of the hundreds of guns in the possession of the British this is the only one that is complete." When unlimbered he says "it will take up one whole side of your exhibit.

The Crops in Western Ontario

Mr. S. D. Carver of North Monaghan Has Just Returned From an Automobile Trip.

Mr. S. D. Carver, of North Monaghan, has returned from an automobile trip through Western Ontario. The trip included Norfolk, Welland, Haldimand and Wentworth counties. Speaking of the crops, Mr. Carver said that the hay crop was about one-third less than last year. The fall wheat, oats and barley could not be better. In the fruit district of Welland, Mr. Carver found conditions very satisfactory. The cherries, plums, peaches and pears represent a good crop. The apples are inclined to be a little light.

Mr. Carver speaks very highly of the roads. He is of the opinion that would-be-roadmakers in this section of the community could learn many valuable lessons by taking a trip to Western Ontario.

1,000 Machine Guns Are Now In Sight For The Canadian Troops

OTTAWA, Ont., July 23.— Private contributions aggregating an amount sufficient to purchase 1,000 machine guns for use by the Canadian forces at the front are already in the possession ofthe Receiver General here or promised and forthcoming. The amount includes two sums of $100,000 each from wealthy individuals, one sum of half a million dollars from the Province of Ontario, an other sum of $40,000, and, other amounts ranging from $10 to $5,000, from individuals, institutions, clubs, owners's organizations, and municipalities. In fact, the number of those who believe that the most effective aid is an apparatus for killing purposes is increasing.

Doubling the Supply.

Senator Lougheed, Acting Miniate of Militia, stated to-day that the Department of Militia had decided to increase the regulation complement of the battalions from four to eight machine guns. This will represent double the regulation equipment of the British forces, though it is believed that the latter forces will also double their complement. This number is to be supplied by the Government from the war appropriation fund The Government has already ordered from one company sufficient guns to bring the regiments up to this strength.

Private subscriptions will be used to supply guns over and above the complement of eight to be supplied by the Government. The number of guns which a battalion can use is practically only limited by the number of skilled operators.

Germans Had Hidden Guns.

The Germans, it is believed, have about 12 guns to each regiment, while in hidden positions roofed with concrete and behind the trenches others are located. It was the presence of these hidden guns in large numbers which caused heavy losses among the allied troops at Neuve Chapelle, at St. Julien and Festubert.

There is really no limit to the number of machine guns which a division can use.

The question arises as to whether the number of guns subscribed for can be obtained. Senator Lougheed states that the Government is doing all in its power to secure as large a number as possible, and that the company is working at capacity turning them out.

Donors Cannot Choose.

Many donors have stipulated that their subscriptions be used for the allocation of guns to certain mentioned regiments, but it is pointed out that there are certain difficulties which prevent such an arrangement Battalions now being organized must of necessity be reinforcing regiments. It is not expected that more than two Canadian divisions will be in the field in Flanders, and it is therefore pain that the guns, with the exception of those needed for training purposes in the various camps of the Dominion must be placed where the enemy is at the front. Battalions now being organized must of necessity lose their identity and be merged ultimately into the divisions. Where the machine guns donated to be given only to the regiments organized where the subscriptions were made, a condition might arise where some regiments would be poorly equipped and other regiments heagily equipped. Distribution must be made on the base of military necessity, said Senator Lougheed.

Festival at Gilmore Church Was a Success

The annual raspberry festival of Gilmore memorial Church was held last night, with the Salvation Army band in attendance. Besides selections by the band, recitations were given by Mildred Archer, a duet by Mrs. Young and Mrs. Telford, and a candle drill by the girls of the church. Short addresses were also given by Rev. Mr. Webb, Rev. Mr Brown, Rev. Mr. McKee, and Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P. Although the night was cool, the customary large crowd was on hand to enjoy the supper and programme. The chairman of the evening was Mr. Joseph Wearing, M.A., Peterborough.

Eat Hay If You Would Get Fat And Kill Blues

CHICAGO, July 23.—If you would heartily enjoy your meals, banish the baneful blues and grow fat—why, eat hay!

Not the regular new mown hay that Maude Muller made famous nor the common, ordinary variety that is gathered in from many fields afar and near by toilsome labour each harvest. But a tincture of hay, scientifically cognomened "Mecago Sativa," or, in other words, a compressed compound of alfalfa.

This, at least, is the advice of Dr. Alexander L. Blackwood, of Chicago, who spoke at the convention of the American Institute of Homeopathy on this newest discovery, that has only one drawback. According to Dr. Blackwood, experimentation has shown that it makes a person so hungry it is necessary to eat five or six times a day. This feature, however, will have to be eliminated before the best results can be obtained.

"The discovery is wonderful and will produce a revolution in the medical world," said Dr. Blackwood. "We experimented on seventeen students at Hahnemann Medical College, and in each instance the subject became so hungry he was forced to visit a restaurant between meals."

The chief object of the discovery, according to the physician, is the treatment of patients who have the blues and who are run down. It cheers them up and brings an appetite. Dr. Blackwood explained particularly that "Mecago Sativa" is not a breakfast food.

Soap Is Bad For The Hair

Soap should be used very sparingly if at all if you want to keep your hair looking its best. Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle and ruins it.

The best thing for steady use is just ordinary mulsified cocoanut oil, (which is pure and greaseless), and is better than soap or anything else you can use.

One or two teaspoonsfuls will cleanse the hair and scalp thoroughly. Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, which rinses out easily, removing every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves the scalp soft and the hair fine and silky, bright, lustrous, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at any pharmacy, it's very cheap, and a few ounces will supply every member of the family for months.

Voice of The People

SIR,—In regard to "Another MacDonald's" letter in to-night's "Voice of the People," I desire to say my thoughts carried me far from insinuations either one way or the other. The chief item to which I was very anxious to draw your attention was to have all band concerts given by both the 57th Regimental and the S. A. Bands commented upon by one of your staff. I paid equal tribute to both bands in this respect but how poor must be the principle of a jealous disposition, which seems to be preeminent in the hearts and minds of such supporters of the S.A. as "Another MacDonald," as he sees fit to sign himself. Your correspondent says the S.A. has gained by the inclusion of three ex-members of the 57th. Now I know each of these three men and if my friend will only take the trouble to ask them the reason why they left the 57th, a courteous reply from all three would surely set my friend's mind at rest for some time to come.

I am glad to see that the way the crowd showed their appreciation last Friday night did not spoil our friend's night's sleep. The crowd will tell you if you are in doubt, as to why they are always ready to turn out in superior numbers when the "People's Band" takes the stand. Great credit is due not only to Mr. Gliddon but to every member of his band in the way they deliver the goods, especially so, when one considers that some items are given at first sight. So I learn.

Now in my reference to the trombone solo, "The Palms," given by Bandsmen Gilbert, I also fall back on the crowd again to testify to the artist's merits. The music loving crowd which gathers around the stand knows enough not to call a man back a second time only when an artist has certainly given of his best. And as the people know, this is not his first solo, for he rendered at the opening concert "The Holy City," and two weeks later "The Death of Nelson," equally in first class style.

Now, sir, I feel it my duty to take this opportunity of apologising to Mr. Gilbert for having to use his name again in this letter. Before closing. Mr. Editor I wish to refer "Another MacDonald" to the fact that the business of the 57th band as to why they turn out and as to why they don't, is better known to those seriously concerned and not public property. I did not open this subject for argument's sake, and do not intend to take the trouble to dictate to one who does not know or has not learned as yet to live up to his standard of teaching, re love your enemies, and have no malicious feelings towards them. Hoping you will oblige me once and for all, I remain, yours truly,

R. MacDonald.

Rev. T. G. McAteer Gave an Address

Big Service in the Hunter Stree Tabernacle Last Night.

The service at the Big Tabernacle on Hunter street last night was a great success. A large congregation and good singing by the large choir and the Stringer Sisters. Rev. T. G. McAteer, chairman of the Parry Sound district of the Methodist church, preached the sermon, as Evangelist Sharpe is just recovering from a cold, but hopes to be in shape for Sunday. Mr. McAteer, in his sermon, took as his text, Matt., 16: 26, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul."

"For the soul of man," said Mr. McAteer, "the whole world cannot be a just price. He may lose his soul, but he can never make a just exchange. This he illustrated by the Indians of North America exchanging their valuable furs for trinkets, such as ribbons and beads of gaudy colour. The greatest thing God ever did was to create a human soul. The key to a soul's importance is that it is made in the image of God. Man is made in the image of God as to rational endowment, as to freedom, man has the responsibility and glory of determining his own destiny, so monarch of the realm of two souls, and in his moral choices is absolute.

Again the soul is immortal, has come into existence to stay. There is a resurrection both of the just and unjust. Good or bad, on we go forever. How then is a soul lost? It is lost not by ceasing to be, but by losing all well being, by becoming miserable forever. Illustration, a girl under conviction was not understood by her parents, who thought it gloom, and got up a ball to dispel the gloom. The plan succeeded, but two weeks from that night she lay on her death bed. She asked her mother to bring the ball dress to which she pointed and said to her mother, "I am dying without God, mother, and that dress has been the price of my soul. Shortly after she went out into eternity.

What is the paltry thing for which you are selling your soul? Will it pay? Is it wise?

Mr. McAteer will preach to-night at 8 o'clock.

Assistance For Red Cross Work

About two hundred and twenty-five people enjoyed the outing on the steamer Stoney Lake yesterday afternoon to Gore's Landing, under the auspices of the Church Women's Association of St. John's parish.

After the return of the excursionists the ladies of the Association held a meeting and voted a portion of the proceeds to the Red Cross work of the Women's Auxiliary of St. John's church.

The rivers of Europe are estimated to be capable of supplying 46,000,000 horsepower, Russia's share being 12,000,000.

Improvements At Boston Cafe

Popular Restaurant Is Altered and Enlarged.

One Peterborough business man who does not believe in retrenchments just because the times are not what may be called booming, is Mr. Nicholas Douros, proprietor of the Boston Cafe, who has just completed extensive changes and alterations in his popular restaurant, one of the finest and most popular in Ontario. The biggest change is the installation of a ladies' grill room on the second floor, a large high ceilinged room, splendidly decorated and handsomely appointed, where ladies and their escorts can be sure of freedom from any noise or annoyance. Ornate lighting fixtures and a huge electric fan add to the appearance of the room. The grill is an admirable place for an afternoon tea and the hostess who wishes to entertain her friends will find the Boston grill affording every facility.

Downstairs the entrance has been greatly improved by the installation of two splendid show windows, while the door has been placed in the centre. In one of the windows a big glass refrigerator will be placed. In the dining room at the rear, considerable more floor space has been provided by the removal of the stairway, and the result is a bigger and more comfortable room. The whole establishment has been repainted and decorated throughout, and good as it was before, the Boston Cafe is now in the best possible shape to give its customers the best of service.

Heavy Rain Storm At Indian Village

The storm clouds that circled around the city yesterday afternoon precipitated upon the neighbourhood of Dan Whetung's summer residence, a regular warhoop of a storm. As a prelude there was copious rain, then lightning, thunder and rain—a complete orchestra. In one section of Ennismore a new culvert top was almost washed away. That at Edward Corkery's was turned completely around. An Ennismore man stated to-day that he picked up handfuls of hail this morning after last evening's storm. Some of the crops were hit rather hard but no serious damage is reported.

Harsh Treatment in German Army Described by Brooklyn Resident

NEW YORK, July 22.—Germany's great military machine and the methods adopted during the two score years to attain the remarkable degree of efficiency, which has been the wonder of the nations since the commencement of hostilities in Europe, have been of much interest to all military authorities. An account of his experience in the German army was given in an interview for the Herald by Edward Scherr, of Brooklyn, who is in business in this city:

"In the autumn of 1902 I enlisted in the Tenth Company of the First Hanseatic Infantry Regiment, No. 75, in Stade, province of Hanover. I became a soldier voluntarily, knowing that I should be compelled to serve later," said Mr. Scherr. "I was young and enthusiastic and inspired with patriotism for the Fatherland. What friends had told me regarding the dark side of a soldier's life I refused to believe.

"To my sorrow I found only too soon that the treatment of a musketeer is far below that of a dog. It is incomprehensible to me now that in our age men submit to anything so degrading and slavish. The service in the German army in my experience was little better than the training of a dog. All manner of indignity is heaped on the private soldiers by corporals and their immediate subordinates.

"While being instructed by a first lieutenant several of my comrades were forced to lie face down upon the barrack room floor for the better part of an hour one day because they could not answer a question correctly, and because on one occasion I did not hold my rifle to his liking when aiming at a target the lieutenant boxed my ears. To make matters worse, the private soldier has absolutely no redress and has to stand at attention without flinching during the administration of such punishment.

"A corporal who was in command of the section to which I was attached often found it necessary to kick me and throw boots at me. In addition he endeavoured to make it hot for me by turning camrades of his rank against me.

"A sergeant intentionally threw a rifle against my soldier during a drill, and I was disabled for a week in consequence. When I informed him that I had to report ill on account of his brutality he became excited and called on the whole section of recruits to testify whether they had observed him throw the rifle at me. Not one stepped forward.

"In fear of the sergeant's venegance they dared not admit what all of them had seen, although they all agreed with me that no man should tolerate such treatment. 'You may report to the doctor,' said the sergeant, 'but do not say that I hurt you. Perhaps I should be reprimanded, but what I will do to you later will make your parents glad.' Due entirely to the German ideas of military 'kultur,' I was really afraid, and gave the doctor a false reason for my injury.

"During the 'goosestep' drill I was kicked repeatedly by a sub-corporal, and finally I risked a complaint, which was without results. A second complaint, in which I begged to be transferred to another battalion, brought me three days in the guard house. Innocent of any wrong, yet locked up like a dog, while the brutes who had bullied and browbeat me went free and continued to kick other poor victims with their hob-nailed boots; I was in a mental state that almost bordered on madness.

"Soon after I was released from the guard house I was ordered to the room of another company one evening, where several sub-corporals and corporals were assembled. There they gave me ten pairs of boots which had been thoroughly soaked in warm water to shine. I was afterwards ordered to stand near a hot stove and smoke a clay pipe that nauseated me. To escape this part of the torture I dropped the pipe from my mouth but that did not hinder the cultured corporals. They shoved the hot bowl of the pipe in my mouth and burned me severely.

"After a while I did not care to live under such conditions. My only thoughts were for revenge and deliverance from this miserable existence. I awaited my opportunity and turned my back upon my beautiful and 'kultured' Fatherland for all time with a bitter contempt in my heart for a government that stands for such conditions."

Mr. Scherr relates how he escaped from the barracks and made his way across the frontier to Holland, later obtaining passage to New York. Three years ago his father endeavoured to obtain pardon for him, offering to pay to the German government a fine of one thousand marks. Mr. Scherr said that he was ready to go back but was informed that no action could be taken in his case until he had presented himself in person to the military authorities, in Germany. He declined to do this because he said he would be immediately have been placed under arrest, and his father's offer would have been considered only after long delay, during which Mr. Scherr would have been in a military prison.

Mr. Scherr said that his father is at present serving in the German navy as a reserve officer.

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA.

"My nerves were very bad, and I could not sleep at night, nor could I control my arms or legs," writes Mrs. Robt. Bustard, Maxwell, N.B. "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of what I believe was the early stage of locomotor ataxia or paralysis. I cannot describe what I suffered, but now I am entirely cured."

Military Moonlight Excursion To-night

A military moonlight, the funds of which are to be used for patriotic purposes, will be held this evening, and should be a big success. The evenings have been splendid lately, and this evening should not be an exception. The Stoney Lake will leave the George Street Wharf at 8 o clock, and a fine sail down the river is promised. An orchestra will provide music for dancing. There will also be a musical programme, refreshments, etc. The proceeds will be devoted to supplying comforts for the Peterborough men at the front.

Sagacious Pet Forsakes War For Luxuries

LOS ANGELES, July 22.—Zut, an aristocratic canine worth at least $1,000 occupies the same suite de luxe at the Hotel Alexandria.

He had not met H. N. Slater, a wealthy merchant, in Berlin just before the outbreak of the war he would have been a dog private in the German army.

Slater has just arrived here on a tour of the United States. Instead of a valet, a la carte service, hair brush, comb and fixin's, Zut would have been either harnessed to a small ammunition cart or he would have been in dog heaven.

However, the valuable German police dog is now intensely happy. So happy in fact that some of the Alexandria porters had serious doubts once or twice as to his good and harmless nitentions.

Zut's change in social station came about when Slater, who lives in Paris, made his canineship's acquaintance in Berlin. Being a police dog of keen perception, Zut was considered very valuable, so valuable in fact that Slater hesitates to mention the figure paid for him.

So it came about that Zut was taken away just a short while before all German police dogs were forthwith ordered to enlist in the German army. Zut barkingly insists on his patriotism, however, and explains his lack of active service by stating that he was not the master of his own soul.

For a companion he has a splendid greyhound, and he has a valet whose duty it is to escort him en promenade.

He has all the toilet accessories known to modern dogology and his meals are regulated with the care that might be exercised over the diet of a small child.

He is travelling through America by easy stages and has made numerous dog friends and acquaintances.

The Storm Was Accompanied By Hail

Several Parts of Peterboro' County Visited by Heavy Storm

Hail fell yesterday in several parts of the county, including Lakefield and Ennismore. The storm was particularly severe in the vicinity of Norwood. It commenced to cloud up shortly after four o'clock, and about half an hour later commenced to rain. The disturbance lasted till about six o'clock in the evening. The rain passed over the city in a north-easterly direction. Heavy rains were reported at Buckhorn and also south of here, accompanied by hail.

On Wednesday, about eleven o'clock in the morning, a hailstorm passed over Cavan township. The severity of the storm is evidenced by the fact that on Thursday evening parties motoring through Cavanville about eight o'clock were shown a quantity of hail that had fallen over twenty-four hours previous.

So far as can be learned, the damage to the crops will not be serious.

Cossack Prisoner Leaves Hospital Bed to Say Goodby to His Horse

Emil Szomory, correspondent of the Berliner Tageblatt with the Austrian army in the Carpathians, tells of an inspection of the Russian prisoners in Okulizce. In the hospital he found many Cossacks severely wounded, but many were convalescent, thanks to their iron constitution. He stopped by the bed of a Cossack, a big, powerful man of splendid physique.

"What is your name?" asked the correspondent.

"Timofin Suzin, of the village of Dom."

"Are you married or single?"

"I have a wife and five children."

"How long have you been in the war?"

"Since the summer. I want to ask one favour," and the burly Cossack's lips trembled and he bowed his head as if in devotion.

"What is it you wish?" he was asked.

"I want the privilege of saying good-by to my horse."

There were traces of tears in his eyes.

"But how will you find your horse?"

"Oh, I can find him among a thousand. The sergeant told me that our horses also were brought back here."

The chaplain, who had heard his request, called a corporal. He asked the wounded Cossack to follow him, and though his wounds had not yet healed he arose quickly from his couch and went out. Numerous horses and carts stood in the market place, and like a child looking for its beloved toy the burly Cossack ran about, arm in sling, seeking his beloved horse. At last a cry of joy escaped him and he stood in front of an emaciated brown horse that was hitched to a cart. Timofin Suzin put his arm around the animal's neck and kissed him tenderly on the nose. Out of his pocket he took a piece of bread and gave it to the horse to eat, watching it tenderly. He kissthe animal again, stroked it once more and then, kneeling before the corporal, he thanked him for the great privilege that had been accorded to him of saying good-by to his horse.

MAYOR'S SLANDER ACTION

Mayor Medric Martin of Montreal, announced that he would start a slander action against Controller Ainey for $25,00 damages. The Mayor objected to the controller's statement that he (the mayor) was elected by the tramways company, and paid by it.

SOLDIERS' INSURANCE.

Another batch of cheques for $11,000 has been received by the city treasurer of Toronto, from the insurance company, which brings the total payments made by the company on the lives of the men killed at the front to $131,000.

ALBERTA GOES "DRY" BY TWO-TO-ONE VOTE

EDMONTON, July 12.—By a majority that will run about two to one the Province of Alberta, in a plebiscite vote under the new Direct Legislation Act, to-day pronounced in favour of the proposed Liquor Act prohibiting the sale of liquor throughout the province. Returns received up to 10 o'clock showed 39,020 in favour, and 20,104 against, with half the polls heard from.

The biggest majorities in favour of prohibition were piled up in the country districts in the southern parts of the province, while in some of the northern constituencies, where liquor is now practically barred, the majorities were against prohibition.

All the cities, with the exception of Lethbridge, went dry. Edmonton showing a majority of 3,000 and Calgary abgut 3,300.

The new Liquor Prohibition Act goes into effect July 1, 1916.

The new Liquor Act abolishes 320 hotel, club and wholesale licenses in the province. No liquor can then be bought in Alberta except for medicinal scientific or sacramental purposes. For these purposes liquor will be handled by dispensaries under the control of the Government. The Act, however, does not prevent individuals importing liquor for their own use from outside the province. The Act provides for no compensation for those who lose their licenses.

WHY WE WANT HIGH EXPLOSIVES

The commanding importance of the high explosive shell in this war is due to the peculiar nature of the conflict. In place of fighting in the open field on both the main fronts there has been for nearly six months fortress warfare on the most gigantic scale. The Germans are not simply entrenched. They have protected themselves with masses of concrete and steel armour. Their favourite method of holding a position, such as the Labyrinth, north of Arras, is to build a series of small concrete forts giving absolute shelter. In these forts machine guns are mounted behind steel plates, with a roof of steel armour, in a proportion of ten or even twenty per thousand of men holding the trenches. It is a line of stone, defended by machine guns, wire entanglements, and steel armour that the Allies have to break. Against such works ordinary shrapnel is useless.

What Shrapnel is.

Shrapnel—the invention of a British officer, General Henry Shrapnel, in 1784—in its modern form is a shell with a very thin steel body and a small bursting charge, generally of low-power explosive, in the base. There is the usual fuse (time and percussion) in the head of the shrapnel. The projectile is fired at the target and bursts some little distance short of it by the time fuse. The explosion of the weak charge breaks the thin steel case and liberates the bullets, which fly forward with the velocity of the shrapnel, scattering much as do the pellets from a shot gun. At a range of 3,500 yards the bullets of the British 18lb. shrapnel, 375 in number, cover an ellipse 250 yards long and 30 yards wide — an area of 7,500 square yards.

High explosive shells differ altogether in character. They were first actually employed in the war between the British and Boers in 1899-1902, when the British naval 4.7's and 6in. guns fired projectiles charged with lyddite. The high-explosive shell is made of steel and is considerably stronger than the shrapnel. It contains no bullets but a charge of high explosive—in the British Army and Navy usually lyddite; in the French Army melinite, which is similar to lyddite; in the Japanese Army shimose, which is a variant of lyddite; in the German Army and Navy, usually trinitrotoluene.

The High Explosives.

In the Boer War the British high-explosive shells were found very useful for destroying buildings and attacking strong entrenchments though these were rarely constructed by the Boers. In the Russo-Japanese War, according to the reports of the British Staff officers with the Japanese Army, the Japanese "arrived at the conclusion that shrapnel is of little use against strong, deliberately prepared infantry entrenchments and produces but little effect against artillery in gun pits. For that reason they use a mixture of high explosive and shrapnel, and when shelling strong infantry entrenchments they use a preponderating number of high-explosive shells.

The proportion carried in the Japanese batteries was 30 per cent. of high explosive and 70 per cent. of shrapnel.

The effect of high-explosive shell is far more concentrated than that of shrapnel. It is immensely destructive within a very small area. The splinters of an 18-lb. field gun high-explosive shell cover an ellipse 50 yards broad by 10 yards long, or an area of only 500 square yards, one-fifteenth the area affected by the shrapnel. But whereas a wooden screen has often proved sufficient shelter against shrapnel bullets, the splinters of a high-explosive shell wreck everything near, and the mere concussion may be deadly to human beings. The destructive power of high-explosive shells increases in proportion to the cube of their diameter. Thus a 6in. shell is eight times as deadly as a 3in. shell: and a 12 in. shell eight times as dangerous as a 6in.

Destructive to Defence Works.

Shrapnel has practically no effect on barbed-wire entanglements or on concrete and very little on earth-works. Large high-explosive shells tear up wire entanglements and pulverise concrete. Even the small calibre high-explosive shells are most serviceable for destroying obstacles and doing the work of pioneers and sappers. If they are falling thick nothing can live and move. The men holding the trenches are driven into their dug-outs, and may be reached even there by shells fired from howitzers with a sharp angle of fall.

As far back as 1902 many German artillerists favoured the employment of nothing but high-explosive shell in their field-guns, and though no such startling step as the complete abandonment of shrapnel was taken by the German Army the allowance of high-explosive shells was made very large. A projectile was devised by Krupp which was considered by some experts to have all the good qualities of both shrapnel and high-explosive shell. This is extensively used by the German artillery. The shell is in two parts. The head contains a fuse which may be sent for either time or percussion ignition, and a charge of high explosive in a thick steel case. Attached to this is a thin steel case containing shrapnel bullets embedded in trinitrotoluene and fired by the fuse in the nose.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

CLASSICS WILL GIVE EAST CITY A ROYAL BATTLE FOR HONOURS

The all-important game to-morrow in the City League series is the battle between East City and Classics. A win for East City will give them a big lead and put them in a position so that they will only have to win one of the last two games to land the pennant.

Duke Neary, who held the Thistles to two hits and one unearned run last Saturday, may do the twirling for Manager Fowler's bunch, although that has not been definitely decided.

The Classics are not yet out of the running, and they will make a big effort to hand a defeat to Dan. McCabe's squad and tighten up the League race.

The Classics-East City clash is the second game of the double-header. In the first game, Manager Johnston's Empires, who have been giving all the teams a grand argument, will try to put the Thistles out of the race. The Thistles must win to have a chance for the championship. Either Smyith or Huycke will pitch for the Thistles.

No Yellow Streak in Georges Carpentier, Champion Boxer

Most American followers of boxing have always had an idea that Georges Carpentier, heavyweight champion of Europe and the greatest idol in the history of French sports, has every qualification of a boxing champion with the exception of gameness.

This war particularly impressed on their minds when he quit to Bill Papke, former world's middleweight champion, in seventeen round in Paris a few years ago. However, this idea has been proved false since the greatest European war started. Carpentier's European record in the big struggle has shown him to be a man of unusual courage.

During the early months of the war Carpentier was used as a messenger. It was his duty to carry messages on a motorcycle from one general to another. Often he was obliged to come mighty close to the enemy's guns — in fact near enough to forfeit his life if he came in the path of stray bullets, as he was frequently within range.

What do you think he is doing now? And it is the supreme test of courage. He is piloting one of those airships that have to go up many thousands of feet in the air and get a line on where the Germans and Austrians are situated. At any time he is in danger of having his machine struck by shot, and then it is a case of "farewell proud earth."

The work of being a "chaffeur in the sky" is the most hazardous of all duties that a soldier can perform. Even in times of peace an air pilot is always in danger of death, but in war times the danger of losing his life are multiplied.

If Carpentier's life is spared, and the warring nations lay down their arms, he will probably become one of the most prominent figures in Europe and it would be no surprise if the French government conferred some high official honours upon— maybe some big job in the service of the nation.

Carpentier is one of the most picturesque figures in the history of sport. He took up boxing when it was inaugurated in France, and won championship after championship until he captured the heavyweight championship from Bombardier Wells. He has the honour of holding every ring title from flyweight to the topweight classes.

He won on a foul from Gunboat Smith in London early last summer and earned a fortune for his victory. The result caused all kinds of discussion, it being a question in the minds of the American public whether Smith quit or whether Georges was really hit low.

Pitcher Stars As Pinch Hitter

Who said a pitcher couldn't hit?

Raymond B. Caldwell, star of the Yankee pitching staff, established a modern record by accumulating three home runs in four times at bat. At the same time he set a new pinch hitting mark when he hit for a homer twice in succession while enacting the role of a substitute batter. These three circuit wallops scored seven runs.

Caldwell always has been a good hitter. "Slim" is really a great ball player, and if he would only take the game a little more seriously there is not the least doubt he would be one of Cobb's hottest rivals. He is a big, good natured, careless fellow, more interested in pleasure than work. Baseball is somewhat of a joke to Ray.

However, this year seems to be attracting his attention more than usual, for his pitching as well as his batting has improved, and by the end of the season the lanky one promises to be the surprise of the year.

Three home runs in four times at bat is not the record. Back in the old days of heavy sluggers, when they used to hunt 'em over the fences (so they say), Caldwell's mark was bettered on three different occasions by three different men, Dan Brouthers, Jimmy Lowe, and the famous Ed Delehanty, all succeeded in driving out four homers in five times at bat—and in a single game, too.

LAWN BOWLING

Such warm weather and the extra work put forth by the bowling green's very able janitors must account for the large numbers that flock down every evening to 'get a wick' or to 'draw inside for the shot.'

Last night's fob game was very exciting as the holders, Mr. Elliot's rink and the challengers, Mr. Sturgeon's, were each in turn, ahead, and workin ghard to keep up. The game ended 12-10 for Mr. Sturgeon, whose rink can hold their coats open and show with a feeling of pleasure their trophies won by last night's game.

FANS MUST HAVE LOTS OF ACTION

The present condition of baseball in the major leagues has given rise to an odd problem—does good baseball pay?

The owners are seriously studying this question, and several of them have arrived at the conclusion that the general public neither appreciates nor wants the near-perfect brand of baseball. One owner recently remarked:

"Here is the National league, weaker than it has been at any time since the raid of the American League wrecked it. It has eight clubs, not one of which could have finished in the first division five years ago. Yet the race promises to be more interesting than any we have had in years. Besides that, it is about the most interesting baseball we have seen in a long time.

Spectators Want Action.

"To me it is a serious problem whether or not the fans want what players and critics call 'good' baseball. The element of the unexpected is what they want—that, with lots of hitting, rapidly changing situations, and wild throws mixed with brilliant stops. Give me a team that will hustle every minute and try for everything, make a bushel of errors, keep hitting and fighting all the time, and after the fans find out what kind of baseball we are playing we'll outdraw any perfect team in the country."

Another owner said:

"It is true. The fans do not appreciate or enjoy a perfectly pitched, perfectly fielded game. A small percentage appreciate the fine pitching, but they want action, and there is not enough action and opportunity to yell in a good game."

Cubs' Farce Pleases Fans.

A third magnate remarked: "I saw a game in Pittsburg, perfectly pitched on both sides, wonderfully fielded, each side making a few scattered hits in extra innings. There wasn't enough applause until right at the finish, when the players began to feel the strain and make errors, to wake any one up. A few days later I was in Chicago and saw a game, 14 to 13, with everything in the world happening in it that we call rotten baseball. There was lots of hitting, wild throwing, exciting situations. The crowd was crasy all the time, and after it was over I stood at an exit listening to them and every one that spoke was telling his friend it was the best game he ever saw."

According to two French scientists, ten per cent. of the chickens of that country have tuberculosis and the disease among poultry runs as high as 38 per cent. in some other nations.

Pasadena Girl Sees World After a Life of Blindness

PASADENA, Cal., July 23.— A unique joy has come to Miss Tomsyna Carlyle and a supreme moment to her mother, Mrs. E. R. Carlyle, when Miss Carlyle saw her mother for the first time this week, although she is twenty-five years of age. Darkness, a miracle, and now sight. So reads the history of this girl, who has distinguished herself as a student at the University of California.

Born blind, she had to grope her way through the world until recently, when a San Francisco surgeon restored her sight.

"I am in a new universe," declared Miss Carlyle yesterday, "one in which my eyes cannot at first convey impressions to my brain. I must first get the old time thought pictures.

"I look at paintings, at jewels, at human beings, or at animals. I don't know what they are. We who are blind say we form ideas of how things look. I know now how wrong we are, for I do not know them at first."

An operation for inner cataract of the eye, which in this instance took less than three minutes of time, but which is so delicate and so seldom finds physical and mental condition in such perfect correlation that it may be successful, brought light to this girl. On all the darkness of her twenty-five years she had never known fear, her insatiable desire for study had taken her through normal schools and university, winning her scholarships and honours, and she now only asks to devote her life to others who are blind.

New Beauties Unfolded.

With the world unfolding new beauties moment by moment, with ever new visits of opportunity through sight adding to the splendid achievements she has made in her life-long blindness, Miss Carlyle voiced this cry:

"Give me power to help others who are blind. Let me devote my life to preaching the gospel of work, of development of education for those who cannot see. Let me come before your clubs. Let me tell men and women not to pass the little blind child on the street and say: 'Nothing can be done for it.'

"Let me bring to the adults to whom blindness has come the message that they need not give up their profession nor vocation. That there is everything for them to do. That they must be fearless.

"Let me tell parents not to treat the blind child as a hopeless thing to be coddled and waited on. Send him out to play with the others. Expect of him the same table manners, the same work, the same obedience, as from his brothers and sisters. Don't wait on him incessantly. Develop self-reliance, activity, ability to care for himself.

"I knew some sights would be terrifying, but I am not a child, and I determined to meet them and learn," she said yesterday.

"Oh that I but had words to explain to you the difference between the impressions of the blind and those who see. When after a few days in the darkness of the hospital, following the operation, the bandage was removed from my eye—you know but one was alive to the treatment—I begged the doctor to pace it back immediately. Everything seemed to be orushing in upon me. What I saw I don't know. My brain refused to register.

"For instance, the doctor held up an object. I painstakingly described it—long, slender, shining, tipped at either end with another substance. Not till I closed my eyes and touched it did I know it was a knife.

"All my life I have lived in colour. I was tanght that pink and gray were a pretty combination, and knitted socks of those wools. Equally I was told my hair was red."

"But what did that mean to you, what impression of red hair?" I interrupted.

"Even a blind child learns very quickly that red har and freckles are things to be laughed at," replied Miss Carlyle. "But colours meant absolutely nothing as colours to be, only whether or not they were pleasing in use. But now that I can see, I love blue and green and violet even more than when I only pictured what they might be.

'Colours now are the first things that impress me; they are the first things I see of people.

Other Senses Weakened.

'With sight has come the lessening of my power of hearing. Voices that I used to recognise I do not now know. Equally, too, it is this short time my sense of smell is not so keen. You knew every person, everything has an individual odour. We blind know that.

"Perhaps that is one of the things that protect us from harm. Always I have walked fast. When blind I walked straight. I don't wander all over the street as you people do. Now when I want to hurry I close my eyes and just crash along. At crossings? Why just wait for the crowd and go. They won't know you are blind.

"I never had the money to pay a guide or companion, and besides did not want to be different from those who saw.

"A keen sense of independence and a desire to be well bred will help the blind. For instance, the first time I ever ate green corn from the cob was the day I returned from the hospital two weeks ago. I could not have done so nicely when blind.

Everything Beautiful.

"Was oak did my mother look as I expected. I can't say. I had never run my hands over my mother's face. I early saw that other people did not do that sort of thing; then I would not be so ill-mannered as to do so.

"Now that I see, everybody is so interesting, so different, and their colours; or their colours are so beautiful.

"Your hat, with its blue ribbon. I know it is a hat for it is on your head. If it were on the floor I would not know by sight, prehaps, what it was. This is another world I am in. I look at the moon. It is like a great watch in the sky.

"Things are so funny too. I never knew what a horse was like or that it wagged its tail so vigorously; I asked what it was doing. It looks like a banner.

"Last semester I made a study of reptiles, bugs, frogs and such things. People would hold them so they could not hurt me. I know their construction; now I want to see their colourings."

Hungers For Colour.

That is her cry continually, this girl who for twenty-five years lived in the darkness, a hunger for colour. From the shaded room she gazes out into the riot of California's tone harmonies, longing impatiently for the moment when she may revel unrestricted in the flowers and sunshine.

This August Miss Carlyle returns to Berkeley to complete her work at the university.

A year ago promise of sight came to her when Miss Faville, who herself had come from blindness to light through an operation, took her to a San Francisco scientist.

"'I first must get eye control,' he told me,' said Miss Carlyle. 'I didn't even know I could move the eyeball. I thought I had to turn my head.' No word of this hope was given her family, even at the Christmas vacation. Then a two weeks' struggle with poison ivy, the winning of one of the scholarships established by Mrs Phoebe Hearst, the completion of elven units in the semester and teaching a class of mentally deficient blind children delayed the operation until June 11. Less than three utterly painless minutes on the operating table, and a new world had been opened to the girl who, expecting lifelong blindness, had conquered all handicaps, winning highest scholastic honours.

Blind From Birth.

Miss Carlyle was born in La Crosse, Wis., being the youngest of nine children. Blind from birth, she received her kindergarten to high school education at the Wisconsin State School for the Blind in Janesville. Next she entered under protest the La Crosse State Normal, and in two years had won her diplomas. Tutoring a blind child, she made money enough to come on to California. Now her dream more than ever is:

"Let me help others who are blind; let me show them how beautiful, busy and useful their lives may be."

The latest British Admiralty list included 13,236 lighthouses, 280 light vessels, and 1586 fog signals throughout the world for the guidance of sea going craft.

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, July 23.—War stocks again dominated the market, with Beth. Steel, Westinghouse Electric, and Crucible in the active list.

There was activity on a lesser scale at advancing prices in others of the so-called war issues. Of the standard stocks United States Steel common was most active. So far as the list as a whole was concerned there was a good deal of irregularity. The railroad shares were again inclined toward heaviness.

Uncertainty as to relations with Germany and disquieting reports as to the labour troubles at Bayonne and elsewhere were the ostensible cause of the dullness and heaviness in the general list of stocks and bonds.

"Never sell short on a strike," is, however, a standard axiom of professional traders. This may account for the limited volume of sales in the general list and the slightness of the recession in prices.

STOCK MARKET

Pittsburg reports that on account of the scarcity of semi-finished steel Youngston manufacturers had advanced the price of sheet bars to $33.50, an increase of $3.00, in a month, and the highest price in more than two years.

"Never sell short on a strike," is one of the maxims of professional traders that may have accounted for the slight selling during the recent strike reports in the United States.

Newman Erb, president of the Minneapolis and St. Louis R.R., says in regard to crop conditions in the Middle States: "The oat crop is out of danger and the heaviest known. Harvesting will begin in about ten days. Wheat is in perfect condition everywhere, with no evidence of rust. Harvesting will begin in about two weeks. Corn is doing well. If anything it is better advanced in South Dakota than in Minnesota. We will have the heaviest yield and the greatest grain movement in the history of our property."

Iron Age Says: More than 400,000 tons of steel for munitions, chiefly bars, are under negotiation, the placing of much of it depending on deliveries. From two to three cents is asked for shrapnel bars, makers having realized that much of the early war business went at prices much too low.

WEDDING BELLS

SHARPE—BOSOCK.

The marriage of Miss Grace May Bosock and Mr. Charles Sharpe, both of Peterborough, was solemnized in St. Luke's Church, Ashburnham, on Tuesday afternoon last at 3 o'clock by the Rector, Rev. W. H. White, M. A.

The bride, who was beautifully attired in a gown of embroidered voile, with veil and wreath of orange blossoms, was attended by Miss Julia Nicholls, who wore black voile, with a large picture hat. Little Miss Gladys Nicholls and Miss Margaret Sheehan, daintily dressed in white, and carrying baskets of marguerites, made very pretty flower girls. Mr. T. Pinchin acted as best man.

Among the guests from out of town were Mr. and Mrs. Frank Whitnell of Toronto.

Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe will reside on the Chemong Road.

HERLIHEY—CROWLEY.

The wedding bells of St. Luke's church, Downeyville, rang out in all their sweet toned volume on Tuesday, June 29th, when Rev. Father McGuire united in the holy bonds of matrimony Miss Florence Crowley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Crowley, to Mr. Martin Herlihey, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Herlihey. The bride was assisted by her sister, Miss Zeta Crowley, while Mr. William C. Herlihey, of Downeyville, acted as groomsman.

The bride entered the church on the arm of her father, and was charmingly attired in a gown of white ivory duchess satin and overlace, with a beautiful plumed hat to match, and carried a bouquet of June's rarest flowers.

The bridesmaid was attractively apparelled in sand messaline, and carried a bouquet of pink peony.

After the ceremony the bridal party and their intimate friends partook of a dainty repast at the home of the bride's parents. After spending an enjoyable day with their friends from whom many costly presents were received, showing the esteem in which the young couple were held, the happy couple left on the evening train of Kingston, Rochester and other points, where they will spend their honeymoon. The bride travelled in a suit of Belgium blue and on their return will reside in Downeyville. —Lindsay Post.

Ald. Duffus Home From London With a Story

Ald. Duffus has returned from Niagara and London, with the business of the Union of Canadian Municipalities still in his head from the big meeting at the first place, with praise for the new London and Port Stanley Railway, and with several new Ford stories. There were over one thousand civic representatives at the opening of the Ontario Hydro Radial, which since it was opened this month, has carried 42,000 passengers already and promises to be a distinct success. Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., and Mr. H. O. Fisko were also present. The line is electrified, has splendid coaches, electric engines, and cost in the neighborhood of $700,000.

One Ford story which the alderman related, doubtless not for publication, related how a Ford car stalled once: It had run out of gasoline and the owner decided to haul it to a garage. So he hitched it to a healthy farm dog, and in due time arrived in the city, where a cop spied him.

"You can be arrested for that," said the policeman.

"For what?" demanded the owner.

Liniment For Stiff Joints.

One pint of alcohol and as much camphor gum as can be dissolved in it; half an ounce of oil of cedar; the same quantity of oil of sassafras and aqua ammonia; tincture of morphine one-half ounce. Shake well and apply with patient sitting near the fire, rubbing it in well. The liniment must not be heated or come in contact with flame.

Fig Pudding.

Chop fine one pound fig, one pound raisins and one cup suet. Add one teaspoonful powdered cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful cloves, one cup sugar, one cup sweet milk, a half-teaspoonful salt, one pint, grated crumbs and three well beaten eggs. Mix well and steam three hours. When cold it can be packed away in tins or glass and be ready to carry on any camping trip, while it can be reheated by steaming over camp fire. Serve with a hard or foamy sauce as preferred.

Molasses Cookies.

Two eggs, one cup sugar, one cup molasses, two teaspoons saleratus (dissolved in a little hot water) and two teaspoons ginger. Flour enough to make just medium stiff, so they can be handled easily. These should be light and spongy.

RASPBERRY LORE.

(By Peter McArthur.)

The meanest man in Canada has been discovered, but I dare not give you his name or tell you where he lives, for like all the mean men I know, he is very respectable, and moreover, he is well off and for that reason his neighbours look up to him. It would never do to cast a slur on so estimable a citizen, but let me tell you what he does. He hires the children in the neighbourhood to pick raspberries for him, and it is part of the bargain that they must whistle all the time they are in the berry patch. As he is always within hearing he is able in this way to make sure that they do not eat any of the delicious berries they are picking. Now, what do you thing of a man like that?

I wouldn't consider this man so mean had it not been that for some time past I have been trying to determine the origin of the name "Raspberry." The explanation given in the big dictionaries is perfectly absurd "Rasp—with reference to its rough outside—looking like a rasp." What nonsense. The appearance of a raspberry might remind one of a cluster of rubies, but never of a blacksmith's rasp. But philology, or the science of words, is a meer matter of guesswork in many cases so I feel quite at liberty to guess at the origin of the name raspberry myself.

What does a healthy boy do when he discovers that raspberries are ripe? Anyone can answer that. He comes rushing towards the house yelling "Rah! rah! rah! The rahs-berries are ripe. "Rah! an abbreviated cheer, expressive of joy. Hence rahs-berries is the berry that makes the small boy cheer because of the joy he feels. Do I hear any objection to that. Of course not. Anyone can see that that is the true explanation. Let the makers of dictionaries take note.

And now that I am at it I may as well set the learned philologists right on another point that has to do with the raspberry. They seem unable to decide on the exact origin of the word "jam" as used in raspberry jam. Once more I am amazed at their blindness. Also once more I go to the healthy small boy for my explanation. What does he say when he gets a chance to steal raspberry jam? If you cannot imagine, just use your memory and recall what you used to say. "Yum yum!" of course. With this starter any learned professor will tell you that by the application of Grimm's law, or some similar law, this ecstatic exclamation in time became changed to "yam, yam!" Still later it was changed to "jam jam!" and then in the hurry of our modern life was abbreviated to "jam!" Do I hear any objection to that? It is all as plain as mud. Say I have a notion to give up farming and go in for philology. The college professors and dictionary makers seem to lack both imagination and knowledge of the small boy.

Now can't you see why I consider the man who makes the boys whistle when picking raspberries the meanest man in Canada? The berry itself and its chief product both take their names from the love for them shown by the small boy. If you do not believe in my derivations just try any healthy boy with ripe strawberries and strawberry jam and see how he will act. If he doesn't say "Rah" and "Yum yum" he is not a normal boy.

A street car wheel which its Maine inventor claims is noiseless, in reality is a wheel within a wheel, the two being separated by rubber cushions.

Russians Have Still a Firm Hold on Warsaw

BERLIN WAR OFFICE ADMITS LOSSES IN ALSACE

American Note Will Make Unpleasant Reading For Kaiser And His Henchmen

America's Message is Couched in Plain, Unmistakable Language Which Will be Little Relished in Berlin---Germany's Frantic Efforts Fail.

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, Eng., July 24.—"The American note is decidedly firm in tone. It will make unpleasant reading for the Kaiser and his henchmen and exponents of frightfulness," said the Evening News, whose attitude was typical of that of to-day's London evening papers, on President Wilson's latest communication to Berlin. The text of the note reached here too late for editorial comment in the early editions of the afternoon papers. The majority of newspapers, however, carried brief introductory comments. The Evening Star headline the note "Firm," and in its comment declared to-day: "America's message is couched in plain unmistakable language, which will be little relished in Berlin. Thus Germany's frantic efforts to justify her piratical methods in the eyes of the people of the United States has definitely and finally failed."

WARSAW STILL FIRMLY HELD BY THE RUSSIANS --TAKE MANY PRISONERS

Italian Armies Continue to Make Steady Gains in Austrian Territory---Berlin War Office Admits Loss of Some Positions to the French.

Special Morning Cable:

PETROGRAD, July 24.—Warsaw is still firmly held by the Russians. The official report to-day tells how the Germans broke through at one point of the Russian line defending Warsaw and marched confidently on, but the Russians closed in on them and captured five hundred at this point alone, after fierce and deadly battle all night long.

BERNE, July 24.—Austrians lost twelve thousand men in two days' fighting on the Isonzo front, where the Italians have gained 300 yards in the Carnic Alps. Italian artillery has demolished Austrian forts.

BASLE, Switzerland, July 24. — Heavy Russian reinforcements has been sent to the Dniester River for an offensive move to offset German pressure in Galicia. Much heavy artillery has also been sent.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—The United States Government warns Germany that further wanton acts against International law will not be tolerated. Germany is also asked to explain the Orduna incident.

ROME, July 24.—Italian armies continue to make steady gains in Austrian territory.

GENEVA, July 24.—The German Government has given orders repressing peace propaganda in all Germany.

BERLIN, July 24.—The War Office admits loss of some positions in Alsace to the French.

LONDON, July 24.—It is reported officially that six German submarines have been caught in a chain of nets across the Channel during the past week.

PETROGRAD, July 24.—Germans have made very slight progress today in their advance towards Warsaw.

France Buying 120,000 Tons of Meat a Year

PARIS, July 24.—The purchase for the French army of 120,000 tons of refrigerated meat annually until the end of the war, or until December 31, 1916, has been agreed upon by the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. David, and Mr. Eugene Mancicre, head of the army administration. Companies doing business with the government will be permitted to import their products duty free.

Will Slaughter Americans Just as Before

LONDON, July 24.—The Hague correspondent of The Evening News says:

"The Taegleisch Runbshau publishes a violent tirade by Admiral Kircheff denouncing the English official verdict on the Lusitania case and declaring that submarine attacks on unarmed merchantmen will be continued, regardless of the fate of neutrals.

"Admiral Kircheff says: 'Members of the German Government and the Admiralty and the crews of the submarines will sleep peacefully in the face of such accusations. They will continue just as before to commit such acts, no matter how loudly the proud and sanctimonious Britons may shriek about murder. The watch-word for us is "down with the ships that cross the bows of our valiant U boats" and with those carrying munitions under the protection of humanity. Our note has clearly declared that the presence of American passengers on board will make no difference in this respect.'"

The Dutch Are Getting Anxious

ROTTERDAM, July 23.—No matter what Dutch politicians may say Dutch business men are seriously concerned over German enterprise in Belgium. While statesmen are coquetting with the question of whether or not Germany will annex Belgium, the policy of Germanising that unhappy country goes on surely, quietly, systematically every day.

Taking advantage of war conditions German engineers are busy constructing a new railway between Brussels and Aix-la-Chapelle by way of Tongres, ignoring property rights of individuals and commercial demands of cities. Before the war this railway project was the subject of much discussion in the Belgian Press and Parliament. The city of Liege always protested against the scheme as the city would be isolated and its commerce and transit trade suffer severely. In a lesser degree the same would be true of the Dutch town of Maastricht.

By the new scheme now being energetically carried through by the Germans the great international routes Brussels, Liege, Verviers, and Verviers, Aix-la-Chapelle, Liege, Maastricht will be abandoned.

From Liege I learn that great progress is being made with the large railway bridge at Berneau over the valley of Berivine. This bridge will be 1,000 yards long and in some places 75 feet high. It is built of ferro-concrete.

When the line is completed it will be possible to rush troops from Aix-la-Chapelle to Brussels through Belgian fields cultivated by Germans for Germans, past Belgian factories managed and worked by Germans, and into cities taxed, controlled, and largely inhabited by Germans.

Meanwhile, through agencies inspired by Baron Kuhlmann, the Dutch people are advised not to increase their Army on the plausible grounds that if Germany wins Belgium will not be annexed and if the Allies win Belgium will be her own mistress.

Het Vaderland, perhaps the most pro-German paper in Holland, is pursuing the "hide-the-truth" policy not unknown in certain sections of the English Press. It deplores comment in other Dutch papers on German designs in Belgium and declares that if Germany intends to annex Belgium she will, knowing the feeling in Holland, not do so without a complete victory for her arms.

Ultimatum Was Sent a Year Ago To-day

PARIS, July 28.—The Paris newspapers to-day called attention to the fact that this is the first anniversary of the delivery of the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia that led to the world war. They declared it is France's purpose to carry on the war, however long it may be prolonged, until the Allies are victorious.

To observe the first anniversary of Germany's declaration of war on France, the French Chamber of Deputies will meet in solemn re-union on August 4, it was announced this afternoon.

Deputies now at the front will return under leaves of absence. Premier Viviani made it known this afternoon that he expects to make a very important declaration when the Chamber convenes.

Turks Mount More Guns at Dardanelles

At the Gallipoli Front, via Berlin, and Wireless Telegraph to Tuckerton, N.J., July 24.—The operations of the last week in the Avi Burns region have been confined on the part of the Allies to several offensive movements of no great strength against the Turkish trenches. Losses of the Allies were considerable. Attempts by their artillery to support their infantry resulted on July 17, in the shelling of one of their own trenches.

The Turkish artillery continues to be active. New batteries have been brought up on the Asiatic shore and in the rear of Sedd-ul-Bahr, and since July 6 have caused heavy losses in men and material to the Allies, whose camps and bases are now constantly under fire. Seven ammunition depots of the Allies were exploded during the period from July 6 to July 10. This was due principally to the fire of Turkish batteries on the Asiatic shore. Against these batteries the artillery of the Allies is powerless and an attack on them from the sea is prevented by German submarines.

According to wounded British soldiers who have been interviewed, it is now a favourite device of the Turks to abandon part of the trench to the inrushing Allies and then cut them down by a deadly enfilading fire.

The situation to-day is the same as it was prior to June 21, when the Allies launched an offensive movement, which collapsed.

Shipping From British Ports

Over Thirteen Hundred Vessels Entered or Left British Ports.

LONDON, July 24.—So far as British vessels are concerned, the German submarines drew a blank during the week. Not a single British merchant ship or fishing craft was sunk.

This was the first week since the commencement of the war that some loss to British shipping has not been occasioned by either German cruisers, mines or submarines. During the week under review, 1,326 vessels of more than three hundred tons each, arrived at or departed from ports of the United Kingdom.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS.

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

Warns Passengers Against Using Language of The Enemy

NEW YORK, July 24.—There is a venerable adage having to do with the benefits of avoiding the appearance of evil which the managers of the Russian-American line have taken great pains to impress on passengers who travel aboard their steamships.

When the Dwinsk, of the Russian-American line, arrived in port from Archangel each of her public rooms had a placard in some conspicuous spot warning the passenger against speaking German. This card was printed in Russian and English, and from the first cabin down to the steerage quarters it was to be seen at every turn.

Two reasons are given for the presence of this warning on board the vessels of the Russian-American line. The officers are anxious to prevent their passengers from speaking German, first, because it is offensive to the majority on board, and secondly, because several inilitant arguments have resulted from its use in the smoking rooms from time to time.

The Dwinsk was two days late in reaching New York because she had to put into Halifax for coal. Among her passengers were Captain Alexander Cotton and fourteen of the crew of the J. T. Horn, an ice-breaker, that the captain and his men took from Halifax to Archangel, where she was put at the disposal of the Russian government. Captain Cotton is seventy-five years old, and, although a Canadian, has steamed and sailed out of this port for more than fifty years. Four representatives of the Russian government arrived on board the Dwinsk on missions for their country.

British Seaman Tells of Fight in The Dardanelles

OTTAWA, July 24.—One of the first letters to come to Ottawa from the forces operating in the Dardanelles has been received here by Miss Kathleen Sussanes, 27 Ladouceur avenue, from Charles F. Morris, a British seaman on board his Majesty's transport SS. Alaunia.

The writer has gone through some harrowing experiences, as his letter indicates; and he witnessed the sinking of the Triumph and the Majestic by submarines. His letter is dated June 16, and he gives his address as follows: H. M. T. No. E2106, Egyptian No. 3 Base, Cape Helles, Dardanelles, Turkey. It follows:

FEARFULLY INJURED.

"We are having an awful time of it taking on wounded soldiers, some with no legs and others shot half away. We have been taking on French, Indians, and, of course, all who come along. It's an awful sight to see these young fellows, scarcely out of their mothers' care, dying around us and our putting them over the side. It's nothing to bury six a day, and very often we have many more than that. We are getting used to it now.

"There is a rumour around that we are going home shortly to repair our ship, which got badly damaged by a cruiser of the Dardanelles. It knocked half her stern in and put a big hole in her. I saw the Triumph and the Majestic sunk by a submarine and at the same time we got peppered by the land batteries, which, however, did little damage to us.

LIKE FLOCK OF ROOKS.

"Its very hot to-day and we have sixty naval men on the lookout all the time. We very often sleep with our clothes on in case of an accident. We never know what's going to happen next. They spring up everywhere—submarines and aeroplanes—and come like a lot of rooks, dropping a few bombs and off again.

"I saw a grand sight two days ago when two flying machines came along. It did not take long to bring them down. Two of our battleships caught them fairly and fetched them down with two shots. When the occupants, who were Germans, landed on the becah, our soldiers mobbed them, and it was what they deserved.

"The soldiers treat the Turks fairly well as they claim they were driven into the war by Germany, but Turkey will get all she deserves for being driven in, because there will be no young fellows left after the war. They are being killed in thousands and they are certainly getting it worse than we are. I hope they will torture the Kaiser when they get him.

GALLANT BRITISH NOBILITY.

"He has caused it all. I tell you all the nobility of England is going and there will be none to take its place.

"We have been in the thick of it for six weeks since we first struck the enemy on April 25th, Sunday morning at 4:30 a.m. It was a sight never to be forgotten. Thirty-two battleships firing six rounds every three minutes, sweeping the ground for the infantry to advance. They (the enemy) were lying like dead rats all over the place. One shell from the Queen Elizabeth killed eight hundred in one place. She had just got some ammunition from a convoy, which just came in time."

"eW are losing several ships but cannot help it; and we have been doing a lot of damage ourselves. The water is not safe. We got the news of the Lusitania. It's awful that we cannot get any papers here."

Mr. Morris here speaks of a number of friends of his who went down with the Lusitania, and thanks his stars that he left her service before she went down.

He concludes in telling of a trip for coal and stores when they met a ship full of American sailors and Australians.

Tells Kaiser Prisoners' Food Is Not Good

PARIS, June 24. Mr. Albert Avellina, a member of the Paris Opera Company, has just returned from Germany, having been taken a prisoner while acting as a stretcher bearer. He tells of a colloquy which he says occurred between Emperor William and a captured French sergeant. Perceiving the number of the sergeant's regiment on his collar, the Emperor praised the regiment, saying, "I know it very well and I think most highly of it."

"Not more than I do," replied the sergeant.

The Emperor then asked what the sergeant thought of the food supplied to the prisoners.

"We are given absolutely unsatable stuff at present," Mr. Avellina says, the sergeant replied.

"Later on, I suppose, William II. will give us nothing but bricks."

The Emperor's suite, M. Avellina says, was horrified at this remark.

Hair Made Curly In Single Night

(Woman's Tribune)

It has been discovered that the application of liquid silmerine actually makes straight hair curly and wavy in a single night. Also it acts as a perfectly harmless hair beautifier and dressing. It has the peculiar quality of drying in pretty waves, swirls and creases.

Straight, lanky hair and the cruel curling iron are no longer necessary. Any druggist of course can supply you with a few ounces of liquid silmerine, enough to keep the hair curly for several weeks. It is neither sticky nor greasy, but very pleasant to use. Apply to the hair at bedtime with a clean tooth brush. In the morning your hair will be very beautiful and have a most natural curl and waviness.

Italians Occupy All Strategic Positions

ROME, July 24. — Unofficial despatches to-day reported that the Italians have occupied all strategic positions around Goritz and are pouring in heavy fire upon the concrete works around the city. North of Goritz in the region east of Plava, an Italian force is attacking the Austrian right flank and threatening to squeeze out the enemy's forces back upon the Isonzo. A heavy artillery engagement continues at the Isonzo bridgehead.

CONSTIPATIENTS'
Read This—

It must be remembered that the bowels should move freely once a day to ensure perfect health. When such is not the case the poisonous waste material is absorbed into the system, thus producing a self blood poisoning.

The causes of Constipation are many and varied. Among the more common may be mentioned poor stomach digestion, a deficiency of bile in the intestines, a lack of secretion in the bowels, and a want of the natural muscular contraction of the intestines from above downward.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, sold everywhere at 25c and 60c, stimulates and restores the stomach digestion, increases the flow of bile into the intestine, causes a flow from the intestinal glands, and restores the natural downward action of the intestines, rendering it easy to secure a free action of the bowels, which is one of the most important requisites to health. 1

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

She kept a blanket before her fire and drawin' it away again, and I took this to mean that she was waitin' to make sure she had caught his eye. Finally she gave a long cover of the blaze, and then four shows of it. She repeated this over and over, and I grinned. 'She's yellin' at him to stay away,' sez I to myself, 'because she knows that this will bring him to time quicker 'n anything else.'

When I got to the ranch house, I first went in to see Hellion, and there was Isaac fussin' over him, and they both looked better. Bringin' those two together had been a master stroke.

"What you'd ort to do," sez Isaac to me solemn, "is to give this dog back to his own master."

"I did," sez I. "I took him clear down to where our south trail cuts into the stage road, and I told him to go on home. I told it to him over and over and sent him time and again. What would you wish me to do, drive him back in the buckboard and hire him by the week to stay?"

"You ort to take him all the way back, and find out why he wouldn't go alone," sez Isaac, stubborn as ever.

"He seems to like me all right," sez I, "and while I never thought I'd let airy other dog throw in with me, I'm beginnin' to set a heap o' store by him."

"I wasn't thinkin' o' you," sez Isaac, "nor yet of him. Red sez 'at his master is a lone man and old. It's him I'm thinkin' of."

"Well, I wish you'd 'a' kept your thoughts to yourself," sez I. "I'm not so everlastin' good-natured that I'm goin' to go forty miles out of my way to grab up some more troubles that don't belong to me. I'm already so weakened from totin' around other people's troubles that if ever I should get one little trouble of my own, I wouldn't have any strength to resist it, and I'd die of a broken heart. Don't you ever speak o' this feller to me again."

"All right, you're a free gent, and I'll leave it to your own conscience in the future," sez Isaac, about as you'd expect a meek and lowly rattlesnake to whine just before crawlin' under a ledge of rock after havin' stung ya. "I beg your pardon for slippin' that poison into ya, and now I'll withdraw and leave your liver to handle it any way it pleases." Reformers ort to be shut up in a pest house the same as any other ketchin' disease!

I found Jim and Phil McLaughlin penned up in my shack with Baldy Hagus who was boilin' over with righteous wrath. They looked up as I came in and I paused in surprise. "If this is a secret organization which is holdin' a meetin' here," sez I, "you ort to keep a guard at the door."

"Come in and close the door," sez Jim, in sober tones of serious gravity.

I did so and then crossed the floor on my tiptoes and took a seat on the bed. "Break it to me gentle," sez I, "fr I've had a hard day."

"I've been shot again," sez Baldy, "and I'm plumb discouraged."

He stopped and sat glarin' at me with his eyes stickin' out.

"Your rabbit's foot is wore out, Baldy," sez I, "and you ort to get ya a fresh one? What vunerable spot was you wounded in this time?"

"I was shot twice," sez he, and paused so the truth could soak in: "once in a deck of cards and once in a new plug o' star tobacco."

"It's a lucky thing for you, Baldy," sez I, "that you're not one o' these wishy-washy ones. When you swing, you swing clear across so that you're allus on one side of the fence or the other. It'll be a sad day for you, though, if ever you settle down to just bein' plain respectable, for the' ain't no special equipment for such a life as that and you'd like as not be shot in a vital spot and never have time to change your ways again. Where, when, and how was this shootin' performed?"

"Well," sez Baldy, "all the men folks are away at Dan Cooper's, and durin' such times, I tend to the chorin'—me and the two youngest boys. Dan's got two old fool mules which 'd rather stray than eat out of a manger, and he also has a yoke of oxen with the same degraded taste, and the worst of it is, these beasts never stray in the same direction at the same time. We had to ride clear into the Territory after the mules, and then we rode all over the whole state o' Texas lookin' for the yoke cattle, and finally found the blame varmints within two miles of home, hidin' in a brake.

"I was so beat out and exasperated at this that I left the boys to tend to the chorin' out of spite, while I went down to Elliot to mingle around little and get toned up again. I came back on the stage road and I never felt less ill-will in my life until two fellers stepped out and began to shoot me. 'Stop,' I sez, holdin' up my hand in warnin'. 'First tell me who it is you think you're shootin'.' 'Oh h——,' sez one, and then they turned and rode up a draw. You haven't any idee how it jars and jolts a man to be gettin' shot up this way all the time, and if I knew who was doin' it, I'd go and hit him with a meat-axe. My nerves are gettin' all unstrung!"

"Have you ever been shot at while you were in your chariot" sez Phil McLaughlin.

"No," sez Baldy, "I never have."

"Who would rejoice most if you were removed complete?" sez I.

He studied some time. "That's hard to tell," sez he. "Quite a few have it in for me on account of what they claim I've done, and quite a few others have it in for me on account of what they claim I know; but I couldn't just say offhand which has it in for me the worst."

"I don't think they were after you at all," sez McLaughlin," or they'd wait until you were in your chariot and make sure of you. Is there anybody you resemble?"

Baldy screwed up his face in deep thought. "When I got my hat on and am mounted, I look more like Bud Stern than anyone else," sez he after a time, and then added with a jerk, "or so I've been told."

"Bud isn't in these parts, is he?" sez Phil.

"Well, I've heard tell that he's been seen around here consid'able durin' the last year. I wouldn't know him, myself, not if he owed me money."

"My advice to you would be to do your movin' in your chariot," sez Phil.

"I will," sez Baldy, "so help me! O' course, though it's just my luck to be a hoosback to-night, and I'm not goin' to risk goin' home at all. I'll just flop in the bunk-shack; the's plenty o froom."

After he'd gone, I told 'em about Bradin, and we agreed that if we got the chance, we'd throw in with him and run as many to earth as was possible. I made out to be scoutin' around the edges and told 'em I intended to do a night-ride, myself, but sittin 'there, it had occurred to me that if I hurried back, I stood to see Tom Smith before he reached Kate. It wasn't more than twenty-two or three miles airline from Kate's hill to his; but it was a heap longer ride, and if I could give him a few tips, it might save 'em from the evil effects of bein' hasty.

"No," sez Jim, "we made a rulin' on that and you agreed."

I tried to fudge around, and he offered to go with me and neither see nor hear anything he shouldn't; but he was too fair-minded to stand for me backin' out on what we had all agreed to, so I turned in feelin' rather sullen at havin' the idee strike me so late. My intellect sure had hobbles on that whole day.

CHAPTER XXXV.
ISAAC POINTS HIS FINGER.

I was nicely asleep when I heard a scufflin' goin' on in the room, and muttering and also panting. I lay still for a minute makin' up my mind whether it would be best to strike a light and get shot, or take a chance on mixin' into the scrap and sortin' out the righty party to choke.

Finally I slipped out and crouched at the door with my gun in my hand. It was so dark a feller's eyes felt full o' fluff, and the two who were flouncin" around in the centre of the shack sounded like a couple o' bull elks with their horns locked. Suddenly Jim's voice cried: "Happy, wake up!" "Shut up, won't ya!" sez the other voice, "I'm Tom Smith!"

Then I struck a light and they broke loose, lookin' some foolish, but still consid'able het up. Tom Smith explained that he wanted ta have a little private talk with me and so had sneaked in and had shook awake the feller he had found in my bed, but had the ill-luck to go to the wrong side. Jim had jumped up and closed with him, and they had just got a fair start when I had woke up. Jim said it was the whiskers on Tom Smith's face rubbin' again' his which had exasperated him worst, and then I put on my boots and went out to listen to what Tom Smith had to say. It was a crisp night and we followed the grove around a curve and built us a small Injun fire. "Well?" sez I.

He sat on a log gazin' into the fire with eyes that looked as though they had already been lookin' too long into a bed of coals, and his hand kept tuggin' at his whiskers. I filled my pipe and prepared to give him all the rope he could use. When I really need tobacco, a cigarette don't do me any more good than a sniff o' burnt leather.

"The jig is up,' sez Tom Smith after a time.

"There's so many jigs goin' on right now, Tom Smith," sez I, 'that you'll have to add on more details before I'll know just which one is up."

"I mean that Kate has thrown me over," sez he.

"This is the first time I ever heard that you had come right out and asked her," sez I. "You've been fiddlin' around and makin' sheep's-eyes and sendin' up smoke-puffs and foolin' with a flock of goats, and all such insanities as these; but you've been so long about makin' up your mind on that girl that I had give up all hope of your havin' any mind."

"She signalled me to stay away tonight," sez he; "so I posted up there as fast as I could fan it to find out what was up."

"That's the handy part of havin' time-savin' signals," sez I.

"She told me that another woman—oh, hang it all, you know who I am, and I'm not goin' to keep up this game any longer," sez he. "She told me that Belle Stern was there and had a talk with her, and said I belonged to her, and that she'd kill any other woman who tried to marry me; and she would, too. She's got as much grit as any man and she'd out-stick an acre of 'em. Kate told me the Sterns were campin' over in the Palo Duro Canon, and for me to go back to this woman."

"What did you say?" sez I.

"I asked Kate to marry me and go to Mexico," sez he.

"And she told you to go to h—— by yourself," sez I.

"Well, not in just those words," sez he; "but that was what she meant."

"She was right, too," sez I. "She might have gone to Mexico a week ago, or if you had told her yourself about this Banty, why, she'd have told her to go where she meant for you to go; but here you come after the hand has been played out and want her to run off with you from another woman. She'd be perfectly willin' to fight that other woman for you if you had the nerve to face it out; but she don't intend to tie up to any man who is still takin' orders from some other woman."

'No use talkin' about it," sez he. "The reason I didn't ask her to marry me was because of this other woman. I know what Belle Stern is, and no one else does. I owe a lot to her, and I'd do a lot for her; but I don't love her, and I never did—at least it seems now that I never did. I wanted to see her and have it out with her, and I wanted to see her brothers and have it out with them.

"Buck Stern was my pal, and I killed him. I killed him in a saloon in Tascosa, and that was why you found me in a livery stable in Kansas City. Drink—it was drink that did it. Drink allus was poison to me, but to Buck Stern it was the same as air, fresh, crisp air. We practised sleight-o'-hand and when we made the rounds, I'd slip him my glass and take his empty one, and just the smell was all the intoxication I could stand. We were hiding out in a canon west o' Tascosa and comin' in from time to time to let off steam, and that night the devil was in him and he fixed it so I had to drink my own licker.

"For a joke he did it, thinkin' that the bluffs we had pulled there before would keep me safe, or that he could get me away if he didn't. It's all a blur to me yet. I remember that he started in to hurrah me, and I know that for a moment I came out of the delirium enough to know that I had shot him through the abdomen, high up, just below the pit of the stomach, the surest place of all to stop a man—and then I rode, rode, rode.

"Bill, Bud, and Bronco were all in the saloon at the time, but not close to us, and Banty—Belle—was keepin' watch from the roof of a store across the street. I don't know why they didn't kill me, nor why I rode away. That's where I stand with these people, and you know where I stand with Panther Emmons, Big Jeff, and the law.

CHAPTER XXX.

"I—I thought you loved me too!"

RUTH had listened intently, and now she seemed to draw herself a little out of the conversation. Her change of attitude did not go unobserved, and both Everett and Dorr were puzzled.

Everett saw that there was another mystery of which he knew nothing and instantly and in the most businesslike manner turned to Ruth and said:

"Now, all this subject to your approval, Miss Ruth. You know you are practically of age."

She looked at Everett steadily and said in a low tone, "I think Sir Donald Faversham should be consulted."

"But he has nothing"— John began.

"He has everything to do with this plan," Ruth said steadily.

"I know he's done a lot," Dorr stammered, feeling the ground give under his feet, "but in this matter"—

"I think Miss Ruth is perfectly right," Everett said quickly, trying not to let the pity he felt for John show in his eyes. "Let us call him, by all means."

Sir Donald had kept himself most discreetly in the background for many weeks. Only the constant oversight for her comfort showed Ruth that she was never out of his mind.

She could not even think of him without a throb of gratitude.

And now when all must be made plain and she must live up to her own promise she steeled herself for the ordeal.

Sir Donald listened to Everett's plan and approved it thoroughly.

"And now that we have decided what to do," he concluded, "I think we should immediately go to the mine and make the—ah—the deal. I by no means like this affair, and the sooner it is over with the better."

"Good," said Everett, much relieved. "And you and I, Sir Donald, being the third parties, had better handle this deal. Do you agree to that, John?"

"I'd like to just get my hands on that fellow once more," was the hoarse response. "There would be no further need of this 'deal' as you call it."

"Yes and the fat would be in the fire," Everett replied.

Dorr finally agreed to maintain a strict neutrality and Ruth gratefully accepted the offer to conduct her affairs as Sir Donald and Everett should judge best.

That night they left for Silent Valley.

Tom Kane received them joyfully and informed Ruth that Mrs. Darnell had especially seen to it that the bungalow was ready for her.

He was full of other news, but both Sir Donald and Everett put him off and set about their business.

It was a strange conference that met that night in the office. On one side were Harry Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell, on the other Everett and Faversham, the latter looking so intensely bored that shrewd Mrs. Darnell instantly made up her mind that she and Wilkerson would have to accept bitter terms.

Sir Donald was only too evidently waiting for formalities to be over before he said the few words necessary for him to say as Ruth's representative.

Wilkerson himself felt, too, that he was at last playing a game where all the cards were to be face up on the board.

"Yes, and the fat would be in the fire."

When Everett had coldly and definitely set the situation before them Wilkerson sat motionless and in silence for a moment.

His shifty eyes did not meet the gaze of the three who looked to him for his yes or no. When he spoke it was with a dash of his old effrontery.

"I understand the proposal," he said, working his lean, brown fingers back and forth over a blue print on the desk. "We quit, give you the plans, and you give us"—he suddenly leaned over and darted a bright glance into Everett's eyes—"you give us what?"

Everett was prepared for the question and answered it promptly. "We'll give you $50,000 cash and won't prosecute you."

Wilkerson shook his head.

"You understand that half this mine was mine by rights when Tom Gallon took it for himself by shooting me and leaving me to die on the desert. Fifty thousand? Pah!"

"And immunity from prosecution," stated Sir Donald impassively.

Wilkerson swung on him, thrusting his lean, furious face close to the Englishman's calm, unperturbed countenance.

"What have you to do with this?" he snarled.

Faversham did not shift his position nor change his tone. "I have Miss Gallon's promise to marry me."

There was a sudden silence, broken only when Wilkerson's dry throat uttered a triumphant croak.

Mrs. Darnell looked at Faversham with her tawny eyes filled with dull embers of passion. Everett sat as if stunned.

"So John Dorr gets the kicks and you get the halfpence!" said Wilkerson wildly. "I have cursed him, but all my curses couldn't have punished him worse. Why," he went on half hysterically, "the poor fool loves her!"

Again silence.

This time Everett broke it, saying stiffly: "You understand our proposition. Do you accept it?"

Mrs. Darnell laid her hand on Wilkerson's arm, and he seemed to fall into a profound reverie.

They could see the lights and shadows flit over his saturnine visage, the sparkle of his eyes dying into a mere dreamy glow, the sudden tightening of his thin lips, the working of his hands.

Finally he roused himself as by an effort.

"I think I ought to have more," he said quietly. "There are signs of gold on one part of this property which may never been worked. It is nowhere near the place marked in the plans, as you will easily see. You understand that Tom Gallon and I were partners when he located that rich ore. Never mind. Bygones are bygones. But I want $50,000 and that little claim. It may not amount to anything, but then again it may. Fifty thousand is soon spent. A mine is a mine."

"The plans!" demanded Sir Donald.

Wilkerson pulled out of his shirt bosom an oilskin folded around a square paper. He laid this on the table.

"There they are," he said, as though driven to bay.

Mrs. Darnell's movement of protest did not escape either Everett or Faversham. They looked at the little packet that had cost so much agony and bloodshed.

The money passed, and then Everett picked up the oilskin packet and put it in his pocket.

"The deeds and the master key," he said gently.

Mrs. Darnell's face became splendid in its futile rage. She tore the ribbon from about her throbbing throat and flung the key on the table.

Sir Donald picked it up carefully and rose. At the same moment Everett pocketed the deeds and started for the door.

He and Faversham passed out into the starry night and vanished, leaving Wilkerson still at the desk fumbling the check.

Suddenly he reached for pen and ink and scrawled his name on the back.

Then he silently handed it to Jean Darnell, biting her red lips and moving almost imperceptibly, like an animal about to spring.

She took the bit of paper and tucked it in her bosom. Then she turned on her companion. He met her fiery gaze coldly.

"The mother lode is on that little bit I got them to give us," he said calmly. "The plans Everett has are false."

And the look that she allowed him to see in her eyes was such as no other man had ever seen there. It was as if her tortured and lonely, proud soul had found its mate in some darkness made lurid by the flames of hell.

* * * * * * *

Sir Donald spoke a brief good night to Everett when they had left the office and turned toward the bungalow, leaving the other to go up to where the light burned in John Dorr's cabin and tell him of the events of the evening.

He met Ruth at the door and quietly told her that all was well. She looked up at him with her great eyes filled with unshed tears and he bent over her a little.

Then he drew out the master key and put the ribbon over her head until the dull brass shone on her white throat.

"You are once more the mistress of the master key," he said gently, "and of my heart."

Something in her expression told him he had said enough. With a cheerful word he went away.

But the next day Sir Donald renewed his wooing in such a fashion that Ruth was sorely put to it to keep him from demanding such caresses as her engagement made him rightfully ask for.

The hardest part was that she perceived that John Dorr now knew that she was to marry Sir Donald.

He did not know, nor ever would, what that marriage was the price of.

Everett, of course, had quietly introduced Sir Donald's assertion of his new relation to Ruth into his narrative of what had occurred in the office.

John had taken the blow steadily, but he was not one to walk in the dark. He sought out Ruth and in a few words drew from her the truth.

"Now we all know where we stand," John said bravely, smiling at her.

"But I—I thought you loved me too," she murmured.

"That doesn't alter the matter," he said comfortingly. "Now I must get to work. I've lots to do. Wilkerson has already started work around the spur, and I must begin driving into the place where your father found that rich vein. We may drift into it any day."

Naturally enough the two camps kept pretty much to themselves, but Tom Kane carried the gossip to John Dorr evidently in an effort to distract his mind.

The old cook knew that John's heart was breaking, and between his love for each of them he was himself hard pressed to maintain a cheerful countenance.

"Wilkerson's impatient as ever," he told John one afternoon. "He can't wait on tunneling and such, but he's going to blow the whole face of his hill right off. Told his men that dynamite was better than pick and shovel."

"Well," said John, "that may prove all right. At least he'll get a notion of what formation he has to deal with."

Later that same day Kane announced that Wilkerson was going to set off the biggest battery of shots ever tried in the valley.

As a consequence Faversham, Ruth, John, Everett and many others went across the gulch toward evening to watch the show.

Old Tom Kane waggled his gray head doubtfully as he related how much dynamite had been planted and how Wilkerson's men were actually too nervous to work any longer.

"He has to fix the fuses and fire the shots himself," he said.

True enough, they saw man after man come down the hill till only Wilkerson was left.

Ruth noticed that he worked rapidly and with an occasional glance down toward Mrs. Darnell, who stood near a big rock shading her eyes against the evening sun.

At last the work was apparently done, and Wilkerson waved his arms. At that signal there was a general rush for cover.

Then the man straightened himself up as if master of the demons hidden at his feet, and waved his hand to the woman watching him from below; then he stooped.

An instant later there was a terrific explosion, and a smoky gap appeared halfway up the hillside.

At the foot of the slope lay the body of Wilkerson, tossed there as one might toss an old hat. The smoke on the hill eddied and swirled.

No one stirred. There were a dozen other unexploded shots in that hill side, any one of which would likely bring the toppling crest downward.

With white faces they held their breath. Wilkerson's body twitched slightly, the only moving thing in the amphitheater.

Then there was a wild scream, filled with terror, with passion, with flaming and awful desire, and Jean Darnell ran over the rubble toward the smoking hill, crying:

"Harry! Harry!"

A dozen men started to run to drag her back, and a hundred voices muttered warnings that held them in their tracks.

Jean reached the body and flung herself on it; then she rose and stared up at the great rocky crest.

Did she hear the roar of voices calling to her to flee while there was time?

Did she see the death that hung above her. If she did she despised it.

In this final cataclysm her wild heart broke through the bonds of this selfish existence and flung her a full passioned sacrifice on the body of the man who had loved her and given her his all—honor and life!

In the quick silence they who watched heard a single, full throated cry:

"Harry! Harry!"

Then the mountain roared into the air, and the avalanche of rock poured over the two lovers in wave after wave till it had buried them forever.

And as explosion after explosion rocked the earth and filled the evening sky with lurid debris Ruth struggled from Sir Donald's detaining grasp and fled into the arms of John Dorr, where she clung, sobbing:

"John! John!"

Sir Donald looked at John Dorr's transfigured face and heard that cry meant for lover's ears alone.

Very steadily he turned away and stared up at the terrific cataclysm which had united both the darkling hearted and golden youth.

He found the cook beside him, his gray locks streaming in the gusts of wind from the blasts. He pointed with his stick to a piece of rock that rolled to their feet, and in the dull stillness that followed the terrific uproar he said:

"I really believe, Mr. Kane, that we have uncovered the gold we have looked for so long."

And Tom Kane reached down and picked up the nugget and stared at it. Then he turned to the white faced gentleman beside him.

"'The Master Key!'" the old man muttered.

THE END.

WRIGLEY'S

is the one confection that can be used by everybody with perfect assurance that it is not harmful in any way.

If it did nothing else except to prevent acid mouth and bad breath, it would be a boon to mankind. But it's helpful in many ways.

It's fine when you are feeling out-of-sorts, but don't wait for that! Keep in trim! Chew it after every meal!

A STRONG RESEMBLANCE

THE new clergyman was sent for by an elderly lady.

"Oh, sir," she said, "I hope you will excuse my asking you to call, but when I heard you preach and pray last Sunday you did so remind me of my poor brother, who was took from me, that I felt I must speak with you."

"And how long ago did your poor brother die?" asked the clergyman, sympathetically.

"Oh, sir, he isn't dead," was the reply, "he was took to the asylum."

QUICK COFFEE CAKE

Cream one-fourth of a cupful of butter, three fourths of a cupful of sugar and one egg; add one cupful of milk, two and one half cupfuls of flour in which two teaspoonsfuls of baking powder have been sifted. Beat smooth, then add as many raisins as desired and bake in two pie tins. When the top has begun to crust over brush with melted butter and sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Bake a golden brown.

PIMENTO FILLING FOR SANDWICHES

Cream together 1 tablespoon of flour with 1 tablespoon of butter. Add 1-2 cup of vinegar (dilute with water if it is strong) and cook slowly, stirring all the time till thick. Add 1-2 cup cream then 1 Neufchatel cheese, cooking and beating till creamy. Add salt and pepper to taste, 2 hard boiled eggs, chopped fine, and 1 small can finely chopped red pimentoes, and beat until creamy.

DATE COOKIES

1 1-2 cup of standard oat meal, one cup heaping flour, two heaping teaspoons baking powder, half cup butter and lard, three quarters cup of brown sugar. Mix all together dry, add enough milk to make soft dough, roll out thin and put cooked dates between. One lb. dates, stoned and boiled with a little sugar.

Dundee Marmalade.

To every pound of orange peel add one and a quarter pounds of sugar; cut and squeeze the oranges over a strainer, and put the seeds into a pitcher, with a pint and a half of water to stand all night boil the peel in several waters until clear and almost free from bitter taste; let all stand for 24 hours, then cut the peel into long, thin strips, using an old pair of shears for the purpose. All the sugar with a small tumbler of water to the jelly made by the seeds and juice, and boil for one hour, taking off the scum as fast as it rises. Tart oranges are better than sweet for making marmalade.

Apple Corn Bread.

Sift four cups of cornmeal with four teaspoons of baking powder and one scant teaspoon of salt. Add one-half cup of granulated sugar, one-third cup of melted butter and one and one-half cups of water. Beat thoroughly, stir in four cups of chopped tart apples and bake about half an hour.

Doctor Said Sciatica--- Rheumatism--Lumbago

But He Could Not Help Me, and Endorsed the Use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Wm. Parker, 105 Cayuga street, Brantford, Ont., tells in the following letter of his remarkable experience with Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills: "My doctor treated me for some time for Sciatica, Rheumatism, Lumbago, but to no purpose, for I had to lay off work. The visiting officer of Sick Benefit called to se me and advised the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, stating that he had been cured of the same trouble by their use. I asked the druggist about them and he recommended them highly. Not being satisfied with this, I went back to my doctor, and when he said they were good I began their use. The promptness with which they enlivened the action of the kidneys and bowels was wonderful, and it was not long before I was rid of all my trouble.

"I was so bad that I could only walk by hanging on to a chair or the wall. My wife had to lace my shoes. Only those who have had this ailment can realize the way I suffered. I am writing this letter to let people who have my trouble know of these pills. You are at liberty to use this letter, and if anyone interested will call or write to me I will give every detail."

Write to Mr. Parker, enclosing stamp for reply, and he will verify this statement. He will do this out of the gratitude he feels for his cure and because he realizes how difficult it is to obtain the cure of these dreadfully painful ailments.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S EMPIRE NEGLIGEE.

By Anabel Worthington.

At no season of the year is the negligee more delightful than in summer, and the cheap materials which overload shop counters are just as pretty for it as the more expensive fabrics. Indeed it would seem that it is a style which gives inexpensive weaves their opportunity.

The design which we show in our picture is cut on Empire lines. It has a perfectly plain very short waisted bodice, which is made with an open, square neck and with either long or short sleeves.

The skirt sections are scarcely gored and are plain at the top, where they are joined to the lower edge of the waist. The closing of both waist and skirt is in the front, the edges just meeting. It is a good idea to trim these and all other free edges with a band of something in contrast. This may be wash braid, lace, insertion or a bias fold of some contrasting fabric.

These little gowns are the last word in comfort when made of organdie or lawn. They are then so sheer that with a long, flounced chemise underneath they make an ideal garment for a summer day when no strangers are about. They are also suitable for challis, cotton crepe and dotted swiss.

The negligee pattern, No. 7,252, is cut in sizes 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Medium size requires with short sleeves 4¾ yards of 36 inch material. Also 6¼ yards of banding.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

ARTHUR HENDERSON: LABOR'S WAR CHIEF

Asquith Won Over Former Opponent of War and Made Him Minister —Rose From Ranks

Arthur Henderson, secretary of the Labor party in Great Britain, became Labor's representative in the coalition Government, with the portfolio of Secretary of Education, as member of Parliament for the Barnard Castle Division of Durham.

Mr. Henderson was a Glasgow lad who served his apprenticeship as moulder in the great steamship works of Robert Stephenson and Company at Newcastle. What education he has was obtained at night after his day's work was done. He never had the advantage of an elementary education in schools. He went into local politics as a young man at Newcastle, was a member of the City Council, and twelve years ago served as Mayor of the little town of Darlington, near Newcastle, which proved a stepping stone that same year to the House of Commons. He never touches alcohol, and is an active worker in the Wesleyan Church.

Meant Labor's Support

Two weeks after England's declaration of war against Germany, Arthur Henderson joined with J. Kier Hardie, the leader of the Independent Labor Party, in issuing a socialist pamphlet against the war. Realising the necessity of his support, the Prime Minister went out of his way to win Henderson over to the Government view of the war. He succeeded to the point that the Labor Party in Parliament under Henderson's leadership pledged itself unreservedly to Mr. Asquith.

Some time before his Government appointment he was chairman at a meeting in London of representatives from almost all the industries called to suggest remedies for the rise in the cost of living. He said then that there was a very deep conviction among the workers of the country that the civil population had not had from the Government the consideration to which it was entitled, and that this was so in spite of the fact that the civil population had displayed patience and patriotism of an exemplary character.

Treat All Alike

Later on Mr. Henderson addressed a mass meeting, upon the request of the Prime Minister, in which he told the workingmen assembled that he was in hearty accord with Lord Kitchener in warning the laboring classes that the men employed in the manufacture of munitions of war were to be compelled to do their duty if compulsion was necessary. Mr. Henderson was courageous enough, nevertheless, to suggest that the employers as well as the employes should display the proper spirit.

Entire Family Stricken With Cholera.

YOUNGEST CHILD DIED.

Mrs. E. Slade, 376 Logan Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "When I first arrived in Canada, nearly four years ago, my entire family was stricken with cholera from which the youngest child died. Soon after a friend recommended Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and acting on this advice I administered it to all who were suffering with the most gratifying results. Since that first attack my children have been subject to stomach troubles, but on the first symptoms I resort to 'Dr. Fowler's,' and it always brings relief. I have immense faith in this medicine and always keep a bottle on hand, also I never fail to recommend it to anyone who is similarly troubled."

Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry has been on the market for the past 70 years, and has become so universally used, that many firms have gone so far as to try and produce a substitute for it, and even claiming similar names, and saying it is "The Same" or "Just As Good."

Do not accept their word for this as these no-name, no-reputation, worthless imitations may be dangerous to your health.

The genuine "Dr. Fowler's" is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

WOMAN SUFFERED TEN YEARS

From Female Ills—Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Belleville, N.S., Canada.—"I doctored for ten years for female troubles and did not get well. I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. I write now to tell you that I am cured. You can publish my letter as a testimonial." —Mrs. SUVERNE BABINE, Belleville, Nova Scotia, Canada.

Another Woman Recovers.

Ashland, N. Y.—"I suffered from nervousness for ten years, and had such organic pains that sometimes I would lie in bed four days at a time, could not eat or sleep and did not want anyone to talk to me or bother me at all. Sometimes I would suffer for seven hours at a time. Different doctors did the best they could for me until four months ago I began giving Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and now I am in good health."—Mrs. WILLIAM H. GILL, No. 15 Pleasant Street, Auburn, New York.

The above are only two of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which show clearly what great things Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound does for those who suffer from woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Profession Quite Safe

Two French soldiers took their places in the trenches—the one old-aged, who had long since received his baptism of fire, the other a mere youth, whose chattering teeth and blanched face proved it was his first experience of real war.

The older soldier tried to reassure his frightened companion. "Be brave, my lad; remember you fight for France."

A shell screeched through the air close overhead, and the young man's terror increased.

More soothing words, but mere shells, and the upset nerves still on edge. An hour passed, punctuated by many kindly encouragements, but the new soldier's fear had not abated.

The patience of the other was at last exhausted.

"Why do you shiver and shake like that, you vain young fool?" said he. "You don't suppose the Germans are firing all these expensive shells at you, do you? You are not a cathedral or a work of art!"

Canada

Through twilit forests and o'er fertile plains,
By teeming towns and orchards blossoming
In all the fiery splendor of the spring,
The word of pride goes forth and glory reigns.
For through the distant rumor of the guns,
Heard from afar throughout the peaceful land,
There speaks a voice that bids thee understand
The awful, fiery ordeal of thy sons.

Swift at the call they gathered to our aid,
The flower of all thy manhood, vowed to fight
For Britain and for freedom and the right
Until the last great sacrifice was made.
And in that darkest hour, when very hell
Seemed loosed against them, steadfast yet they stood,
As war-worn veterans for hardihood,
And cried thy name triumphant as they fell!

Living and dead, their brave hands garland they
With love and honor, an unfading crown,
A goodly heirloom to be handed down
To children's children that are yet to be;
And we, who share thy glory and thy tears,
Their splendid service never shall forget,
But, to thy noble heart drawn closer yet,
Shall stand as one with these throughout the years.

HOW FRENCH REJOICED WHEN ITALY STRUCK

Sullen Germans Could Not Drown the Marseillaise Along Western Trenches—Socialist Describes It

A German Socialist soldier wrote from the trenches on the western front to the "Vorwarts" a dramatic description of how the news of Italy's entry into the war reached him and his comrades: "A mild, fragrant summer night. A wonderful calm floats over the gently moving lawn between the hostile positions, the wire entanglements, and the disguised winding chains of trenches. Only the birds twitter half asleep, and in the distance the monotonous chorus of frogs. Suddenly cries come floating over from the other side. The German sentries listen attentively and grasp the rifles firmly. The cries are not distinct; they sound like a long-drawn-out ee—ee—ee. They travel along the trenches as if passed on from one to another; but those who have passed on take them up again, and the cries grow louder and louder. And now—

"'Vive Italie!'—Yes, no doubt—but what does it mean?

"'Long live Italy!' Ah! it means war.

"'You mean Italy has declared war upon us?'

"'Certainly. Otherwise they would not shout.'

"Deep and heavy breathing. They had seen it coming. The last news had scarcely admitted any doubt. But a ray of light still remained—but now—war!"

The writer described how in the French trenches the soldiers soon began discharging their rifles and sending up rockets, and then the machine guns and heavy cannons joined in. "An assault? In a few minutes the trenches were filled with men. But [illegible] hears the cries. Another somebody starts the Marseillaise. All along the line the song is taken up and the air throbs with cries and songs.

"But now life commences in the German trenches. 'You, over there, order!' shouts somebody. Criticisms and gross remarks follow. 'Come along, boys, let us sing, too,' calls an officer along the trenches, and starts with a loud voice: 'Deutschland, Deutschland uber Alles!' Right and left the voices fall in and the song roars in the night. The noise abates and not one bullet pierces the air. An almost solemn silence envelops the song. But no sooner does it end than the performance of the French begins again."

GIANT UNFIT TO FIGHT

His Toes Bad, But Walked 3,000 Miles to Enlist

While the roaring, rushing, cursing, and weeping first days of recruiting are over, says a Toronto Medical Examiner of recruits, there are still to be found many pathetic cases. None can compare with the tale of the man who came all the way from his trapper's cabin far north of the Peace River country. A giant of a man he was, with the lean leathery strength of the pioneer. The muscles on his chest, where they showed at the neck of his shirt, were like little bunches of walnuts. He moved with the clumsy, powerful swing of a bear—a giant bear.

What puzzled the recruiting officers was that he had not been snapped up by any of the dozen cities he must have come through if he had journeyed all the way from the Peace. But he had hammer toes. He was disqualified for the service of his country, and as kindly as possible the doctor told him so. In a brief burst of passion, this splendid giant said he had been refused in every town between Edmonton and Toronto, but that he had tramped a thousand miles in trackless forests, through blinding storms and through the deadly sub-Arctic cold, and he thought he could do a dirty thirty-mile march with any man in Flanders. He at once started for Halifax, threatening to try in England, if necessary.

The Recruit's Salute

Among the recruits to Kitchener's army are, of course, many who are ignorant of all military etiquette. One of these was sitting alone in the messroom when the colonel stalked in. The "Tommy" was seated on the edge of the table swinging his legs and puffing at a cigarette. The only move he made was a jerk of the head, while he grunted something. The colonel was not accustomed to being treated like this.

"Attention!" he roared. "What do you mean by failing to salute your commanding officer?"

The recruit was frankly surprised. He even took the cigarette out of his mouth as he answered apologetically:

"Nay, there's nowt wrong, sir. Ah said 'Hah do'!"

RASH ALL OVER HEAD AND FACE

Of Baby. Could Not Sleep. Fretful and Cross. Itched and Burned. Hair Came Out. Cuticura Healed.

Darnley, P. E. I.—"When my little girl was three days old a fine rash came out all over her head and face. At first I thought it was baby rash but after a week or two I found that it was very itching and she could not sleep. She was getting very fretful and cross and it made her sick. It itched and burned and it made nearly all her hair come out.

"By the time she was four months old the eczema was all over her face, head and neck. I then decided to send for Cuticura Soap and Ointment. By the time the box of Cuticura Ointment and two cakes of Cuticura Soap were gone there was not a sign of eczema and she was healed." (Signed) Mrs. Philip Roach, May 12, 1914.

Says No One Need Remain Thin Now

Physician's Advice for Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women.

Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak nerves and feeble stomachs who, having tried advertised flesh makers, food fads, physical culture stunts and rub on creams, resign themselves to life-long skinniness and think nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless. A recently discovered regenerative force makes fat grow after years of thinness, and is also unequalled for repairing the waste of sickness or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable discovery is called Sargol. Six strength-giving, fat producing elements of acknowledged merit have been combined in this peerless preparation which is endorsed by eminent physicians and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless, inexpensive and efficient.

A month's systematic use of Sargol should produce flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying highly concentrated fats to the blood. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten and the additional fats that thin people need are provided. The leading druggists supply Sargol, and say there is a large demand for it.

While this new preparation has given splendid results as a nerve tonic and vitaliser it should not be used by nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds of flesh.

Tinder-Boxes for Soldiers

There are many ways in which old and almost forgotten methods of warfare have been adapted to modern use in the trenches, the hand-grenade, the catapult, and even armour having been found efficacious in many instances. The soldiers in the trenches, who have the very newest inventions in their equipment are very glad to go back to the old flint and tinder boxes, because they can't use the matches, for they suffer so much from the damp in the trenches that they are soon rendered useless. To meet this difficulty, the old flint and tinder boxes are being supplied to the soldiers and the sailors. Another good thing about the tinder fire is that it does not blow out in the wind as a match does, and does not show a flame to attract the enemy's attention.

A specially-planned tinder box was prepared. It is small and compact, only half an inch dep, and contains a 7¼-inch fuse, or length of prepared tinder, a shaped section of flint, and a hard steel. Inside the lid of the box are printed instructions for getting a light.

FRECKLE-FACE

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from any druggist and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

VOSGES SLOPES CARPETED WITH DEAD AND WOUNDED

Savage German Attempts to Retake French Positions on the Heights Are Repulsed With Great Loss of Life---French Positions Around Souchez, Rheims and Soissons Are Being Bombarded.

GERMANS SHELLING RUSSIAN DEFENCES

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS (French Official), July 24.—The slopes of the "Little Reichkerkopf," and smaller peaks east of Metzeral, are carpeted with dead and wounded, the result of savage German attempts to retake the French positions on the heights. The official despatches this afternoon said that the Germans are attacking at intervals of two hours. When one charge is stopped by the French "blue devils," the German line is reformed at the foot of the hill, the gaps made by the French machine guns filled with fresh troops, and after a short period of rest the enemy again dashes up the heights. All attacks thus far have been repulsed. The bombardment of the French positions around Souchez, Rheims and Soissons continues. The German Crown Prince's army is reported to be preparing for fresh attacks around Verdun.

BERLIN, via The Hague, July 24.—From Rozan south toward Rultusk, Gen. Von Hindenburg has begun a heavy bombardment of the Russian lines of defence north of Warsaw, along the left bank of the Narew River. All despatches agreed to-day that the Russians are making a desperate stand in an effort to save Warsaw, and their whole line in Poland. It is admitted here that the Germans have suffered some checks on Blonic-Czersk line southwest of the capital, where the defenders occupy strong positions behind an elaborate system of defences.

COPENHAGEN, July 24.—A German munitions steamer was blown up in the North Sea off the Island of Maro, presumably by a British submarine. A heavy explosion was heard several days ago. A fishing vessel put in last night with bits of wreckage and pieces of German ammunition boxes. The steamer is believed to have been bound for the Prussian Island of Sylt.

MILAN, Italy, July 24.—It is rumoured here to-day that the Italians have entered the Austrian city of Goritz.

NEW YORK, July 24.—There is not the slightest suggestion of confirmation of the ticker despatch that Kitchener has been assassinated.

LONDON, July 24.—The award of a military cross to Second Lieutenant Hillgrove McCormick, of the 1st Battalion, Canadian, was announced to-day.

LONDON, July 24.—The Germans have landed an entire army corps on the Courland coast, near Libau, for the apparent purpose of cutting the Russian communications, according to the Petrograd correspondent of the Telegraph.

LONDON, July 24.—Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton reported to the War Office this afternoon that his forces at the Dardanelles had repulsed a Turkish attack and found forty-nine of the enemy dead when they retreated.

BERLIN, July 24.—The Lokal Anzeiger, told its readers that though very conciliatory, the American note contains language "of certain seriousness."

LONDON, July 24.—Petrograd despatches this afternoon reported that arms factories at Warsaw are being dismantled and removed to rear. Not because the city is in danger of capture, but because the railways are busy carrying troops and canhot transport raw material.

COMMENT ON NOTE

"Not an Ultimatum in Form But an Ultimatum in Substance" is What the New York Tribune Calls Message

RESTS WITH GERMANY

Special Wire to The Examiner:

NEW YORK, July 24.— New York newspapers commented on the latest note to Germany as follows:

The World—"The United States is no longer concerned with what Germany says. It is concerned only with what Germany does. The note is not an ultimatum in form, but it is an ultimatum in substance."

The Sun—"There can be no misunderstanding, no misinterpretation of the message detailing with the firmness and admirable clarity our dissatisfaction with the German course that went to Berlin yesterday.'

The Times— "The nation has now spoken in words and in a tone which leaves room for no further declarations on our part. It rests with Germany to say whether she desires the continuance of friendly relations between the two governments and the two peoples."

The Tribune—"The supreme merit of the latest note addressed by America to the German government is that it faces the facts as they are. It tells truth that has always been unmistakable, in words that can neither provoke just resentment or justify misapprehension."

The Illinois States Zeintung—"Germany will never submit to the tone of it and will, much as we are sorry for it, find no other answer than breaking off diplomatic relations. We hope Germany will not blame the people for the present government's actions."

WHY NOT TRY THE NEW GRILL?

Splendid Service Assured at Boston Cafe

To-night would be a good time to get an introduction to the new grill room for ladies and their escorts at the Boston Cafe. The room opened at 3 o'clock this afternoon for the first time. Dainty in its appointments with a most extensive menu and the best of service, patrons are assured of satisfaction. Look in to-night and try some of the good things. There is an opening for an experienced waitress. Apply at the Boston Cafe at once.

Gifts From The Women's Patriotic League All Sent

The Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham sent bales to the Red Cross to-day consisting of: 30 hospital shirts, 20 day shirts, 5 pairs socks, 5 surgical cushions and slips, 5 hot water bottle covers, 10 wash cloths, 10 individual bags for personal belongings, 50 formentation cloths, 100 surgical kits, each kit containing 13 articles, 400 bandages, 600 eye wipes, 2 packages cigarettes, 80 packages gum.

BIG CHICAGO STEAMER EASTLAND CARRYING AN EXCURSION SUDDENLY TURNS ON ITS SIDE AND ABOUT ONE THOUSAND PEOPLE ARE DROWNED

Crowded With Passengers Bound for Michigan City, Huge Steamer Shifts, Throwing Several Hundred People into Water—Various Estimates of Loss of Life.

70 BODIES RECOVERED

Special Wire to The Examiner:

BULLETIN—THE CHICAGO NEWS ESTIMATES ONE THOUSAND DEAD AND MISSING AS RESULT OF THE EASTLAND TURNING TURTLE AT THE DOCKS HERE THIS MORNING.

CHICAGO, July 24.— The steamer Eastland of the Michigan Transportation Line, with out 2,000 passengers aboard, suddenly listed as she was leaving her pier at Clark Street Bridge at 3.45 this morning. Several hundred were thrown into the Chicago river. It was first reported that many were lost. One hundred or more managed to keep their positions on the slanting decks. The officials in the harbour master's office estimated that perhaps 200 were drowned. The Eastland was bound for Michigan City on a Saturday excursion when she turned turtle. Captain Pederson of the Eastland, who was on the bridge when the boat keeled over, insisted that not more than twenty were derwned. He said, An "air chute" broke, letting in tuns of water on the left side of the vessel, which is now lying on her side in the middle of the river. The surviving passengers, however, declare that at least 100 and perhaps more were drowned or are imprisoned in their state rooms and below the decks on the left side of the ship.

Captain Pederson, admitted that there were 2,000 persons on beard. He said the boat's capacity is 2,570. The steamer Eastland belongs to the St. Jos Line. It was chartered with four other boats to-day to carry the Western Electric excursionists to Michigan City, Ind. It is recalled that condemnation proceedings were threatened here some time ago after a panic was caused on board when the Eastland listed badly and nearly overturned. On another occasion the same steamer with hundreds of moonlight excursionists aboard, crashed into a breakwater here.

CHICAGO—(Later)— Seventy bodies have already been recovered. The Steamship Company ordered workmen to cut open the bottom and side of the ship above the water line in the hope that a score or perhaps two score believed to be imprisoned inside, whose pounding and screams could be plainly heard, could be saved.

Ten thousand or more persons who crowded South Clark street, along which Captain Pederson was taken to police headquarters at the City Hall, indulged in a near riot when they recognized the prisoner. Before twenty policemen, who were escorting him, could beat back the crowd, two men had released Pedersen. One of them struck him in the face. The police drew clubs and wielded them before the crawd gave way. Turned from the attack on Pederson the crowd tried to reach the dock. The neighbourhood for blocks around, already jammed with from 20,000 to 30,000 persons, soon was impassable. The Cutling precints were cleaned of roundsmen and desk men to augment the police in that district. It was more than an hour before the police could restore a semblance of order. Acting under demand from Commissioner of Public Works W. Burkhardt, Deputy Chief Schuettler at 1.30 ordered the arrest of Captain Pedersen and First Mate Bell. Schuettler intimated that there had been a clash of authority in the matter of rescue work between some boat officers and the police.

THE EXAMINER AND THE LOCAL OVERSEAS CLUB TOBACCO FUND

The Examiner is co-operating with the local branch of the Overseas Club in a campaign to provide our soldier boys at the front with tobacco, and to keep a steady supply on its way to the trenches. Tobacco ends in smoke, and it is a long long way from the battlefield to a shop where they sell the welcome weed. Our aim is to send a parcel of cigarettes and tobacco every week to every Peterborough soldier at the front. We want to emphasize the importance of sustained effort and regular contributions. The supply of cigarettes and tobacco must be maintained.

We appeal to [illegible] confidence—to help us keep the ball rolling. Our soldiers are giving their lives. You are asked to give them something to smoke. It isn't much to you, but it is a great deal to [illegible]. The empty pipe is bad enough everywhere, but at the front it is a tragedy.

Features of The Examiner and Overseas Club are:

1. Every cent contributed goes to purchase tobacco and cigarettes.
2. By arrangement with the British and French Gov-ernments the tobacco is packed in bond and shipped duty free. This enables the Overseas Club to secure tobacco and cigarettes at the lowest possible price.
3. For one quarter (25c) the Overseas Club are able to supply:—50 cigarettes, 4 oz. smoking mixture, a box of matches, and a postcard. For $1.00 the Overseas Club can supply:—50 cigarettes, 4 oz. smoking tobacco, 1 Briar pipe, 1 Tinder lighter, 1 rubber lined pouch, some matches, and a postcard.

The postcard is a most pleasing feature, bringing as it does, the sender into personal touch with the receiver. In every package subscribed for, the postcard carrying the subscriber's name and address is enclosed thus enabling the soldier to acknowledge his thanks.

4. Packages may be sent to individuals provided the right number and regiment is given.

The value of The Examiner Fund is vividly reflected in the fact that the 50 cigarettes and 4 oz. of tobacco, if bought in the usual way, would cost you at least $1.00, whereas under the arrangements made the cost will only be 25 cents.

MORE LOCAL BOYS OFF TO THE FRONT

Trooper R. O. Smith left on Thursday to join the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles, having enlisted here. He is the third son of Mrs. Smith, Chamberlen Street, to join the Colours, two brothers being with the 39th Battalion at Shorncliffe.

In the list of Peterborough men chosen to go with the draft from the 8th C.M.R. overseas, the name of Pte. E. Norman of Peterborough was omitted.

Private Norman has had twelve years' experience with the Colours, serving in India and South Africa. In the latter campaign he was at the battle of Spion Kop.

The Thistles of the City Baseball League are losing another player next week through the Empire's call in the person of Harold Knapman, left fielder, who is to take the Royal School of Artillery course at Kingston preparatory to overseas service. He is the fifth Thistle player to offer his services, and still another will leave in a few days.

David Lawrie, of Mr. W. R. Morris' office, has been accepted for overseas service with the 26th Battery, and has gone to Valcartier.

Gunner King Alive and Well

After having been officially reported as having died from wounds, word comes from Gunner William King to the effect that he is alive and well.

A card containing the above pleasing intelligence has been received by his mother, Mrs. J. M. King, 380 London Street.

Gunner William King was a member of the Peterborough detachment, 4th Battery. In the same battery is a man who answers to the name of Corpl. William King, which may account for the mistake.

Purifying the air by chemical means, German invenor claims to have perfected a diving suit which permits a man to remain under water for hours without connection with the upper world.

Dying Canadian Calls His Betrothed

NEW YORK, July 23.—The Cunarder Orduna, laden almost to capacity, or close to 11,000 tons, chiefly of war material for England, sailed yesterday for Liverpool with 15 cabin, 75 second cabin, and 105 steerage passengers, including 22 Americans in all classes. Three first cabin passengers who had booked to sail cancelled their passages yesterday, not caring to take the risk of dodging German submarines. One is an American, Miss Lydia Wheeler, of Philadelphia.

A few minutes before the Orduna sailed, at 10 a.m., two young women came sprinting down the pier, too much out of breath to be interviewed, and rushed up the gangplank. They were the Misses Grace Jeffery and Ruth Buchanan, of Ottawa, bound for the William Astor Hospital at Cliveden, where the fiance of Miss Jeffery and the brother of Miss Buchanan, Lieut. Casels Buchanan, is lying beyond hope of recovery.

The lieutenant was wounded by shrapnel in France, and because of the development of a form of cancer his left leg was amputated. The surgeon in charge said that he had not more than ten days to live, and his fiancee and sister were so informed by cable on Wednesday afternoon and caught a train that got them to this city after 9 o'clock yesterday morning. A swift taxi took them to the pier.

T.A.S. SUMMER CAMP OPEN ON MONDAY

Complete arrangements for the opening of the T.A.S. summer camp have been made for Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Herronan will have charge of the meals, and Mr. P. Kane will generally supervise the camp next week. The club house has been used during the past week, but it is expected a large number will avail themselves of the camp, especially as a low rate has been fixed. It is essentially for boys.

TERRIBLE STORIES TOLD BY SOME OF THE SURVIVORS

Women and Children Knocked Down and Trampled Under Foot in the Mad Rush When the Eastland Turned Over.

BOAT WAS CROWDED

Special Wire to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, July 24.—According to Ross H. Gesting, a commission salesman who was a passenger on the Eastland, the panic as the boat went under was indescribable. Annie Helnick, who saved herself by hanging to two chairs, corroberated Gesting's statement that women carrying babies were beaten down and trampled by men in the wild rush from under the decks. "The boat swung around several times unsteadily," said Gesting, "before the final dip." It was at that last terrible pitch that everyone at once seemed to grasp what was happening. The screaming and panic was frightful. Many women had almost all of their clothing torn off before they could get to the rail or porthole to jump.

One of the survivers named Federstrom said he didn't believe it was a broken "air chute" that caused the big boat to tip over. "The passengers were crowded on the outer rail from ten to thirty deep in places. I noticed the boat beginning to careen slightly, but at first it gave me no uneasiness. Then, just before we pulled out several hundred passengers who had been waving to persons on the deck came over to the outer rail. Almost instantly the boat lurched drunkenly, righted itself and then

BITTERNESS OF STRUGGLE EVERY HOUR DEEPENS

No Chance of the War Ending for Another Year—For England it is Only Beginning Writes T. P. O'Connor.

NEW ALLIES EXPECTED

(Copyright Central News, 1915, by T. P. O'Connor.)

This has been a week of emotions as variable as the events, and the coincidence of the big coal miners' strike in Wales and the big Russian retreats have produced considerable distress. The misfortunes of the Russians naturally aggravated the intense, universal reprobation of the action of the miners. Lloyd George succeeded in settling the strike largely because his countrymen, themselves, were rather ashamed of their conduct. At the same time he succeeded in making it perfectly clear that all means of closing the labor disputes by coercive powers of the munitions bill, were quite impracticable in the case of the miners. At least that the British government as of old must trust to persuading instead of forcing British workmen. We find consolation for the loss and discredit caused by the Welsh strike in the news that the miners returned to their work in splendid temper, singing as they [illegible] the Welsh hills and faithfully carrying out their promise to make up for lost time by more strenuous work.

OBSTINATE DETERMINATION

Studying the psychology of England at this hour I find increasing evidence daily of obstinate determination to fight the war to the bitter end. The

TO FORM BRANCH OF THE SPEAKERS' PATRIOTIC LEAGUE

Local Organization Decided at a Meeting Last Night to Affiliate With That Body to Assist in Recruiting.

NEW MEMBERS ADDED

At a largely attended meeting of the Peterborough Recruiting and Patriotic League, held in the Oriental Parlours last night, with Mr. R. B. Rogers in the chair, the resignation of Mr. Ryerson Ritchie, as secretary, was received and accepted. Mr. R. E. Layfield was appointed secretary.

The following resolution was carried:

Moved by Mr. Daniel O'Connel, seconded by Judge E. C. Huycke, that the present organization be abrogated and that this existing organization be organized as the Peterborough Branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League.

A number of new members were nominated and added to the list. A Financial Committee composed of Messrs. C. H. Pennefather, P. Campbell, Mayor Buller, Daniel O'Connel, R. B. Rogers and R. E. Layfield, were appointed to devise ways and means and with full power to act to finance the work.

Arrangements have been completed to have Mr. Charles M. Cochrane organizing secretary for the Dominion, meet with the Association on Monday evening at 8:30 in the Oriental Parlours to outline the work and to assist the Peterborough Branch. All members, and especially those of the Executive Committee, are cordially invited to attend.

Wheat Cutting Is General

A local gentleman who had occasion to take a trip to a point about fourteen miles west of Peterborough, states that the crops are all that has been claimed for them. Wheat cutting is general and will last for another week. A few farmers are still employed on the task of putting the tail-end of the hay crop under cover. This is about the only crop that fell below expectations. At that, it was much better than last year.

Barley is fast approaching a state of maturity, and will be followed by the oat crop. Much of the barley will be in the shock before the end of next week.

The hail that passed over Peterborough and adjoining counties did comparatively little damage. There have ben ample rains and everything is conducive to the best results.

WORLD-WIDE WHITE SLAVERY.

(From the Toronto Star).

We as citizens of the world are called upon to fight a beast that has not only the cruelty of the tiger, but a grossness for which it would be hard to find an illustration in the animal kingdom. German domination of the world would mean world-wide white slavery. Surely the women of Canada are interested in the defence of womankind against that gross and beastly mastery.

JILTING THE FLAG.

The Ottawa Citizen (Conservative), dealing editorially with the new forty-million Canadian loan raised in New York says:

"A few years ago the present Administration went to the country on a British flag platform. There was to be no truck with the Yankees. Reciprocity was the first weakening of the Imperial chain, the Liberals were sacrificing our manufacturers and workmen, etc. But ever since then the Government has decreased the British preference and borrowed all the money it could at cheap rates in London. As soon as Yankee gold gets a little cheaper than British sovereigns we promptly roll up the old flag and travel hat in hand to New York to save a few thousand dollars at the expense of London.

"And London has plenty of money to lend. She is financing her Allies, and preparing, according to the accepted meaning of the Chancellor's statement a few days ago in the House, to finance Bulgaria and Roumania as soon as these countries decide to enter the war. Her huge war loan was subscribed with extraordinary rapidity, and the Old Lady of Threadneedle Street was never in such a prosperous condition as now. Yet Canada goes across the line for a paltry forty millions to save the exchange expenses.

"The business principles that have prompted this Wall Street loan on Canada's part are excellent. The Dominion should deal in the cheapest market, and particularly at a time like this. But what of the loyalty cry, the political prostitution of the flag and the hypocritical accusations that those who wished to deal in the cheapest and most convenient market for goods were traitors to King and country."

NO MORE FOOLING.

President Wilson's latest note to Germany—the text of which has not yet been given to the press in America, though it has arrived in Berlin—is short and to the point, says the Hamilton Spectator. It goes back to, and emphasizes, the main issue, which Germany has so dextrously striven to avoid, and brushes aside all irrelevant suggestions.

The question now is once more Are American citizens to be allowed to travel anywhere on the high seas, carrying contraband or not? Unless Germany changes her posture on this point, there must be severance of diplomatic relations.

Germany's argument—if such it can be called—runs thus: "Great Britain has violated international law; therefore we have a right to violate it in retaliation. We have given notice of a danger zone at sea, and if Americans cross it they do so at their own peril."

We need more than Germany's word for the allegation that Great Britain has violated international law. Germany, long after the fact, justified her violation of the neutrality of Belgium by alleging that France would have violated it, and that England was in league to do so. This was a trumped-up charge, untrue, as was easily seen, and belated, since Germany had already excused encroachment on Belgium as an admitted crime on the ground of necessity. Did Great Britain precede Germany in the violation of international law? When and how? She declared a danger zone, it is true, but only when such a zone had been created by German floating mines. She established a maritime blockade of Germany commerce, but in a way perfectly in harmony with international law, as interpreted by the United States during the Civil War. The excuses will not hold. It is useless to combat them with an appeal to reason. Germany is as rampant and unreasoning as a tiger in a jungle.

The only real question is, Does Germany want the friendship of the United States enough to pay the price? Will she submit, and thus virtually end her submarine campaign, or will she allow the quarrel to develop into actual war? America heretofore has used words, and Germany appears to think she will never use anything but words. Now that fair warning has been served, let Germany hurt a hair of an American's head, and she will find a nation of a hundred millions aflame with a wrath that can smite.

INDIA AND CANADA.

All those who are interested in the British Empire, must be interested in India which contains three-fourths of the population of the British Empire. We need to cultivate better relations with our Indian brethren. If we did that, we should find that many of our prejudices must disappear. Writers about India have perhaps unwittingly done harm by talking of the Indian as a mysterious being, full of dark superstitions, whose processes of thought cannot be fathomed by the Western mind. We are inclined to think there is a good deal of nonsense in this. If we treated the Indian as a good-natured, jolly fellow, ambitious, and quite open to ideas of progress — in fact, a good deal like the sort of fellows we think we are—there would probably be less misunderstanding. We do not mean that an Indian is exactly like a Canadian, but the other idea of an impassable gulf between the Indian and the Western mind has been carried too far. The "brooding East" does not brood as much as the fanciful writers suppose.

The immigration of Indians into British Columbia is a delicate subject. But it is probable that the menace to Western civilization from this source has been greatly exaggerated. Indian immigration is very small in quantity, and it is doubtful whether there would be a swarm of Indian immigrants even if the restrictions were greatly relaxed.

If we are willing to admit those Indians who are likely to become good citizens of Canada, why not let in their wives and families? The danger to civilization and to the interests of labour would seem to be greater from single men, who have no permanent stake in the country, than from men of family. Why should not little Indian boys and girls grow up into good Canadians? If the fathers are willing to fight for the Empire, as they do, why should not the boys be good citizens of the Empire?—Toronto Star.

CONSCRIPTION.

(Chicago Tribune.)

The hatred of enforced service is as great in Great Britain as it is here, but there and here the logic and worth of conscription are being seen in a new light. The volunteer system is hideously unjust and it may be disastrously ineffective.

The shirker is a burden which the willing patriot has to carry. The forces raised by voluntary enlistment represent the flower of the nation. They contain the men from whom the nation means the most, who give it its best reason for being a nation, and these men have a right to the support, compelled if not given voluntarily, of the citizens who will obtain the benefits from their sacrifices.

Absolutism sometimes is just where democracy is unjust, and in great national emergency an illustration of this is given. It is unjust in a critical war to permit an individualistic system to cover the comforts and protect the profits of men who exempt themselves from service and gain by the sacrifices of the volunteers.

Molasses Pound Cake.

Cream two-thirds of a cup of butter with three-quarters of a cup of sugar. Add two eggs, two-thirds of a cup each of molasses and milk and two and an eighth cups of flour, sifted with a teaspoonful of cinnamon, a quarter of a teaspoonful of mace and cloves and half a teaspoonful of allspice. Mix a third of a cupful of citron, cut in thin shreds and half a cupful of raisins which have been put through the coarse part of the meat chopper, with some of the flour and add, with three-fourths of a teaspoonful of soda.

SIR SANDFORD FLEMING WAS GREATEST ENGINEER IN DOMINION OF CANADA

Sir Sandford Fleming was one of the greatest engineers in the world; and of no citizen has Canada a right to be more proud. He built the Intercolonial; he planned the C.P.R., and was in charge of its construction in the pioneer stages. He was a great Imperialist, a philanthropist, and a scientist whose merits had been honoured by a score of foreign societies. He passes from the stage at 88 leaving behind him only two others who might be considered in point of years and public service his contemporaries, namely, Sir Charles Tupper, who recently celebrated his 94th birthday, and Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who is 92. For some years past Sir Sandford has been retired from active pursuits. The evening of his days has been passed in honour and plenty, and few living men had the satisfaction of looking back upon a more useful public career, upon more great things accomplished, and few are the Canadians whose memory will be held in more grateful memory.

THE YOUNG SCOTCH ENGINEER

Sir Sandford Fleming, like another famous Canadian whose career ran parallel to his, and who was vitally interested in his achievements, the late Lord Strathcona, was born in Scotland. It is said that his father had great mechanical skill, and that the son when he was yet a boy, showed an extraordinary aptitude for mathematics. Leaving school at the age of fourteen, he was articled as a student of surveying and engineering, and after four years' study emigrated to Canada, taking up his residence in Toronto. It was some time before he had an opportunity of revealing his remarkable gifts; and in the meantime he applied himself diligently to his profession. But even then, when he had all his life before him, and when the problem of earning his daily [illegible] year, he found time to devote to the general welfare of his profession. He became associated with the Mechanics' Institute, and later on took a leading part in organising the Canadian Institute.

HIS MERITS QUICKLY DISCOVERED.

In 1852 he may be said to have really begun the career that was to make him famous. He was appointed an engineer on the Northren Railway, then known as the Ontario, Simcoe and Huron Road. In this position he soon had the opportunity of demonstrating his unusual abilities, which were quickly recognised, and his promotion was rapid. It was not long until news of his skill and conscientiousness was spread abroad, and he had several offers from other railways. In 1863 the inhabitants of the Red River district were anxious to establish railroad communication with Eastern Canada, and appealed to the British authorities in this connection. They chose Sandford Fleming to lay their case before the Colonial Secretary, and though he failed immediately in his object, the young engineer was admitted to have justified the confidence imposed in him. Upon his return from England the Intercolonial project had become a live political question, and it was decided that the matter should be considered by a commission of engineers, one appointed by Canada, one by the Maritime Provinces, and one by the Imperial Government.

BUILDER OF INTERCOLONIAL

Canada nominated Fleming, the Maritime Provinces could think of no one so well qualified, and announced their willingness to accept him, and the British Government did the same, so that he was given the sole responsibility of preparing the report. After the report had been made and accepted he was appointed engineer-in-chief of the construction, and under his eye and hand the Intercolonial was built. When, the construction was at its height he was called upon by the Canadian Government to report upon the project of building a road from Eastern Canada across the Rockies to Vancouver, which the Government was committed to in virtue of its agreement with British Columbia. So he turned to this new task, one of the greatest any engineer ever accomplished, and laid out the route by the Yellowhead Pass, and was the first man to prove the practicability of the final route between the Rogers, Eag'e and Kicking Horse Passes.

HE PLANNED THE C.P.R.

After the surveys had been made, [illegible] eight hundred miles of the road completed, political questions arose, and Fleming retired from the job; but however important was the work done by his successors, Sir Sandford Fleming was always recognised as the real builder of the C.P.R., for it was he who solved the problems which made its construction the wonder it is. Much might be said of his Imperialism, for it was he who first suggested a colonial conference, and he was also the originator of the idea that there should be a prime meridian time for all nations. Nearly forty years ago he submitted a scheme for spanning the Pacific with an electric cable, completing the girdling of the globe and bringing Great Britain, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India and South Africa into unbroken communication. — Mail and Empire.

THE "TOWN KNOCKER"

THE only thing to do with the "Town Knocker" is to kick him out. Tolerate him for a minute, and he spreads like an epidemic all over the community. He is the original "Calamity Howler" and "Bird-of-Ill-Omen." He is never so happy as when he can persuade other people to think the same way as he does. If allowed to "get the floor," he will knock the pins from under the best proposition on earth. He is against every form of improvement, and if he converts enough people to HIS way of thinking, the town will come to a dead stop. After having KILLED everything, he glories in the fact that nothing can be done for the town. It is doomed. The only thing to do with the "Town Knocker" is to head him for the cemetery. His habit of knocking is so infectious that it has been known to spread among some of the BEST PEOPLE. KICK THE KNOCKER OUT.

Stoney Lake Mail Service

Two New Post Offices: Boschink and McCracken's Landing.

Two new post offices have been opened recently on the Lakes; one at Glenwood in the store owned by Mr. Alex. Lowe, and is known as Boschink. The mail arrives and departs each afternoon between four and five by way of Crowe's Landing, Clarina and Norwood. Mr. Crowe, who runs the stage from Clarina to Norwood, is the mail carrier, and paddles up from Crowe's. A letter posted at Juniper for Boschink, three miles' distant, has to travel to Lakefield, be resorted there for Peterborough, resorted there for Norwood, resorted there for Clarina, and resorted there for Boschink, which it may reach—if it is lucky—in two or three days.

The other is known as McCracken's Landing, with Mr. Choate as postmaster, and Mr. Edwin Pickins as mail carrier. The mail for this office finds its way to Juniper Island from Lakefield on Mr. Thompson's mail launch the "Viking," where it is transferred to the kind care of Mr. Pickins, whose strong arms ferry it across the pond one mile to the Landing, where Mr Choate deals it out to the waiting multitude. Mr. Pickins makes two trips each day: one between ten and eleven with the mail, and one between four and five for the mail.

The mail boat picks up the mail from Apsley, Mt. Julian, Burleigh Falls, Juniper Island and Kawartha Park, in the morning, passing from Young's Point to Lakefield, (the mail from Young's Point is taken by buggy to Lakefield), and makes the return trip in the afternoon.

Truly the system of handling H.M mails on Stoney Lake is fearfully and wonderfully made.—Monty La Rock.

Voice of The People

Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—If it were not misleading, it would be interesting to read, what might appear to the uninitinted, the wise counsel and command of the Review in its attempt to marshall into line the forces of the Conservative party, so that they stand by any old thing which may be trotted out for their franchise by this clique now in control and which has the whole thing cut and dried for the delivery of the goods without waiting for the deliberation of the forthcoming convention.

Of course, the Editor is honest and sincere, but his youth and inexperience are not a guarantee that his judgment is sound. In order to ascertain the cause of the present trouble we have to harken back to more than two decades ago, when the present editor, who is but a newcomer, could scarcely have known that there was such a riding as West Peterborough.

In justice to the present clique, I may say it was another and a first born clique that introduced most of the evils now complained of, and although they proceeded along different lines, their motives were the same, i.e., the spoils of office and other emoluments. Alike, they brought odium on the party, and excluded its most reputable elements from its counsels.

The first born clique has been hoist by its own petard, inasmuch as it introduced the plan now adopted by the latter day clique to exclude all members of the party except itself in selecting a candidate. The means adopted by the first clique for securing their elections were by a corrupt bargain with their pretended opponents who were to be repaid in kind when their turn came. It was merely a game of shuttle cock and battledore. The plan adopted by the recent clique was to foment religious animosity, first trying it on one creed by the most fulsome adultation after the most truckling manner, but finding it did not work, it swung back to the opposite extreme, when in an unguarded moment it caught the unwary which, together with the sweep against reciprocity, served its ends, but many of those who were thus misguided, have declared that they will not be deceived again. Be it said to the credit of the Orangemen, that as a body the cry did not affect them, for I believe by the nature of their oath they are in favour of equal rights for all, irrespective of their religion and to extend to them the same civil and religious liberty which they themselves claim.

As soon as this clique secured the election of their man, they in due time nominated a committee of those who had the pull, to divide up the offices which they did with characteristic consistency among the members of the committee, which rumour says had previously been promised them, none of whom were representative citizens and some of whom had recently come to the riding, and of whose antecedents nothing was known and were unpopular and unfit for the positions, and had never been known to personally influence one vote in favour of the party. I challenge them to name one.

The present clique has a sense of humour about it when it has extensively and expensively advertised the convention and at the same time warned the party that it will not be admitted to the proceedings, but may look on from afar, and not dare to utter a mere suggestion.

It would be well if the Conservative party outside of these two factions were to call a public meeting and start the party on a new and honest foundation, as it formerly stood, but many may think the task would be herculean, so permeated has it become with these two baneful influences.

Yours, etc.,
A Real Conservative.

AUGUST 4TH FOR PRAYER

Matter is Being Considered by a Number of Local Ministers.

It is probable that the example of the King and Court of Great Britain in setting aside August 4th as a day of prayer will be followed in Canada.

The Governor-General of Canada has been requested to intimate his pleasure in the matter, and as soon as it is made public the leaders of the churches are ready to co-operate.

One of the difficulties is that most of the clergy are now away on their vacations, and many of the others will be leaving the city before August 4th.

Some of the ministers in Peterborough favour taging the first Monday in August, but the majority wish to follow the lead of the King and have it on August 4th.

To Reduce Your Weight Easily and Quickly

If you are overstout the cause of your over-stoutness is lack of oxygen-carrying power in the blood and faulty assimilation of food. Too little is being made into the ardor tissue of muscle and too much into little globules of fat. Therefore you should correct the mal-assimilation and increase the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this, go to any good druggist and get oil of orilene, only sold in original packages and in capsule form, and take one capsule after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of oil of orilene in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer and it is perfectly safe.—E. J. T.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

How to Keep Curtains Same Colour.

When the starch has boiled and is still hot or boiling, put yellow ocher in and stir it all through until you have the shade you want your curtains. Five cents' owrth of ocher in the powder will be sufficient for a large number of curtains.

Trades and Labour Notes

The meeting was well attended again this week. Chas. Hammacott presided with his usual able manner.

At the request of the Labour Educational Association of Ontario, Peterborough Trades and Labour Council become one of its affiliations.

For this coming fall and winter it was deemed necessary to have a strong committee for a publicity campaign regarding unemployment. The following good men and true were chosen for the job: Representative Myland (Printers), Ahern (Moulders), William (Labourers), Drummond (Street Railway Workers), Stevens (Bricklayers), Sharpe (Pattern Makers), Campbell (Barbers), Carrol (Carpet Weavers), Adamson (Theatrical Workers).

The auditors gave the O.K. on books handed over to them last meeting.

Organizer Kennedy addressed the meeting, complimenting the members on sustained interest in the cause of organized labour and expressing thanks for any assistance they could give. There were 25 members of his profession around the city, the making was given over to the discussion minded. The term Sheet Metal Workers had replaced the more antiquated tinners or tinkers.

The Labour Day propositions were next put through by Representative Myland, chairman of the Labour Day committee.

The remaining portion of the evening was given over to the discussion of how to cooperate with the Labour Educational Association in its effort to provide employment by manufacturing toys. Now that every loyal parent will not purchase toys of German manufacture, this should give a welcome boost to those of home industry.

Next meeting, August 4th.

Stoney Lake Red Cross Association

Branch Formed at Kawartha Park —Other Resort News.

The ladies of Kawartha Park have organized a branch of the Stoney Lake Red Cross Association, with Mrs. Robert Neill as president, and Miss Helen Husband as secretary-treasurer. Every Wednesday afternoon they meet at "Woodside Resort," which has been placed at their disposal through the kindness of Mr. D. Charlton, the proprietor, between the hours of one and six.

Will Hold a Sale.

Last Wednesday over thirty were present, and under the direction of Mrs. Neill, succeeded in making quite a quantity of surgical coats, pyjamas, bandages, and mouth-wipes.

On Saturday, the twenty-fourth, this branch will hold a sale of home-made cooking at Juniper Island for the purpose of swelling their funds.

If the ladies of every summer resort arise to the occasion like the ladies of Stoney Lake, the Red Cross Society should not suffer very much for want of material.

Mr. Robert Harstone of Peterborough has purchased the Gordon cottage, "Oaklands," next to that of Mr. Robert Neill. A launch house somewhat similar in design to that of Mr. Walter at "Monplaisir," will be constructed this fall when the water is low, and next spring the present cottage will be replaced by a large new one.

The "Daisy" yacht, belonging to Dr. Munro of Warsaw, was launched this week.

Mr. K. G. Lech, who had the misfortune to sprain his ankle while dealing death to a snake, went to Peterborough for treatment.

Mrs. Joseph Stubbs, Miss Edna Stubbs, and Miss Ella Brown of Peterborough have taken "Restmore Apartments." Miss Elizabeth Tomlinson is their guest for a few days.

Mr. E. H. D. Hall has had his cottage treated to a fresh coat of paint, and the trees surrounding it underbrushed.

Huckleberries, everywhere, are very plentiful. On the table of every cottage there is Believed Fate of Empire Will Be Decided Within The Next Three Months

(By LOVAT FRASER.)

The fate of the British Empire and the future course of human history may be decided during the next hundred days.

It is absolutely certain that the Germans are about to strike in the west with enormous vigour and determination. They are staking their fortunes upon the next blow. If it does not succeed they can never hope to win the war. If they succeed the position of the western Allies will be incomparably worse, though anything but hopeless. These assumptions do not mean that the war will end in three months. Wars sometimes drag on for years after the ultimate issue ceases to be uncertain.

What I wish to urge is that grave events may conceivably occur within the next hundred days which we may be able to undo.

I believe very strongly that the Germans mean to make a terrific attempt to break through to Calais without further delay. Warnings are pouring in upon us from every quarter, even from Petrograd. Such warnings ought not to be needed, for a consideration of probabilities should suffice.

Some experts hold that the Germans will do nothing violent in the west until they have cleared up the Russian front to their own satisfaction. Many German strategists have always contended that the right policy for Germany was to dispose of Russia first and tackle the western Allies afterwards. The answer to these contentions is that for the time being the Austro-Germans have already prevented any chance of a resumption of the Russian offensive on a large scale, and they have plenty of troops on the eastern front to complete their immediate purpose. Warsaw is already becoming a dangerous salient, and the extraordinarily gallant retaliatory blows struck by Russia must not conceal from us the immediate risk that Warsaw and the line of the Vistula and all Poland may have to be temporarily abandoned.

Russia's trouble is the same as our own, a shortage of big guns, shells, machine guns, and rifles. She can turn again and again and smite her assailants fiercely, even checking their movements, but the shortage of weapons and explosives must remain a dominating factor for some time to come.

Germany is believed to hold that the time for her to strike in the west is now. The people of this country remain for the most part incredulous. Wherever I go I hear people saying: "The Germans take Calais? Impossible! Ridiculous! Look at the men we have got over there! If they couldn't do it last November they will never do it now."

ARMAGEDDON WITHIN A HUNDRED DAYS.

The comparisons between the first battle of Ypres and the present situation are dangerously misleading. The conflict last October and November was a hasty rough-and-tumble, almost unpremeditated affair on both sides. There was much bloodshed, but little preparation. The new factor is that during the winter, the Germans accumulated great numbers of big guns and immense quantities of high explosives. With these they have blazed their way through Calicia. With these they have hope to blast their way to Calais.

Some observers think the enemy will make a feint at Calais and strike at Paris. The real probability is that they will make feints at a half dozen points, but if they strike at Calais and succeed the position of Paris may very soon be critical. The whole point is that they will strike now, and have not the smallest intention of obliging us by waiting another year or so. Armageddon may be fought near the shores of the English Channel within a hundred days. The people who are slapping their chests and exclaiming, "The Germans can never take Calais," had better pause and reflect that the issue is not a certainty for either side.

THE ORDER OF THE BOOT.

Compulsory military service, if adopted now, would not help us in the coming hundred days, but we shall never win the war on the "voluntary" system. Our Allies will never believe that we are in earnest until we adopt compulsory military service.

It is unfair to blame the British people. For a thousand years they have known nothing of invasion and little of war. The spirit of our fighting men is magnificent, as our seamen and soldiers have proved already in a hundred conflicts since the war began. But the nation needs bold guidance and leadership, and above all it needs a knowledge of the facts, which are still to a great extent denied to it.

New York, July 23.—The Surrogate admitted to probate the will of Madame Lillian Nordica Young, the singer who died in May, 1914, in the Far East, following an illness brought about by exposure due to shipwreck.

Depositions were read from Government authorities of Thursday Island, where Madame Nordica made the will, that she was in her right mind at the time, contrary to the statements of her husband, George W. Young, who was cut off by the terms of the will, and contested it. The value of the estate is estimated at $1,000,000.

Making Steady Advance at Dardanelles

LONDON, July 23.—The latest report received from Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, Commander-in-Chief of the British expeditionary force at the Dardanelles, recounting the operations up to Wednesday, was given out last night by the Official Press Bureau. It follows:

"Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton reports that in the northern section of operations a raiding party rushed a trench on the front of our line during the night of July 18. All the enemy fled except one, who was killed.

"On July 19 an anti-aircraft gun was located and hit with the second round from one of our guns. The fifth round blew it into the air.

"In the southern area the Turks on July 18 made an attack on some newly captured trenches in the French section, but were repulsed with ease.

"In the British section there has been steady progress daily, consolidating and in some cases extending the trenches won on the 12th and 13th.

"Yesterday, the 21st, a small redoubt was captured with insignificant loss, and a successful attack was made on part of a communication trench held by the enemy. A Turkish machine gun opposite our left was knocked out by the French artillery.

"In both sections the enemy's artillery has been active."

The German Version.

"The operations of last week in the Avi Burnu region have been confined on the part of the allies to several offensive movements of no great strength against the Turkish trenches. Attempts by the allies' artillery to support their infantry resulted on July 7 in the shelling of one of their own trenches.

"The Turkish artillery continue to be active. New batteries have been brought up on the Asiatic shore and in the rear of Seddul-Bahr, and since July 6 have caused heavy losses in men and material to the allies, whose [illegible] are now constantly under fire. Seven ammunition depots of the allies were exploded during the period from July 6 to July 10. This was due principally to the fire of Turkish batteries on the Asiatic shore. Against these batteries the artillery of the allies is powerless, and an attack on them from sea is prevented by German submarines.

"According to wounded German soldiers who have been interviewed, it is now a favourite device of the Turks to abandon part of a trench to the inrushing allies and then cut them down by a deadly enfilading fire."

Negotiating For Trent Canal Water Powers

Sir Adam Beck Makes Announcement Concerning Dams 8 and 9 From Which 15,000 to 18,000 Horse Power Can be Developed

LONDON, Ont., July 24.—Within the course of two or three weeks Hon. Adam Beck and his colleagues of the Hydro-Electric Commission will submit to the Ontario Government plans providing for power development at Niagara Falls and from the spillways of the new Welland Canal of 250,000 horse-power and an immediate development of 100,000 horsepower, a work that will entail a capital expenditure of approximately ten millions of dollars and require three years to complete.

Sir Adam has also laid down the law to the Trent Valley Power interests in a statement that practically gave them a last notice that if they did not come to terms with the commission now no time would be lost by the commission in proceeding into direct competition.

"I am prepared to state that two weeks ago we made an offer to these interests which are entrenched in the Trent districts.

"A handsome offer was made to this company, but I have reason to believe that it will be refused. I believe my associates on the commission will concur with me when I say that it is the last and final offer, and when that is finally refused we will go to the Minister of Railways and Canals and ask for these water powers we have been promised on the Trent Canal, dams 8 and 9, from which we can develop from 15,000 to 20,000 horse-power for the people in that portion of the province."

Dams 8 and 9 are located on the Trenton, Rice Lake division.

No More Shell Orders

Mr. Nicholls of the Canadian General Says Manufacturers Will Have Filled Present Orders Before Christmas.

"There is not the least suggestion of any uneasiness among the men," said the manager of one of the firms Committee. "They all know that they have only got temporary work, and they appear to be fairly satisfied with their conditions at present. I have not heard even an echo here of the trouble they are having on the other side of the line."

Asked why the work was only temporary, the same party said that he expected that most of the shell makers would be through making shells by Christmas and that all the orders in Canada would be filled by that time.

"Aren't there any more orders coming in to keep the plants going as long as the war lasts?"

"We are hoping that the war will be over by Christmas, but whether it is or not, there are no more orders coming in."

"Why is that?"

"That is just the question. We going to close down in October."

Mr. Frederick Nicholls, of the Canadian General Electric explained that some of the shell manufacturers had already filled their orders. He could not explain why no more orders were being received, unless it was that they had to wait until the arrival of Mr. D. A. Thomas, representative of the British government, who is to make an investigation into the shell making in Canada. He is at present in the United States, where he has been for the last three weeks or so. He is expected to arrive in Canada any time now.

Mr. Nicholls says that so far as he is aware there is no uneasiness among the men emp'oyed in making the shells.

Homely. Yet Admired and Envied; Her Secret

The convention crowd made a pretty number, casting admiring side glances, then with longing eyes followed her to the elevator. It was at the Ponchartrain in Detroit. The incident was recalled when I chanced to sit across table from the woman. What was it about her that caused all that commotion? Her complexion. Really, I've never beheld its equal. Venturing to pick up acquaintanceship, I learned the secret.

"I've tried to make the most of my one charm,' she said. "I know men abhor make-ups and artificiality. I bar cosmetics; there are two things I use to promote natural loveliness and youthful appearance. When my complexion begins to age, I get an ounce of mercolised wax at the drugstore, apply at night like cold cream, wash it off in the morning. This gradually flakes off the outer skin; then I have a brand new complexion, magnetically beautiful, as you see.

"Wrinkles never bother me. At their inception I bathe my face in a solution made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. It works like magic."—Mona Morrow, in Tattler.

POLICE ARE NON-RESIDENTS

Trades and Labour Council Has a Grievance—By-law Regulating Carters Adopted.

A by-law to amend the present existing by-law regulating the owners of trucks and carts was considered at a meeting of the Police Commissioners that was held yesterday afternoon.

A deputation of carters, consisting of Messrs. Wedlock, Barbeau, and White was heard in regard to the tariff carters were allowed to charge.

On the motion of Police-Magistrate Dumble and Mayor Buller, the new by-law was adopted. The principal changes concern the rates to be charged by the carters.

Non-Residents.

A letter was read from the Trades and Labour Council stating that three of the police constables, namely Detective Newhall, Police Constables McArthur and Kidd, resided outside the city. It was pointed out that as civic employees the men should be required to live within the city so as to constitute themselves ratepayers. The communication was filed.

Want Fine Remitted.

William Fair wrote the Board asking that a fine of five dollars imposed on him in the Police Court under the Weights and Measures Act be remitted. Mr. Fair was heard in support of his request. He was informed that the Commissioners had no jurisdiction in the matter.

Peterboro' Boy Who Writes For The Magazines

In the July number of "The Power House," an engineering journal published at Toronto, are six articles written by Mr. James E. Noble, an old Peterborough boy. One article is printed under his own name, the others under nom de plumes.

Since his appointment as chief engineer to the Hospital for the Insane, Toronto, thirteen years ago, Mr. Noble has written over three hundred articles for the technical press. Some of the journals printing his articles are the Scientific American Popular Mechanics, Power of New York (the leading stationary engineering journal in the United States) and The Power House of Toronto.

USIT

Has Removed Wrinkles For Over 2,000 Years

Since the time of Cleopatra, the beauties of the East have preserved their fresh bloom of youth and kept their skins free from all wrinkles by the application of a combination of Oriental oils, the preparation of which is a secret handed down from generation to generation.

A Canadian traveller in Egypt was fortunate enough to secure the secret from an Arab. After exhaustive tests of the preparation in England, United States and Canada, the preparation has been placed in the hands of druggists everywhere under the trade marked name of Usit.

WAR SPECTACLE AT EXHIBITION

The mammoth war spectacle, "The March of the Allies" and the "Review of the Fleet," will be the big scenic production in front of the Grand Stand at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, and will be one of the most elaborate ever staged and a fitting climax to each day's entertainment in this "Patriotic Year."

The background is the ancient city of Calais, saved by the Canadians when they so gallantly stopped the German drive at St. Julien at such enormous cost. Its picturesque chateaus and historic environment adapt themselves admirably to reproduction. On either side beneath frowning cliffs are seen military camps with the soldiers of the allied armies in all the hustle, bustle and action of war time. The brilliant uniforms of the Field Marshals, Generals, etc., add splendour to an impressive scene.

Suddenly the fleet appears over the horizon under full steam with the Queen Bess leading the first battle line and the Lion in advance of the others. The Iron Duke majestically appears with Admiral Jellicoe aboard, and, as she passes between the watch dogs of the Empire lined up in battle array, the Admiral is greeted with salvoes of broadsides.

It will be a faithful portrayal of the scene just before war was declared last summer when the fleet had been mobilized on the orders of Churchill off the British coast.

The cannonading continues as the officers go ashore to review the troops, which swing past the Grand Stand in the final wonderful tableau. It will be a panorama of Empire greatness, a picture of such striking reality as to evoke a veritable hysteria of patriotic fervour among the thousands who will nightly crowd the Grand Stand.

MILITARY CAMP AT THE EXHIBITION

Every branch of war activity to be vividly portrayed at Toronto Fair

Every branch of war activity to be seen in Europe to-day will be vividly portrayed at the Canadian National Exhibition, Toronto. Aeroplanes will land at the Military Camp after taking observations in mid-air; miniature battleships will be blown up in the lake; there will be bridge and sheltered trench building, armoured cars, hospital autos, field ambulances with stretcher bearer sections, field dressing stations, field bakeries and cookeries ammunition columns, bomb throwers, signal corps, observation masts; etc. The Camp will be occupied by several hundred officers and men now training for overseas service at Niagara and other camps for the infantry, cavalry and artillery units.

THE MIDWAY AT TORONTO

There will be no freaks on the Midway at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, but the carnival world has been scoured for attractions and "The Pike" should be livelier than ever. A Wld West Show and a water circus including log rolling, diving Venusesfi, trick canoeing, etc., Streets of Cairo, the Garden of Allah, the Giggler, the Hippodrome and a dozen other thrillers are among the features.

VEGETABLES APLENTY ON MARKET TO-DAY

For those who are willing to prepare a hot dinner on Sunday, or in fact, any day, there is a wealth of new vegetables being offered these days.

On the market, for instance, there was an abundance of new potatoes at 25 and 30 cents a peck; carrots, beets, wax beans, and other garden products. Berries were also fairly plentiful. Butter was firm at 27 cents. Chickens, 80c to $1 a pair. Eggs, 21 cents. There was a fairly large attendance.

Boy Scouts Will Hold Moonlight

There will be a meeting of all the Boy Scouts on Monday night, 26th July, to make final arrangements for the moonlight on the following night. The Scouts hope that the public will patronize this moonlight. The Peterborough Scouts are arranging everything for a delightful sail on Tuesday night. The boat leaves George Street Wharf at 8 o'clock and East City Wharf at 8.15. Music will be provided for dancing.

AT GRANDPA'S FARM

M. Gibson.

My school books dull have been packed away,
And I've nothing to do but play and play,
Just romp and frolic the live-long day,
In vacation time at grandpa's.

I've no more lessons to think about,
No more sums to be all worked out;
I'll soon forget them, without doubt,
When I get up to grandpa's.

We ride in the cars one whole day through,
"Don't we get tired?" Well, yes, we do,
Tired and hot, but we like it, too,
That long, long trip to grandpa's.

There at the station is Uncle Fred,
With the carriage and horse, and the old dog, Ned;
How he scampers and barks and runs ahead,
When we say: "Get up for grandpa's!"

We drive and drive till the sun's most down,
Past the old white meeting house and through the town,
Just by the schoolhouse, old and brown,
That is only a mile from grandpa's.

I'd like to tell how we spend the day,
How we ride the horses and rake the hay,
There's really no end to what I can say
Of vacation time at grandpa's.

Last Night's Meeting at The Tabernacle

The first week of the big Tabernacle campaign being conducted by Evangelist Sharpe and party, has closed with gratifying results.

On account of a cold which has affected his voice, Evangelist Sharpe has been unable to speak since Wednesday night, but he has an able assistant in the person of Rev. T. G. McAteer, chairman of the Parry Sound district of the Methodist church, who gave a heart moving address last night on the Love of God, after the Rev. Mr. McLaren had led in prayer.

In choosing John 3. 16, as his text, Mr. McAteer said: "I suppose there is no text in all the Bible that has helped so many to God. It comprehends the whole Bible, and has enough Gospel in it to save the whole world alone. If the people could only comprehend the mighty truth of the love of God they would all be constrained to seek Him. What is the Bible and Theology," said Mr. McAteer, "but the revelation of God to mankind. This wonderful text has Heaven in it, it has Christ in it, it has the love of God in it. But love is the big word of the text. There is another word we are apt to overlook, and that is the little word 'so.' It indicates the degree of God's love for a lost world—the measure of His love. Sacrifice is the measure of love every time. If you don't sacrifice you don't love. When God gave His great Gift for a lost world Heaven was emptied. His love was hallowed, infinite, immeasurable, eternal. God expects that the story of Christ's sacrifice and death is going to appeal to you. The greatest thing in the world, in the universe, is love. If that does not find a responsive chord in you, God pity you. There is something wrong with you."

Mr. McAteer cannot say too much in praise of Evangelist Sharpe and his band of workers. During his stay here he has urged the Christian people of Peterboro to stand by Mr. Sharpe in his noble effort to bring the unsaved of the city to Christ. He declared that Peterboro could not have a more trustworthy and faithful man to do this work than Mr. Sharpe, and he based his remarks on several years personal contact with the evangelist and his work.

Mr. Sharpe stated that the next meeting to be held in the big Tabernacle would be on Sunday night, and that while the service was announced to begin at seven o'clock he would preach to the people as soon as the Tabernacle was filled. Those who secure seats on Sunday night will evidently need to "go early to avoid the rush."

Profitable noon hour services have been held at various factories with the employees each day this week, and are expected to continue next week.

KAISER TO PUNISH GERMANS MAKING SHELLS FOR ALLIES

BERLIN. An official declaration is published here calling attention to the fact that "Germans working in factories in neutral countries, particularly in the United States, producing war supplies for the enemy, render themselves liable to prosecution for treason, under Paragraph 89 of the Penal Code, penalizing such assistance to an enemy with a maximum of ten years imprisonment."

Another paragraph of the Penal Code authorizes prosecution in the case of such offenses, even when committed abroad, and it is understood that the German courts will proceed against offenders.

Baby Thriving Mother Happy

EVERY mother and nurse is anxious about baby's health during the hot weather. The dread of colic is ever present, and the awful infantile mortality in summer cannot be forgotten.

Baby can only thrive during the summer if his food—being proof against contamination—is absolutely pure, is suited to his age and powers, and is wholly digestible and nourishing.

Remember—that as baby's digestive capabilities increase the "Allenburys" Foods Nos. 1, 2 & 3—the only progressive dietary for infants—provide all the essential elements in right proportions to ensure healthy growth and development.

The Milk Foods Nos. 1 & 2 need only boiling water to be added to make them ready for use; trouble is thereby saved and harmful germs avoided. The No. 3 Food is a specially prepared Malted Food that is easily digested and exceptionally nutritious for children over 6 months of age who have been weaned.

Doctors, Nurses and Parents throughout the world use and recommend these nourishing Foods.

"Allenburys' Foods

MILK FOOD NO. 1. From birth to 3 months. MILK FOOD NO. 2. From 3 to 6 months. MALTED FOOD NO. 3 From 6 months onwards.

High Court of Lady Foresters

Will Meet in Peterboro' on August 17th and 18th

The High Court of Companion Lady Foresters will meet here on the 17th and 18th of August. The Queen Alexandra Chapter of this city has arranged a trip over the Lift Lock for the delegates on the afternoon of the 17th, and a moonlight excursion open to the public will be held the same evening down the river.

pitched once more. By this time the passengers knew there was something wrong. It all happened so quickly. For the third time the boat lurched, this time slowly and there were screams as everyone tried at once to get to the side next the dock. Many were beaten down to the deck unconscious in this mad rush. Probably a dozen persons, it may have been more, jumped into the water. Several were women and they were pushed under by the side of the boat before they had a chance to swim away, for after the boat got part way over it seemed to drop on its side like a stone."

Many of the victims were women and children. So thick were the waters covered with human beings for an hours after the Eastland sank that rescuers passed by dead bodies and drew out only those showing signs of life. Several causes were given for the accident. Captain Pederson told the United Press representative that a broken "air chute" let in water that resulted in the boat's careening. William J. Plamenden, who was a passenger laid the accident to a system of water ballast in vogue. This ballast, he said, was not to be taken on until the boat had gone into the lake on her way to Michigan city.

He will be ready to look after the pastoral work during the absence of the pastor, Rev. Mr. Pogue. His address will be 563 George Street.

Mentions Two Peterboro Boys

Interesting Letter From Lance-Corp. Shepardson of 2nd Battalion—Says Peterboro' Boy Was Wounded in Two Places

The following interesting letter, dated June 23, has been received from Corp. William Shepardson of the Peterborough detachment, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Contingent. Lance Corp. Shepardson resided at 153 Hart Avenue prior to enlisting. He writes as follows.

"I have been with the second Battalion ever since it was formed up at Valcartier, and have shared in all its ups and down since. Of my own personal experience at the battle of Langemarck there is little to tell, with the possible exception of a few incidents that happened after our company was cut up. I did not dig myself in and wait until dark, but started to crawl back in daylight. Believe me it was some job. With every move I made the bullets would come zipping around me. One went through my cap and oh! how I cursed the pack on my back, as it furnished a splendid mark for the Germans and I could not raise up to take it off. After half an hour's crawling I got back and sought refuge behind the Canadian "Scotties" trench. There I stayed for twenty-four hours, with the "Scotties" popping at the Germans. The next day, which was the 24th of April, I joined the 10th Battalion, who were in with the "Scotties" and were going out and up to another part of the line. I thought I would run into my own bunch, which included Mongour and English, but no such luck. We had been sent to reinforce the 8th Battalion. I think we went through shrapnel, bullets and God knows what else. I got there but was separated from Mongour and English when we extended. That was the last I saw of English. He has been missing ever since. He was wounded in two places then. Bullets were coming from all directions. What caught my eye was a number of Germans advancing in close formation about two hundred yards from our trench. We let them come for a short distance and then we gave them hell and they beat it. We soon beat it, too, for they blew our trench to pieces shortly after that. I was buried with five other fellows, but managed to get out with the rest. We took what wounded we could and retired to another trench about five hundred yards to the rear, where we were again shelled out. I have heard rumours that the Huns were short of shells, but judging by the way they threw them around those few days I don't believe it. Well this time we backed into the Suffolk regulars and I turned around and went forward with them. I stayed with them until midnight and then their officer sent me back to report to my own headquarters as he thought we were being relieved that night. Fine fellows they were. They used us dandy and they thought we had done our share and deserved a rest for a few days. I got back to my own Battalion all right but found the rest had suffered nearly as bad as my company.

During the rest of our stay in Ypres we were in reserve and only got a few shells, but I was mighty glad when we moved out for a rest. We have been in a few tight places since that, but I hope to come through a few more. We are anxiously awaiting the coming of the second contingent.

Yours truly,

Lance. Corp. Shepardson.

VIENNA DISLIKES GERMAN SOLDIERS

NEW YORK, July 23.—The Misses Louise Noltze and Mizzie Floymeyer, both of Vienna, were passengers on the Oscar II., which arrived here from Copenhagen. Miss Noltze stated that she left the Austrian capital on July 4 and had passed two days in Berlin.

"In Vienna," said Miss Noltze, "the foreign shops are open and the foreigners are not experiencing any inconvenience. Prisoners passing through the city are treated courteously and are not hooted. This is a decided contrast to conditions in Berlin. There the foreign shops are all closed and prisoners passing through the city are made the targets for jeers and insulting remarks. While I was in Berlin I saw some French prisoners and shouted a greeting to them in their own language. I soon discovered that I had made a grave mistake, for I was surrounded by an angry crowd and had to be rescued by soldiers. I believe Germans are the least liked of any nationality in Vienna. German army officers are very much disliked. There is a prevailing impression that the German officers send the Austrian troops ahead in all the important engagements, thereby using them as a shield for the German troops."

Accepted Bribes From Criminals

CHICAGO, July 24.—James Ryan, formerly a member of Chicago's ring of clairvoyants and now a convict resuming the stand in the trials of former Detective-Sergeants William Egan and Walter O'Brien, charged with accepting bribes from criminals, testified that he had paid C. P. Bertsche, confessed "fixer" $400 a month for police protection. The witness said he understood the protection money went to Captain John J. Halpin, former chief of detectives; Lieut. John Tobin, and former Detective-Sergeants O'Brien and Egan.

The witness said that on another occasion O'Brien said he had a town in Canada "fixed" for him to work in and wanted him to go there, but Ryan refused.

SPORTING NEWS UPHOLDS THE CITY LEAGUE DECISION

A local fan wrote to the Sporting News asking for an opinion of the two plays that came up in the Classic Thistle game last Saturday. The City League decided that Umpire Andrews had made a mistake in both plays. It will be remembered that when Duke Leary of the Classics had stolen second he was sent back by Umpire Andrews because the catcher's throw hit the umpire. Then afterwards, after again stealing second, he purloined third and was again chased back, this time because Phelan in trying to throw to third hit the batter at the plate. The Sporting News says:

Answer to One—See Section Seven of Rule 54. Ball is in play and runner is entitled to all the bases he can make. Umpire's decision was wrong.

Two—If batter intentionally interfered with catcher's throw the batter would be out for interference and the runner be sent back, but your query does not indicate that the batter was to blame. It is the catcher's business to look where he is throwing in such case. Would rule it a wild throw, same as if ball thrown had hit a runner and that runners can advance as far as they can make it. Umpire wrong in this case.

LADIES' TENNIS CLUB SCHEDULE

Opening Game Will be Played on August 3rd—Regulations Adopted

A meeting of the Ladies' Tennis clubs of the city was held yestrday in the T.A.S. reading room. The following clubs were represented: St. Andrew's, Miss Rae; St. Peter's, Miss Hurley; Peterborough Ladies' Mrs. Renwick; St. Paul's, Miss Bryce; George Street, Miss Higgins; St. Mary's, Miss O'Brien; Charlotte Street, Miss Gow; Sacred Heart, Miss McNicholl.

The schedule was drawn up as follows:

George Street vs. St. Mary's—Tuesday, August 3rd, at 6:30.

Peterborough Ladies vs. St. Paul's—Friday, August 6th, at 6:30.

St. Andrew's vs. St. Peter's—Tuesday, August 10th, at 6:30.

Charlotte Street vs. Sacred Heart—Friday, August 13th, at 6:30.

It was decided to adopt the following rules:

1. In case of players not playing on day appointed the others win by default.

2. Each team appoint their own referee for each game and they and players must be a member of the club playing.

3. Each player must be a member of the club they represent, and must be a member before July 23rd.

4. The best two out of three sets will determine the winners.

5. The players for the final game may be chosen from the original four players.

Miss Higgins was elected President and Miss McNicholl was elected Secretary, in connection with the tournament.

A meeting of the above clubs will be held next Friday evening, July 30th, at 7:30 o'clock, in the T.A.S. reading room for the purpose of arranging the schedule of games. Each club is requested to have a representative at this meeting.

COMISKY PROTESTS AGAINST UMPIRES

CHICAGO, Ill., July 22.—Charles Comiskey, president of the Chicago American League Baseball Club, Wednesday night filed a protest with "Ban" Johnson, president of the American League, against alleged ill treatment of his team by the umpires. The protest, it was said, covered substantially the same grounds as the statement of Comiskey made earlier in the day.

Comiskey said that Clarance Rowland, manager of the White Sox, had been the victim of the "worst umpiring he has ever seen in the American League." The charge was first made that Rowland was suspended for profanity, but Mr. Comiskey said that later the umpires admitted that the suspension was caused by Rowland's lack of speed in leaving the field when ordered to do so.

"Poor umpiring has cost my club seven or eight games this year," said Mr. Comiskey. "It looks to me as though Rowland is being made a mark. Umpires called balks on my pitchers in Detroit, but failed to do so when they made the same motions in St. Louis; they beat us out of a clean triple play when we were at Boston; last Monday Mayer was hit by a pitched ball, but was not allowed to go to first base because the umpire said he allowed himself intentionally to be hit.

"The chasing of Rowland was senseless. He went out to protest, as he had a right to do, and as I would expect him to do. He told me he didn't swear until after he had been thrown out of the game."

LACROSSE

There will be a practice of the Peterborough Lacrosse Club at Central Park on Monday night, followed by an important meeting. Every player is urged to be present.

BITTERNESS OF STRUGGLE EVERY HOUR DEEPENS

first symptom was the universal condemnation of the Welsh miners, not merely by the middle class opinion but by every labor leader. Secondly, every mention of peace is scouted; stray advocates of peace are no longer tolerated, even at Socialists' meetings, but bundled out unceremoniously. Thirdly, the new munitions department has got men to work Sundays as well as week days, sometimes on a thirty hour stretch, by the simple appeal to patriotism.

The wave of depression which followed the first revelation of the deficiency of our ammunition is passing, especially since the great drama gradually evolves as primarily a death struggle between Germany and England, and all that England stands for in ideals, and free institutions. Both countries recognize this central issue, and even semi-official German journals, while announcing that an understanding is possible between Germany and France and Germany and Russia, no reconciliation is possible between Germany and England.

Thus the bitterness of the struggle deepens every hour. You may dismiss from your minds any chance of the war ending before another year, unless there comes the unlikely event of Germany suddenly cracking up, owing to internal divisions and commercial pressure, whereof signs are yet small.

THE RUSSIAN SITUATION

The events occurring in Russia naturally excite intense anxiety. But English opinion consoles itself with the thought that Russia is most dangerous when in retreat, and on her own soil. Anyhow Russia, except in the unlikely event of her armies being made prisoner or broken up entirely, will still continue to hold on the eastern front two million German [illegible]

For England the war is only beginning but a very good beginning was made when the first bodies of Kitchener's new armies were sent to France. There was some fear and trembling lest these comparatively new recruits compared unfavorably with the highly trained regulars, but the verdict has been that Kitchener's men have compared favourably with men of the old army corps.

Italy's bold invasion of Austria apparently proceeds successfully, though slowly, and hopes, once low as to final success in the Dardanelles grow hourly as troops continue to be sent there. In the meantime Turkey's difficulties regarding ammunition are proclaimed by the angry attempts of Germany to bully Roumania into allowing free passage for Germany's supplies to her beleaguered allied people.

SOME NEW ALLIES.

We read into Mr. Asquith's mysterious allusion that some of the many millions he has just got from Parliament, almost without a word, might be wanted for new allies, a strong belief that some one of the Balkan States is at last to jump to the English side of the fence.

Another gratifying event of the week was Bonar Law's account of the extraordinary, but little heralded success of South Africa, Austrilia and New Zealand in blotting nearly every German colony from the map. Bonar Law, in telling the long detailed story, without resorting to a single note, in lucid, striking language, made a very successful first pronouncement as a cabinet minister.

As I anticipated the Imperial Federation group, whereof I am a member, raised the question of closer relations between the Dominions and the Mother Country. Steel Maitland, the new Colonial Under-Secretary, gave a favourable appeal. He alluded at several Imperial conferences, to Mr. Harcourt's promise of taking the colonies into consultation regarding terms of peace, and the fact that Premier Borden of Canada was present made the declaration epoch-making. All of these things are a part of the continuous development of those closer relations with Ireland which escaped attention for some weeks, but was brought into prominence this week by the remarkable letter of John Redmond, wherein he castigated the small group in the Dublin Corporation who wanted to force his hand and discredit his leadership and party by demanding the immediate carrying of Home Rule into operation. Mr. Redmond pointed out that any proposals to begin Home Rule in the agony of this terrible war was bound to be resented as irrational and inopportune by public opinion.

At the same time he showed his entire confidence that events had only placed Home Rule in a more assured position.

HONOURS FOR O'LEARY.

It is some indication of the entire new development of English opinion that gallant Michael O'Leary had a second triumph during a second visit to London this week, the scene being the House of Commons, Carson vying with pronounced Nationalists and such aristocratic figures as the Duke of Devonshire in grasping the modest young hero's hand. Mr. Asquith sent an apology for not being present to join in the greeting, owing to business outside the House of Commons. O'Leary in the meantime is being begged by several regiments to accept a commission.

At present it looks as if he will join the splendid body of nearly 6,000 strong of Irish regiments raised among Irishmen at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

LONDON, July 24.—Few men have ever made a bigger sacrifice for political life than Sir John Simon, the Home Secretary. He was, as is known, Attorney General, and he was offered the Lord Chancellorship. From the pecuniary point of view there are no offices in even the wide British Empire or in any other country which are so glittery as either of these two offices. The Attorney General, between salary and fees, must get something like fifteen thousand pounds a year. Sometimes the figures have gone much higher. The Attorney-General is leading counsel in all great state cases, and once the late Sir Charles Russel was lucky enough to find such a case when there was an international arbitration in the Behring Sea and and people whispered that the fortunate Irishman had drawn that year as much as thirty thousand pounds. But it may be taken that fifteen thousand pounds is the average income of the Attorney. That is ten thousand pounds more than the Prime Minister receives.

The Lord Chancellorship is not so highly paid, for the salary is ten thousand pounds a year. But it is, of course, the greatest prize in the legal profession; the woolsack figures is every school book as representing the goal to which the ambitious youth who becomes a barrister has to aspire. The Lord Chancellorhip has the additional attraction of carrying with it the handsome pension for life of five thousand pounds a year. Then the Lord Chancellor is the head of the judiciary, and he is the presiding officer of the House of Lords and a member of the Cabinet.

Most lawyers, when they got to that exalted position, are already in the sere and yellow leaf after a long and laborious struggle in the legal profession. It is to them a haven of rest after a stormy life on a tempestuous seas. But Sir John Simon, when he was offered the position, was still a young man. This astonishingly prosperous youth was only forty-two. Yet he refused the glittering prize and not only that, he gave up an office with fifteen thousand pounds a year for one which is worth only five thousand pounds a year and which is worth even less now because of the arrangement by which the ministers "pooled" their salaries so that each minister might have practically the same income of something like four thousand pounds a year.

What is the explanation of this refusal, unprecedented in British parliamentary or legal history. It is evidently that Sir John Simon values a merely political career more than the emoluments and the glitter of the highest legal offices. The general verdict in the House of Commons is that Sir John Simon took a poorly paid political office because he hopes one day to be Prime Minister of the British Empire.

There can be little doubt that Sir John Simon has reason to entertain high ambitions. His enormous progress in so short a time is made the more remarkable by his not starting life with any advantages. His father was a Welsh non-conformist clergyman, a hale and very hearty gentleman to this day. When he went to Oxford the young Simon had to eke out a good deal of his living by the prizes which he won with great rapidity, and he fell in love with an Irish girl when he was still a youngster, married her and was a husband and a father when he was still struggling for his first briefs.

His lucidity of speech is accompanied by great suavity of temper and pleasantness of manner. Simon can make even a disagreeable bill quite agreeable, a dangerous bill quite simple and innocent. He as chosen the other day, for instance, to defend the Munitions Bill, which introduced for the first time the principle of compusion to workingmen, and when he sat down you might well have imagined that the real purpose of the measure was to present sugar sticks to all the workingmen, whereas the bill enabled the Government to find any slackers among working men in these days of crisis.

Forcing of The Dardanelles In A Fortnight

ROME, July 24.—The Mail and Empire's correspondent received information from diplomatic sources to-day that the Turks as well as the allied forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula expect the Dardanelles will be forced in a fortnight.

Because of this expectation, according to the information, the Turks are purposely waisting their ammunition in order to exhaust the supply rapidly, their object being to compel the Germans to permit the discontinuance of a resistance which the Turks regard as hopeless.

NUMBER OF LIVES LOST IN DISASTER PLACED AT 1800

GERMAN DRIVE ON WARSAW MEETS STUBBORN RESISTANCE

DEATH LIST AS A RESULT OF THE EASTLAND DISASTER IS PLACED AT NEARLY EIGHTEEN HUNDRED LIVES

Streamers of Black and White Crepe Flutter From the Doors of More Than Half the Homes in Cicero and Hawthorne, Suburbs of Chicago.

Special Morning Cable:

CHICAGO, July 26.—While streamers of black and white crepe fluttered limply in the spray filled breeze, against the doors of more than half the homes in Cicero and Hawthorne, sections whence came almost all of those whose "holiday was turned into a doomsday," by the overturning of the Eastland, official and citizen Chicago turned out to-day to find the answer to "who is to blame?"

The death list may reach the total, some officials still insisted to-day, of 1,800. It may be as low as one thousand. The exhaust this morning estimates given by Deputy Police Superintendent Schuettler and Coroner Peter Hoffman, were "from 1,200 to 1,800."

Divers and dredgers resumed their gruesome hunt for bodies at 7:30 this morning. At the same time efforts were started to raise the Eastland's hull.

SINKS A TURKISH TRANSPORT.

ATHENS, July 26.—For the second time since the Dardanelles operations began, a British submarine has penetrated the harbour of Constantinople and torpedoed and sunk a Turkish transport, two gunboats and a steamer loaded with ammunition.

British aviators bmobarded Smyrna yesterday, destroying the gas works and petrol depots. A French birdman destroyed a Turkish munitions' convoy near Asia Minor, port of Aivali to-day.

ROME, July 25.—Italian press demands that Italy declare war on Turkey and Germany at once.

WERE REPULSED.

PARIS, July 25.—Germans attacked with gas and all other weapons on British front early Sunday morning, but were repulsed with heavy loss.

IN SUBJECTION.

LONDON, July 25.—It is thought here that the British Admiralty now have the German submarine and Zeppelin "peril" in subjection.

FRENCH WIN BIG SUCCESS IN VOSGES, BRITISH MINE TRENCHES NEAR YPRES

Flank of German Armies Advancing Towards Warsaw is Seriously Attacked by the Russians---War Despatches in Brief.

Special Morning Cable:

LONDON, July 26.—The French have won big success in the Vosges. British mine several German trenches near Ypres.

BERLIN, July 26.—German newspapers say the United States note is a threatening, domineering command.

PETROGRAD, July 26.—The flank of the German armies advancing towards Warsaw is seriously attacked by the Russians.

PARIS, July 26.—Premier Borden was entertained by the President of France.

LONDON, July 26.—Submarines have returned. One British, one French, and one Russian steamer and several British trawlers have been sunk.

ATHENS, July 26.—Another German cruiser "Breslau" has been reported torpedoed in the Black Sea.

PARIS, July 26.—French troops Saturday night stormed several powerful German defensive works between LaFontella Heights and the Village of Haunois in the Ben De Capt region of the Vosges mountains. Seven hundred Germans were taken prisoners in the southern part of Taunois.

BERLIN, via London, July 26.—Germans have crossed the Narew River at a point south of Ostrelenka to Pultusk. Teutonic forces are approaching the Bug River southeast of Pultusk. The movement indicates the Germans are making for Warsaw by the Petrograd railway.

ROME, July 26. — Baron Sennino is using his efforts to bring about an understanding with the Balkan States to enter war on side of Allies.

NORWAY IS GRATIFIED AT THE APOLOGY

Special to The Examiner:

Christiani, via London, July 26 — The British government, through Sir Edward Grey, Secretary for Foreign Affairs, has expressed regret to the Norwegian government at the violation by British war ships of Norwegian territorial waters, especially in the seizure by an auxiliary cruiser of a German steamer inside the three mile limit. The note, couched in cordial terms, was in reply to a formal protest lodged by Norway. It announced that the British Admiralty has been requested to respect in future the Norwegian territorial line.

The press expresses satisfaction with the terms of the note, although pointing out that it was considerably delayed. The papers call upon the government to demand satisfaction from Germany for the torpedoing of Norwegian ships, with the loss of several sailors' lives.

Only "Unmerited Luck" Will Save Switzerland From War

BERLIN, July 26.—A despatch from Bernes given out by the Overseas News Agency here Friday, says that General Ulrich Wille, commander of the Swiss army, addressing a meeting held to celebrate the anniversary of the battle of Sempach, said, while Switzerland hoped the worst would be spared to her, the future still was uncertain. It would be unmerited luck, General Wille declared, according to the despatch, if Switzerland, should escape in the midst of the heavy storms raging around her.

Included in the other news items prepared by the Overseas News Agency for transmission abroad were the following:—

"Stuttgart — The first official secession of the radical socialistic wing from the party organization was announced Friday. Three members of the Wuerttemburg Diet have formed a separate factor.

"Brussels—The Belgian national holiday (July 21) passed off without any disturbances. The government kept troops ready to meet all emergencies but nothing untoward happened.

"Geneva—Two Swiss soldiers of the French Foreign Legion who have returned from France as invalids report that one regiment, consisting of 4,000 Swiss, numbered after the battle of Arras 820 men. A second regiment, consisting of 2,000 Swiss, after the same battle numbered 232 men. The regiment lost all its officers."

A despatch from The Hague to the Overseas News Agency says that, according to reports from Cairo, the British steamship Theresa while passing through the Suez Canal ran upon a Turkish mine and sunk.

The agency gave the following despatch from Geneva:

"The French submarine Joule has been missing since April 23 and is considered lost."

PRISON FOR FOUR FRENCH ANARCHISTS

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 26.—A verdict of guilty was returned and sentences of imprisonment were imposed to-day in the trial before the permanent court martial of four anarchists, Mr. Prouvolt, wealthy and eccentric man; Mr. Donnadier and his wife and Emile Hureau, who were charged with the circulation of seditious matter. Mme. Donnadier was sentenced to three years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of 1,000f. ($200), Mr. Hureau was given a similar sentence, Mr. Prouvoit must pass one year in prison and pay a fine of 1,000f., and Mr. Donnadier will be incarcerated for seven months.

German Officers Are Suiciding

Colonels and Majors Kill Themselves Rather Than Face Wrath of Kaiser.

BOULOGNE, July 26.—A number of British ambulance-trains have arrived here during the last twenty-four hours, containing men but very slightly wounded. The position on our front is calm, except for local actions.

A number of prisoners arrived in this district yesterday. A German major gave the following details about the position at the front: "The battle continues day and night, and the French never cease to show great courage and determination. Their work is superhuman.

"Little by little the French troops are gaining ground, and our main communications north of Arras are daily in danger. We are bringing every spare cannon and man to the district to try and save our position.

"The Crown Prince of Bavaria's army was cut up, and we, who were sent to straighten things out again, are making them worse. Several colonels and majors have committed suicide rather than face the Kaiser."

Claims Capture Of Two Fortresses

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, July 26. — It is officially announced that Von Hindenburg has captured the Russian fortresses of Pultusk and Pazen, protecting Warsaw.

CAVALRY CAMP WAS BOMBARDED

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, via London, July 26 (Official statement) — No fighting in the Mitaun region. On Janichiki, Shavli, Rossiany front enemy continued to advance eastward. On the Narew front enemy's attack was repulsed despite use of poisonous gas bombs. Situation on the Vistula is unchanged. Attacks on our advanced positions at Novogeorgievsk and Ivangorod were repulsed. Our destroyers in Black Sea bombarded a Turkish cavalry camp around the Bosphorus inflecting heavy losses, and causing an explosion of a supply train.

Glorious Death Of Frenchman

French Doctor, Hero of Science, Performs Magnificent Feat of Arms Against Huns.

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 26.—I have just obtained an interesting narrative concerning the heroic death of Dr. Chaillon, head of the anti-rabies department of the Pasteur Institute, and one of the most brilliant young scientists in France.

On April 27 last he was cited in the order of the day for "having demanded and obtained the perilous mission of disinfecting a battlefield near the enemy's trenches, where he was killed in fulfilling his service."

On April 21, writes a friend of his, Dr. Chaillon motored out to the wood behind the advanced lines close to the enemy's trenches, and during the night went out alone to reconnoitre the position and estimate the difficulty of his work. Between the French and German trenches lay a mass of corrupting flesh which had been there for many months and gave forth most poisonous and deadly vapours. To disinfect them thoroughly under the cover of darkness would take at least twelve nights.

Dr. Chaillon insisted upon performing the task alone, but on the night of the 28th he was accompanied by two stretcher-bearers named Bailby and Vion, who were to remain at some distance away in order to prepare the disinfectants.

At first the scene was very quiet, and the Germans did not fire a shot, so that encouraged by this silence and by the darkness of the night Dr. Chaillon went within seven yards of the enemy's first trench, sprinkling the dead bodies with his disinfecting powder.

Presently, however, the tin in which this was contained began to flash in the light of the moon, which had now come from behind a cloud, and gave the alarm to the German sentries. A shell burst over Dr Chaillon's head and killed a corporal and eight men some distance behind.

Dr. Chaillon himself endeavoured to get to shelter and rejoined the stretcher-bearer Bailby, but another shell burst close to them and buried them so deep in the earth that it took five hours to disinter them.

Expects Butter Price to Hold

Canadian Grocer Reviews Canadian Markets—Large Indian Tea Crop

TORONTO, July 26. — The large make of cheese has had one indirect influence upon the butter market. The fact of such an over-production or at any rate, such a large production of cheese has made for some stringency latterly in the butter market, and we do not think we shall see prices any lower than they are at present. This does not infer that there is any scarcity of butter, but there has been some export demand not only to England but also to Australsia and supplies are by no means large. In the very nature of things the excessive production of cheese cannot accompany any similar excess in production of butter. Meanwhile, cheese is down in price in all Canadian markets.

Rolled oats are somewhat higher this week because there appears to be a scarcity of supplies on the market. This is not infrequent at this time of the year, and the market has been stiffening up now for two or three weeks. On the other hand the rest of the cereals are somewhat slower because during summer months lighter breakfast food takes the place of the heavier cereals. There is a notable firmness in the market for mill-feeds. This is not surprising in view of the fact that most of the mills are running short now, and the scarcity in supplies tends to make prices higher, particularly when there is found to be—for some reason or other—an excessive demand right now. Beans and peas are quoted higher in Montreal. Brand and shorts are both advanced 50c.

The first corn appeared on the market the other day and was selling at $1 a dozen. This, of course, is far too high a price for average buying, but within a week or two we shall see corn at considerably reduced levels.

Most fruits and vegetables now are coming down somewhat in price; blue berries, raspberries, strawberries, apples, melons of all kinds, canteloupes and the like are within easy reach of everybody's purse. It looks as if we shall have a fairly good crop of peaches. We hear from reliable sources that indications are for a crop exceeding that of last year.

For the first time for many months there looks to be an easiness in the tea market. Canadian Grocer has consistently been correct in its remarks regarding the trend of tea levels, and we think that the large crop of Indians—up to date 7 million pounds more than last year—may prove a fly in the ointment of advancing prices. Therefore this is not a buying time. We may see lower prices on tea if the Indian crop is a big factor.

Voices Certainly Of Victory on The Anniversary

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 26.—One year ago last Thursday the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia, which led up to the war, was delivered. The French press commemorate the anniversary with articles voicing the resolution of France and her allies to carry on the war unswervingly. The Matin says,

"Germany had reached the point of wishing to crush by diplomacy, if not by force, nations unwilling to accept her yoke. She was completely carried away by the desire of domination, as well as the mania which led her to believe she could not exist without uncontested superiority in Europe."

Mr. Alfred Capus, the dramatist, writes in the Figaro.

"France did not show the least hesitation, the least doubt about the danger which menaced her, nor in regard to the enemy's design. Rarely has a nation had more prompt or clear vision of her destiny. In a few hours she took stock of herself, accepted the German challenge and swore to conquer."

Eligible Men Urged to Enlist

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 26.—Clergymen in all London churches yesterday urged all men who are eligible to enlist at once.

Railways Are Still Safe

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 26.—Berlin Sunday despatches indicate that while Germans have crossed the Narew River, they have not succeeded in getting control of the railways into Warsaw.

Cool Weather

The weather has been mostly fine and moderately warm from Ontario eastward the last few days.

From Lake Superior westward it has been cool, with local showers. The barometer is hight over the eastern part of the continent, and also over the western provinces, while a shallow trough of low pressure extends from the Great Lakes to the south-west States.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

He stooped and looked at me with his lip curled and laughed soft and bitter. "And you've got the nerve to rawhide me for not asking Kate to marry me!" sez he. "O' course, you can't realize what a rare girl she is; but you ort to have sense enough to know that a feller ort to have one side to run to before he asks a woman to run with him. Belle Stern was the one I feared, I own that, and as soon as I saw her I intended to throw down my hand and call: I don't suppose you nor any other man would think that Belle Stern was straight, but it's just one of Life's merriest jokes that she is straight. It was shootin' a man that started her into the game, and she used to say that she had already paid out one life to keep straight, and was ready to pay out another any time it was necessary, but the next one would be her own.

"If she had edication and opportunity, she has the make-up to be one of history's women; but as things turned out, she is an outlaw and claims me as her private maverick. There you are; now, unravel it."

"Understand, Tom Smith," sez I, warmin' up a shade, "that this isn't altogether my funeral. All I'm trying to do is to get you cool-headed before you make your jump. You tell me this Bell-Banty woman claims you as her maverick. I don't care a hang for her, nor of the risk she ran of bein' a history-woman, nor for mavericks neither, what I want to know as soon as possible is, whose brand are you goin' to wear?"

The creak and the pat-pat and the rustle of the night were all about us, the stars were beginnin' to dim towards the dawning, and the glow of the little Injun fire lighted up his face as it changed expression with his inward wrastlin'.

"I said good-bye to Kate, to-night," sez he at last, "and to-morrow I clean up my face and hold out my hands for whatever the gods have in their basket for me. There's nothin' else to do, and you know it."

"Could you be satisfied to live with this Banty woman?" sez I.

"No," he snapped back at me, "I admire her, I'd like to do somethin' for her, I'm some afraid of her; but I'll never marry her."

"Could you keep true to Kate, providin' you'd once got married to her?"

"Yes," sez he, "through everything."

"Well, then, Tom Smith," sez I, speakin' as though me and Methuselum had been boys together, "what you want to do is to step away from that lookin'-glass right now, and keep your eyes on Kate for the rest o' your life. When it comes the bloomin' time in a girl's life she sways about in the breeze the same as a flower does — and she hasn't much more judgment. You happened to be up the breeze from her, and so her mind got full of you and part of it has gone to her heart. What I'd like to do is to save her heart as much as ever I can."

"She's been as bad handled when a colt as you were, and since then she's been quirted and jerked for faults which weren't her own; but the good Lord has taken care of her heart up to now. I kind o' doubt, after all she's been through, if she's expect you to be such a whole lot better 'n some o' the Old Testament heroes, and if you were to lock up your past and give her the key, I'd be willin' to stage my life that she would be the last one to open that past to get out some soiled old item to fling at ya. Her heart didn't say good-by to you last night, no matter what her lips said, and what you want to do is to get yourself ready to go to her and tell her she is all the women there are in the world."

Tom Smith sat diggin' his toes into the dirt but his nostrils quivered and his hands worped. "We laugh at religion," sez he; "but the whole scheme of life is worked out in the Bible. We come up and out of the muddle of childhood like lifeless clay, and then open our eyes of real understandin' in the garden of Eden. We're thrown out o' that pronto. Then we wander through the wilderness to the Promised Land. We get one good long look at this, and then we're herded into the broad trail and go struggling and kicking and crowding into the big open hell that's waitin' for us."

"I reckon there's more to religion than that," sez I; "but I'm not gifted to talk religion. What I'm drivin' at is some finish to this tangle which will leave Kate some such a woman as Mrs. Dan Cooper, that's all I'm askin' for. Settle things with this Banty woman, and then go to Kate with a free heart."

"It's not easy to settle things with Bell Stern," sez Tom Smith. "She shot a finger off o' one girl just for the tryin' to flirt with me. The Bible sez that woman is the weaker vessel, but that hasn't been my experience."

"If you fellers would read the Bible to get sense instead of just to get items to nag at, mebbe it would help you some," sez I. "I've heard a hundred times about the Bible sayin' that woman was the weaker vessel; but I never yet heard any one speak about what that particular vessel was filled with. I'd run farther from a glass vessel filled with balstin' powder, than from a stell vessel filled with sand, provided some idjit was to try cookin' 'em both in a hot stove."

"All right," sez he, "let it go at that. Belle Stern is the glass filled with blastin' powder, and my feelin's for Kate is the fire the fool is cookin' it with."

Tom Smith had a keener mind than I had figgered on and I was drawin' heavy on all the wisdom I had been able to pick up and store away. I had pried out quite a lot from the old hermit; and then anyway, up to a certain point most anybody can handle a love fix better 'n the parties who are in it, and I never yet met a human who didn't have some sense about every love affair except just his own.

"Look here, Tom Smith," I sez, "even the best woman don't spend more 'n two-thirds of her time buildin' up a day-dream about how grand it would be to live in an absolutely moral world. Bein' a low-down tough sinner has never yet kept a man from gettin' a good woman—unless he had plenty of competition from some other red-blooded male human which suited her better. A good woman is a man's idee of the best the Lord could do when he got up before daylight and worked until after nightfall; but it sometimes seems as though when a man is good enough to attract notice to it, he seems to taste a little insipid to even a good woman.

"Females are soft and tender and ly do seem mighty easy reignated to havin' the males kick up their heels and carry on high. Take a band o' mares for instance, and they're modest and meek, and so outlandish polite you wouldn't think they'd look at a gentleman-boss who would fight and get bossy; but you know as well as I do that if some stray stallion comes along, some out and out outlaw, and he sails into the head o' their family and kicks the everlastin' daylights out o' him, why, you know, Tom Smith, 'at those mares won't put up any mournin'. They'll just build up to the winner as lovin' and trustful as a cavvy o' little she Mormons, and they'll all go off on a picnic without ever once glancin' back. I'm not comparin 'a woman to a mare, understand, but a woman's not an angel, Tom Smith, she's nothin' but a she man and don't you ever forget that.

"You don't recall of any woman gettin' a special revelation from on high to take unto herself a collection of husbands, do you? You bet you don't. She's been some mighty gay stunts pulled off in the name of religion, but I reckon no religion was ever strong enough to try out any such project as that. Women are different from men, altogether different, and I reckon that's what makes 'em so popular. A man would rather have ten women all to himself than none at all, and down deep in her heart a woman would rather have one-tenth of a real man that none at all, and that tells more about humans than some sermons do. Now, Kate is a mighty fine gel and she has probably cried her eyes out to think 'at you've ever looked the second time at any other one gel, but I'm bettin' strong that if you can go to her all ready to make a new start, she'll start with ya, so it's up to you to get busy. They all tell me that waitin' for the knot to be tied is a heap worse than the hangin'; so either take your drink or give up the tin."

The gray of the dawn stole through the fire-glow on Tom Smith's face and I heaved a sigh. My heart ached for him and I half-way doubted if some of the old hermit's doctrines which I had diluted down to suit his digestion, was goin' to do him good or not; but one thing is certain, when medicine has to be took, the time to take it is right now. I finally told him about the reward bein' out for him, but this didn't seem to interest him in the least.

"Will you go with me to Belle Stern's," sez he, "so as to bring back whatever word there may be to bring back; just you, and no one else to know where we go?"

"I will," sez I, "and now let's get ready for breakfast. While you're washin' up, I'm goin' down to see how Hellion is gettin' along."

I found Isaac down there and he turned his sorrowful pop-eyes on me and looked that it was my duty to take the dog back to his master, but I just acted dumb, and we fixed up the dog's wounds which were beginnin' to get the right colour.

We came in and sat down and the Begum came in and soon after, the rest havin' had the start of me and Isaac. Then Tom Smith came in and he had rummaged out my razor and shaved himself clean, and it was a big improvement. He had a clean, firm face, and it was balanced, too. Nothin' but the handlin' of him as a colt had spoiled him and I took some pride to think I had guessed him right, from the start. And then my heart sank, for straight across his upper lip, as plain as a herd o' buffalo, ran a thin, blue scar.

I was stackin' my vittles on my plate the way I like to have 'em fixed before I begin, and was thinkin' about how strange it was that outlaws differed full as much as inlaws, when Isaac suddenly stood up in his place, looked at the Begum, and pointed at Tom Smith. 'There he is!" sez he as excited as an Injun gettin' scalped for the first time. "That is your son."

If I know what a dramatic moment is, that was one of 'em; but the worst of dramatic moments is, that a feller is bound to miss seein' it all. I was so took up with watchin' the faces of the Begum and Tom Smith that I never noticed Shorty and Red gettin' Isaac out of the window. Also I was sore at myself for not bein' able to put two and two together to make four. The way the Begum had cut up with us, was just for all the world the way I would have expected Tom Smith's mother to act, but he hadn't thought anything of it either when I had described her to him.

They now stood and looked at each other without movin'. He had been away ten years and from that photograph I had seen, he had sure some able developin', while she had put in the time in takin' on weight and in lecturin' at the helpless. They were embarrassed, and none of us knew what to do until Jim told 'em to step into the house and have it out alone and then went, and ol' Monody took in their breakfast to 'em.

Then I missed Isaac, Red and Shorty and went down to Hellion's stall to see if they were there. They were in the stable but not in the stall, and Shorty was still tellin' Isaac what he intended to do to him.

"What's the matter," sez I.

"Matter," howled Shorty, "matter? Well, do we intend that a bloomin' detective'l settle down on us for over a year, and fetch in a woman to pester us to death?'

Isaac was partially frightened, but more exasperated. "Are you a detective?" sez I.

"No, I'm not," sez he. "I had no idee of detectin' anything, when I came west, and I never did a bit of detectin' until I came upon a photygraph of Lester Mortimer over near the Horseshoe."

"What's the Begum's real, right, regular name?" sez I.

"Mrs. Hollis Gordon Mortimer," sez Isaac, "and she is a good woman. When my health broke down and I couldn't do any more teachin', she it was who got me appointed a Cruelty to Dumb Animals, and she has done a lot more good. This boy of hers was the apple of her eye, and when he ran away from home she didn't let it embitter her life as most mothers would, she did everything possible to find him, and then plunged into her public work harder than ever."

"And embittered the lives of thousands of others," added Shorty in a growl.

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION.

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Lumsden Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve Oldest Welsh Melody.

The Welsh guards have a fine marching song in "Land of My Fathers." This, according to Sir Ernest Clarke, is the oldest Welsh melody extant, having been composed in 795. After many hundred years Evan James, an obscure schoolmaster, wrote some words to it, which have come to be adopted as the Welsh national anthem. At a mass meeting in Wales to celebrate the end of the South African war very few knew "God Save the King," but "Land of My Fathers" was rendered with immense enthusiasm.—London Mail.

The Heat of Lava.

The lava streams from the eruption of Vesuvius in 1858 were so hot twelve years later that steam issued from their cracks and crevices. Those that flowed from Etna in 1787 were found to be steaming hot just below the crust as late as 1840. The volcano Jorullo, in Mexico, poured forth in 1759 lava that eighty-seven years later gave off columns of steaming vapor. In 1780 it was found that a stick thrust into the crevices instantly ignited, although no discomfort was experienced in walking on the hardened crust.

What Children Need.

More fancy, more poetry, more food for imagination—that is what children need. Every day the need becomes more apparent. Magazines, moving pictures, the average juvenile book, the talk of all about them—everything tends to tether children's thoughts to the world of Here-and-now and Has-to-be, the world we know with our five senses. But shall they, therefore, lose their rightful inheritance in that other realm of loveliness—the world of Yesterday-and-Tomorrow, of Faraway, of Maybe? This realm is intended to be loaned them indefinitely, prefigured in the "glory and the gleam" of the rainbow prism.—Atlantic.

EVIDENCES OF A TRUE HOLINESS

"If Any Man Have Not the Spirit of Christ, He Is None of His."

Different Meanings of the Word Spirit—Consecration a Definite Contract With God—Sealed With the Earnest of the Spirit—Fruits of the Spirit of God—Necessity of Knowledge of the Divine Character — Justice the Foundation Principle—How Love Fulfills the Law—Proper Balancing of Character Necessary to Joint-Heirship With Christ.

Hamilton, Ont., July 25.—Pastor Russell is here today. We report his discourse based upon the text, "God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." (2 Timothy 1:7.) The Pastor spoke as follows:

Bible students have learned not to think of the different spirits mentioned in our text as different persons. When, for instance, an evil spirit or disposition is mentioned, we do not think of it as a person; and when a holy spirit or disposition is mentioned, we do not think of it as a person. A holy person has a holy spirit or disposition. The Holy Spirit proceeds from God. It is His spirit. It comes to us through the Truth; it is not another person, another God. (1 Corinthians 8:5, 6.) Likewise the spirit of fear is not a devil, a spirit being; and the spirit of a sound mind is not a God, nor an angel. Gradually we are getting the right focus on these matters, to see that God is a Spirit; and that as a Spirit He has an influence—just as a human being has an influence. That influence is according to the character, according to the strength, according to the power to exert one's self.

Some have a power of evil-doing by which they could vanquish a hundred or a thousand; in one sense of the word they have a strong spirit. Others have a spirit of bitterness, and can stir up evil in others. Still others have a spirit of kindness, gentleness, and love. But by nature we are all members of a fallen race; for we have many of the qualities that belong to the wrong spirit.

When the disciples came to Jesus after the Samaritans had refused to sell them food, they said, "Lord, wilt Thou that we call down fire from heaven to destroy them and their city?" Jesus replied, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." You should not have such a disposition. The fact that they have ignored Me is an insignificant matter. If you desire to have My spirit, you must get rid of that disposition to render evil for evil, to do harm to others.

Our Lord was not talking about the Holy Spirit as a person, but as an influence. The Bible shows us that God, who is a Spirit Being, is not vindictive, but merciful, loving, and just. Therefore He is a good Spirit, a Holy Spirit, God's disposition is a holy disposition; He is not disposed to do anything wrong or unjust or unkind. All who receive His Holy Spirit receive the spirit of a sound mind, of justice, of gentleness. And so the Apostle, in speaking about this matter, says that the Holy Spirit is manifest—can be seen—in those who possess it.

St. Paul does not mean that we shall see another being get into a man, as once we believed, that the Holy Spirit, as a God, divided Himself up and entered into millions of people. Those who have the idea that God can be divided amongst millions of people are very much confused in their minds. Whoever receives the mind of Christ, the spirit of Christ, receives the spirit of holiness. Our Lord Jesus gave up His own will to do the Father's will. Just in proportion as we give up our own fallen disposition and take instead God's way of thinking, God's way of viewing matters, God's Spirit of Love, to that same extent ours is a holy spirit, to that extent we have received the Holy Spirit.

All the human family are fallen and when God received us into His family through Christ it was with a view to begetting us of the Holy Spirit to a newness of nature. This start of the new nature leads us to view every subject from God's standpoint, to say to ourselves, "Is this the mind of God on this subject? I will study the Scriptures and do what God has said on this matter. When I came into the family of God I agreed to give up my own will altogether, just as the Master did."

No matter how good our Lord's will was, He gave it up in order to do the Father's will. "Not My will, but Thine, be done." "Lo, I come (in the volume of the Book it is written of Me) to do Thy will, O God." (Hebrews 10:7.) The Father had a certain Plan marked out. The Son, as an intelligent being, would have thoughts of His own; but He surrendered all His own plans and thoughts in order that He might do the Father's will. The Father was pleased with this course; and as a result when our Lord Jesus gave up His own will He came right into line with God's providences. He was successful in His work because He was obedient to the Father.—Philippians 3:8, 9.

The invitation of the Gospel Age is an invitation to do the same thing that Jesus did. The Master said, "If any man will come after Me [be My disciple, My follower], let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow Me." (Matthew 16:24.) To deny himself is to give up his own will. Whoever has given up his will has given his all to the Lord. As the Apostle says, we present our bodies a living sacrifice. (Romans 12:1.) We give up our wills entirely; our Lord Jesus accepts us and presents us to the Father. But before He can do this, He must impute to us of His righteousness; for by nature we are imperfect through the fall, and the Father will accept nothing that is imperfect. As our Lord said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." Again He said, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." —John 14:6; 6:37.

After we have given ourselves through the Lord Jesus Christ, He imputes the merit of His sacrifice to us in such form that the Father can receive us as His children, and start in us the beginning of a new nature —a new creation. When we get a proper view of this transaction, we shall not think that we must repeatedly give ourselves to God. We shall be concerned about living up to the contract which we have made, and which God has accepted and sealed with His Holy Spirit. This seal is the earnest of our inheritance; it binds the contract which we made when we gave ourselves to God in consecration. (2 Corinthians 1:21, 22.) We have signed a contract giving our all to Him; we have received the earnest, the hand payment; and through the coming days we are to keep giving ourselves without cessation in harmony with the Lord's will.

Daily we should search the Word of God that we may understand the Divine Message and get the Spirit of the Truth. We must see what is the real meaning of the Bible, so that God may be greatly pleased with us, as He sees how earnestly we are trying to do His will in everything. Thus His Spirit will grow in us. More and more it may be filled with the Holy Spirit. It is a Spirit of meekness, gentleness, long-suffering, patient endurance, and love; it is the Holy Spirit of God; and the more we have of its fruits, the more we shall have of the Spirit itself. But we cannot have these fruits, developed from the teachings of God's Word, unless we have the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, the Spirit of Christ, influencing all our acts, words, and thoughts.—Galatians 5:22, 23.

When first we entered the School of Christ, we were babes and acted like babes. But the Apostle says that we are not to remain babes. We are to put away childish things, to be no longer children tossed about by every wind of doctrine. As babes we were fed upon "the sincere milk of the Word," that we might grow thereby. (1 Peter 2:2.) But as grown men we no longer desire milk as a steady diet, although we enjoy a glass of milk occasionally. (Hebrews 5:12-14.) We prefer to come to our Father's table, the table of the Lord, and receive the Truth—the strong meat that belongs to such as are of full age, the meat that will make us strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.

The Holy Spirit is not a spirit of excitement. We have known people to be filled with the spirit of excitement who did not seem to have the Holy Spirit at all. If we have the Holy Spirit, it will manifest itself in meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly kindness, love.

What God has been doing for His people during the past forty years is wonderful. To every one of them the Bible has become a new Book. More and more the old things are passing away. It was not sufficient that we should have the Saviour and should believe in Him. That knowledge was only the beginning of our blessings. We still rejoice greatly to know that our sins have been forgiven. We still have the milk of the Word, assuring us of the merit of our dear Redeemer's sacrifice. But we are not living on a milk diet now. We need something stronger than the knowledge that our sins are forgiven. This is far from the end of the knowledge bestowed upon the people of God.

Growing in grace and in knowledge, we are learning more and more to see what the Divine will is and what the Holy Spirit is. Things which once we thought very consistent and reasonable are now very inconsistent to us. As we receive more of the spirit of a sound mind, we see how foolish were many of the things which once we believed. There is new light coming into our minds—appreciation of the lengths, breadths, heights, and depths of the Love of God, which passes all understanding.

Whoever comes into relationship with God receives a begetting of love; for God is Love. Love worketh no injury to his neighbor. Therefore the Apostle says, "Love is the fulfilling of the Law." God's Law is a Law of Justice; and, as the Scriptures set forth, whoever receives the Spirit of the Lord, the Spirit of Love, will at least render justice to others. No law requires more than justice. Whatever we do more than justice is that much of sacrifice on our part. But we cannot do all that we would like to do; for in our flesh dwells no perfection. Nor can we live up to the full Law of God. But we can see to it that our will is to do nothing less than justice; and that if in anything we come short of justice, if in anything we have infracted the Golden Rule, it has been contrary to our minds. Then we shall not rest until we have made right the wrong act, word, or look—whatever was an infraction of the rights of others.

Should some one say, "This is a hard rule," we reply, "You will never be ready for the Kingdom unless you have the right spirit, my dear brother." This principle of justice, which is the foundation of God's Throne, is the foundation of His character. To do to others what we would have them do to us is the right thing to do—justice. If we cannot do justice in every act, we can at least do it in our minds. "With my mind I serve the Law of God," said the Apostle, even if he could not on every occasion do it in every act and word.

Whenever we find that we have violated justice, repentance is the proper step; and every true repentance means an acknowledgment of the wrong to the one who has been wronged. To be sure this course is very humiliating. But such experiences are the best things that we can possibly have; for by these we develop humility, which in turn will help us to meekness and gentleness. Thus in the Divine arrangement the people of God are learning helpful lessons, that give them more and more of the spirit of a sound mind. They can think better than formerly they did; they are able to build themselves up. As they find that this or that quality of character is weak and imperfect in their natural disposition, they learn to level up their whole disposition in harmony with the spirit of justice. This work going on in their hearts is making them fit for the Kingdom.—2 Peter 1:5-11.

God is calling a very special class for joint-heirship with our Lord Jesus Christ. These must be very loyal to the Lord, very just in their appreciation of the rights of others, in order to be accounted worthy. The Father sees that our bodies are very imperfect; but He promises that if He finds our heads and our hearts right, He will give us in the resurrection a right body, a glorious body. Then, with right heads, fully committed to those principles of righteousness which represent the Divine character, the Holy Spirit of God, we shall be in the condition in which He will be able to use us.

The new body will not make the character, but will be merely the agency through which the character will demonstrate itself. If we do not develop the character now, the moral character of our Lord Jesus Christ, we shall not receive a place in the Messianic Kingdom. All that are there will be fit for their position. God has taken long enough to find this class. He will not make any mistake. Every one who has developed Love Divine has had just such experiences as you and I have had—experiences along the line of justice and righteousness. The two are similar; for righteousness is justice, and justice is righteousness.

But it is not the Divine will that we should have justice merely; to be like God we must also have sympathy, have a kind feeling toward others. God has that kindly feeling for His creatures. Away back in the beginning, knowing about His Plan for the creation of Father Adam, and knowing about our sins as they would come upon us because of Adam's disobedience, He made provision for our redemption, for the restitution of the world, and for the call of the Church. All this is beyond the requirements of justice. God could not do less than justice to every member of the human family. Just as surely as He calls upon you and me to deal according to the Golden Rule, so He does all things according to the principles of justice.

Justice is the foundation of God's Throne. The whole superstructure of His Kingdom is built upon justice. He will not do less than justice, and this is what He requires of every creature. Nothing less than absolute justice will be permitted. But the great test now upon the Church is more than this—that we should have the love which will lay down life itself for the brethren. While God demands nothing more than justice, yet if we do not render more than justice we cannot reign in the Kingdom. The Father is seeking those who have the spirit of love —those who are kind, loving, forgiving, helpful. He desires them to have His Spirit.

The Christian knows that all things work together for good to them that love God. This knowledge is to him a spirit of power, of strength. Circumstances and conditions which would overwhelm others would be what he would expect to have. But the child of God is courageous, knowing that his Heavenly Father will not permit anything to come to him that will not be for his good. In proportion as he receives the spirit of a sound mind, the Spirit of the Lord, and in proportion as the Holy Spirit works in him, he will become more and more like our Lord; and this spirit will enable him to have more and more compassion on those who are out of the way. It will give him broader views of life, and more general views of mankind; and as God sent His Son, and as the Son came and did things for the good of man at His own expense, so all who have His spirit will strive to bless mankind.

The spirit of a sound mind broadens and deepens the character along all its good lines. It helps its possessor not only to take more correct views of his own disposition, but to be more sympathetic toward others. As he realizes more and more the impairment of his own mind and body and his own need of mercy and helpful correction, he recognizes the similar derangement of the whole world of mankind and the general need of sympathy and assistance. As he learns to rectify the deficiencies and inequalities of his own mind, he sympathizes more and more with those who are without this regulating principle—this spirit of power, of love, and of a sound mind. Thus he gradually becomes more patient, more sympathetic, more generous, more loving—more like the Redeemer, who is Godlike.

Wouldn't Be Neglected.

Lady Roberts has told a good story concerning a smart answer she once heard a soldier make to a remark of hers in India. She was visiting some military hospitals out there and was so delighted with what she saw that she exclaimed:

"I think the nurses deserve a medal for this campaign as much as anyone, and I hope they will get one."

"I don't know about a medal," said a witty officer who was in attendance; "but they are sure to get plenty of clasps!"

Tomato Jelly Salad.

To one can of condensed tomato soup add one can of hot water. Soften one-half package or two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in half-cup of cold water. Bring the soup to boiling point, season with salt, pepper and sugar; remove from the fire; add the softened gelatin and stir until this is dissolved. Pour into individual moulds which have been moistened with cold water. China cups or custard cups make excellent molds. When the jelly is cold, remove from molds and serve on lettuce with mayonnaise. A delicious salad for a Sunday night supper.

Ham Mousse.

Dissolve 1 tablespoonful of granulated gelatin in 1-2 cupful of cold water and add to two cupfuls of cold boiled ham finely chopped then pounded in a mortar. Season with 1 teaspoonful of mixed mustard and a few grains of cayenne; then add 1-2 cupful of heavy cream beaten until stiff. Turn into a mold previously dipped in cold water, chill thoroughly, remove from mold, surround with Delmonico sauce and garnish with parsely. For the sauce beat 1-2 cupful of heavy cream until stiff and add 3 tablespoonfuls of mayonnaise dressing, 2 tablespoonfuls of grated horseradish root, 1 tablespoonful of vinegar, 1 teaspoonful of English mustard, 1-2 teaspoon of salt and a few grains of cayenne.

Perfection Cookies.

One cup pressed down full of brown sugar, one-half cup of butter, yolks of two eggs, two tablespoons of sour milk with one-half teaspoon of soda dissolved in it. I mix them over night, add one teaspoon of vanilla the last thing. After using enough flour to roll out easily, sprinkle with granulated sugar. Roll it in lightly, cut with doughnut cutter. Bake in a quick oven.

Nice Hard Sauce.

One-half cup of butter, one cup of powdered sugar, one-third teaspoon lemon extract, two-thirds teaspoon vanilla. Cream butter, add sugar gradually and flavouring.

Molasses Cookies.

One cup of molasses, one-half cup of shortening drippings, one egg, one teaspoon milk, one teaspoon soda, salt and spice and flour enough to roll thin. Bake in hot oven.

Sponge Cake.

One cup of sugar, one cup of flour, one teaspoon of baking powder, two eggs, five tablespoons of cold water. Lemon flavour.

Cottage Pudding.

One cup of milk, one-half cup of sugar, one egg, two tablespoons melted butter, one teaspoon baking powder, two cups of flour. Bake one-half hour. Serve with sauce. Two eggs, one cup of powdered sugar and one teaspoon of flavouring.

Fruit Punch.

A delicious fruit punch is made with the juice of three grapefruit, twelve oranges, juice from a can of pineapple or juice and pulp from one fresh pineapple which has stood in sugar chopped fine. Cherries, strawberries, if desired, and sugar to taste. No water is added and these ingredients fill a punch bowl.

Chocolate Tapioca.

Put 3 cups of milk into a double boiler, let scald, add 1-2 cup of minute tapioca and cook till clear. Add 1 even cup of sugar, 2 squares of unsweetened chocolate in pieces. Cook till melted, remove from the fire and add 1 teaspoonful of vanilla.

Fruit Punch.

One cup water, 2 cups sugar, 2 cups tea, 1 quart distilled water, 2 cups strawberry juice, 5 lemons, 5 oranges, 1 can grated pineapple, 1 cup maraschino cherries. Make a syrup by boiling sugar and water 10 minutes, add tea, strawberry juice, lemon and orange.

Nut Cake.

Cream 1-2 cup of butter with 1 1-2 cups of sugar and add 1 cup of chopped nut meats. Stir in 2 well beaten eggs and 1 teaspoon each of lemon and vanilla, then add 1 cup of milk alternately with 2 cups of flour mixed and sifted with 3 teaspoons of baking powder. Bake about one hour in a moderate oven.

Parsnip Stew.

This is a fine supper for lovers of parsnips: Take scraps of beef, fat and lean both, say, perhaps, 3 cupfuls, and put on the stove in cold water. When well cooked add two large onions, 2 large or 3 small potatoes, and 2 or 3 parsnips, and salt to taste, before the vegetables are cooked, for I find it better this way. Serve hot. Very fine.

For the Thin Woman.

If you would grow plump eat lots of eggs ,drink milk and put butter into and on everything which you can. Don't be afraid of a little fat meat now and then, eat cereals with cream and food made with milk, eggs and butter. Go to bed early and get full eight or nine hours' sleep every night and, above all, don't worry.

To flatten the face, whenever the opportunity offers, try blowing out the cheeks as you sometimes see little children do, holding them in this position for the space of a minute or so. Do this night and morning and several times during the day.

CURRANT BUNS

Sift one quart of flour with four teaspoons of baking powder and one teaspoon of salt, rub in two tablespoons of shortening and add just sufficient sweet milk to make a dough. Place on a figured board, roll into a thin sheet, spread with butter, sprinkle with one half cup of sugar, dust with cinnamon and then sprinkle with clean dry currants. Roll up, cut into slices, place in a pan with a space between each and bake in a moderately hot oven.

Washing Crepe de Chine.

The new waists of crepe de chine in the delicate tints may be laundered beautifully, keeping their original shades, if a small piece of crepe paper of the same colour as the waist is put in the rinsing water and allowed to tinge the water. Use the coloured water just as you would bluing. A waist of crepe de chine in the apricot shade that has been worn a year and has been laundered several times, yet appears as fresh as new.

A Good Complexion.

The seeker after a good complexion must avoid rich foods, pastries, ice cream sodas, candy, coffee and eating between meals.

She must have long sleeping hours, because weariness causes the face to have long, tired lines. She must have fresh air and sleep with her windows open, for fresh air cleanses the lungs, freshens the skin, and brightens the eyes. She must drink two quarts of water daily and between meals, unless she wishes to grow fat.

External consideration is fully as important. The entire body must be bathed, so that the pores of the face will not be overtaxed. Use hot water and a pure soap, rinse well with tepid water, and lastly shower with cold water. Cold water is not only tonic, but removes any particle of soap remaining on the skin.

If pores are so coarse as to be unsightly, the following lotion may be applied to the face: Two ounces of soap liniment and one ounce of ether. Rub on a little and let it remain on a few minutes, then bathe the face with clear, cold water. The liniment is apt to irritate the skin, so should be used sparingly. It will, however, eliminate blackheads, and if it smarts too much cold cream should be applied at once.

Comfort and Cure For Baby's Skin Troubles

Dr. Chase's Ointment Cured When Baby's Body Was Covered With Distressing Eczema

If every mother could try Dr. Chase's Ointment for the chafing, skin irritation and resulting eczema which tortures so many babies, what a blessing it would be for the little ones.

This letter will give you an idea of what a wonderful work this Ointment is doing in the way of bringing comfort to children who are so unfortunate as to contract eczema. It is so easy for this trouble to develop from chafing or irritation caused by the clothing, and so difficult to get it cured, that Dr. Chase's Ointment is appreciated when once its healing qualities are known.

Mr. M. L. Duscloe, Postmaster, Dugnayville, N.B., writes: "I believe it is my duty to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema. My baby was seized with eczema and his face and arms were covered with this terrible disease. After trying all sorts of ointments the disease continued to spread until it covered the entire body. When the itching became bad he would scratch himself and was sometimes found in his cradle covered with blood. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Ointment I bought two boxes and before this was all used the child was cured. That was a year ago, and there has been no trace of eczema since. I recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from eczema as being the best treatment in the world for itching skin diseases."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is for sale by all dealers at 60 cents a box. It is a good idea to keep it at hand along with the bath soap to be used for roughness of the skin, chafing or irritation. Prevention is so much better than cure. Powders clog the pores, but Dr. Chase's Ointment cleanses the pores and thereby keeps the skin soft and smooth. Sample box free if you mention this paper. KODAK SAFETY F

Neutral Red Cross Societies Have Played a Special Part In This European War

It would be impossible to exaggerate the horror of the European situation if there were no Neutral Red Cross Societies. Switzerland, Holland and Denmark are all situated geographically on the chief routes of communication between belligerent countries, and their Red Cross Societies have played a special part in emphasizing the international character of the Red Cross. These Neutral Red Cross Societies mediate between the Red Cross Socities of the nations at war, and exemplify those universal principles of international charity, which more than anything else in the world to-day make for universal peace.

Holland effects the exchange of incapacitated French and German prisoners. The Swiss Red Cross keeps up a large exchange bureau by means of which French and German prisoners are returned to their respective countries, and Denmark does the same kind of service for Russia and Germany. Lists of prisoners of war are sent by the different countries to these Neutral Red Cross Societies, which are thus in a position to answer all inquiries of relatives and to forward mail and parcels to prisoners.

To appreciate this department of Red Cross work, one has only to imagine the terrible confusion that would result from the disappearance and silence of millions of men. Immense legal difficulties would arise everywhere in the absence of all information as to the existence or death of prisoners of war. Estates would be involved in legal tangles. Women thinking they were widows might contract new marriages. Every country would be full of Enoch Ardens, and disputes as to the inheritance of property

The Red Cross typifies civilization itself. It is the universal world religion of to-day. Mankind's moral and religious beliefs have transmuted themselves into a passionate desire to suppress pain

The American Red Cross.

America, the largest neutral country, has fully lived up to its Red Cross obligations. The American Red Cross has sent a hospital unit to every belligerent country. The British unit is stationed in the American Women's Hospital at Paignton, Surrey. The French unit is at Pau. The Russian unit is in charge of a hospital at Kieve on the Baltic. The German units conduct two hospitals at Gleiwitz and Kosel. The Austro-Hungarian units are stationed at Vienna and Budapest. There is a Serbain unit at Belgrade and a Turkish unit at Constantinople. In addition, the American Red Cross is doing work in Mexico and in China; so that its activities are at the present moment wirld-wide. The American Ambassadors everywhere keep the Red Cross executive informed of conditions and needs in every country.

The Japanese Red Cross.

One of the most efficient parts of the world-wide Red Cross organization is the Japanese section. The Japanese Red Cross Society has a membership of 1,890,000 and endowment fund of $13,000,000. Its last annual meeting was presided over by Her Majesty the Empress, and was attended by 10,000 delegates. The American Red Cross Society has a membership of 18,000, and an endowment fund of $923,000. There is thus no country in the world in which there is so much Red Cross enthusiasm as in Japan. In all their wars, the Japanese have faithfully discharged all Red Cross obligations, to their own and foreign troops.

Every well-to-do person in Japan joins the Red Cross. Even young children are enrolled as life members before they can walk or talk. The Japanese Red Cross member stamps the cross on the lintel above his door, and it is said that housebreakers scrupulously respect premises so marked.

In the present war the Japanese Red Cross, in addition to the work at Taingtau, has sent Red Cross units to Russia, France, Britain, and Serbia, and has thus set an inspiring example to all other Red Cross countries. The tireless energy of our brown Allies from the land of Nippon should spur our Canadian Red Cross workers on to further efforts. Our Canadian Red Cross should aim to secure the same reputation in the work of healing as our soldiers in the work of fighting.

Contributions and supplies are still urgently needed, and there should be no diminution in the Red Cross activity which is steadily winning for Canada a proud place in Red Cross annals.

The Work of the Dutch Red Cross.

The Dutch Red Cross is very active in effecting the interchange of wounded prisoners of war who are incapacitated for further military service. Representatives of the Dutch Army Medical Service and of the Red Cross await the arrival of the British prisoners coming from Belgium. As the trains come in they are entered by Red Cross workers, and the Dutch ladies give the wounded food and refreshment, in addition to small gifts and souvenirs.

The arrangements for the transport of the wounded to Britain are entirely in the hands of the Dutch Red Cross, who have chartered hospital ships. Dutch doctors go with the ships until they dock in a British port, and lavish on the British wounded an attention that could not be increased were they of Dutch nationality.

Holland, not least of the neutral countries, has been faithful to the idea of universal charity, which actuated the founding of the international Red Cross.

Canadian Red Cross Organization.

The Canadian Red Cross possesses one feature that distinguishes it from all other Red Cross organizations. It is a regular part of the machinery of the State. It is incorporated by Act of Parliament, 1909, and its officials are bound under severe penalties to make an annual report to the Dominion Minister of Militia. In Britain, there has been a certain amount of difficulty owing to the clear-cut distinction between the Red Cross and the Army Medical Corps which controls the military hospitals. In Canada the relief of the wounded is greatly simplified by the status of the Red Cross as a State Department. This also gives an additional guarantee to the public, that the funds it contributes are efficiently and conscientiously administered.

Hospital Ship for Dardanelles.

In view of the need for hospital accommodation for serious cases at the Dardanelles, the French Government has placed at the disposal of the French Red Cross a vessel belonging to the Messageries Maritimes, the Charles Roux, which is being fitted out as a hospital ship. The coal will be provided by the French authorities, while the French Red Cross will supply the beds, the medical stores, the doctors, and the nurses. But all other supplies, such as linen, shirts, pyjamas, socks, handkerchiefs, and stores, besides comforts like ice machines and bed rests, must be furnished by private charity.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

GIRL'S MIDDY DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

The middy dress is one of the styles which vary a little each season, but which retain in the main the same characteristics from year to year. One unchanging point is the long blouse, but the one best liked this season is of circular cut and this is the type which we illustrate.

In this model the neck has a short opening below the collar in front and this permits the little wearer to slip the blouse over the head. The neck is further trimmed with a wide sailor collar. The sleeves are either full length or shorter.

The novel feature of the blouse is the circular cut of the lower edge. This naturally gives considerable fulness, instead of the straight lines to which we have become accustomed in the middy. This fulness is laid in pleats all turning outward from the central panel of the front and back and each pleat is held at the waistline by a single button.

The skirt is entirely separate from the blouse and may therefore serve for other dresses as well as for this one. It has a straight edge top and bottom and a plain front panel. From this the pleats turn backward and meet in the centre of the back, where the closing is placed.

Blouse and skirt may be of one material or the skirt may be of serge and the blouse of duck or linen.

Poor and Rich Give All Their Gold to France

PARIS, July 26.—Since the Bank of France opened special counters in Paris to receive the people's hoarded gold a few days ago, the yellow coins have continued to flow in an uninterrupted stream. Depositors exchanged gold for bank notes in the first four days in Paris to the extent of $3,000,000. No reports from the provinces have been made out.

Capitalists went to the bank in automobiles, taking little bags of gold to strengthen the credit of France, and help in the national defence. In the early morning hours working men and small employers hurried in on the way to their labour to hand in their jealously preserved savings.

Among those who came to the bank no more gold were a street lemonade seller, who brought two Napoleons, wrapped in a bag of rice, and a little seamstress, who proudly gave her solitary coin.

All who take gold to the bank get in return a receipt slip as a souvenir, saying for their country's sake they have parted with their treasure.

In addition to equivalent value in paper money the Bank of France can issue legally three bank bills of $20 for every $20 in gold. When Finance Minister Ribot asked the Governor of the Bank of France to open special gold receiving offices in Paris and its Provincial branches, M. Pallain already had taken steps to this end.

Inquiries in many competent quarters have led to the estimate that gold money held privately in France amounts to $700,000,000, or nearly $80,000,000 less than the total gold reserve now at the Bank of France.

Few of the depositors say: "I wish to exchange gold," or, "I wish to pay in gold. All make the simple remark: 'I bring gold.'"

Rich and poor alike are conscious they are taking gold, not to the bank but for France.

It would be a mistake for the public to imagine that it is making a sacrifice in exchanging gold for notes, since the gold is unemployed, and therefore unprofitable. The bank is naturally anxious to keep as large a reserve as possible, so as to maintain fully the credit of its paper issues, and at the same time enable the Government to pay for supplies from abroad in gold.

Another reason why the Government wishes the nation's gold to be held in the strong hands of the bank is to prevent it from being withdrawn privately under false pretences to find its way to the enemy by trickery. Germany and Austria are in desperate straits financially, and are ready to adopt the most deceitful practices to get gold.

SIX MOLARS NEEDED.

Canadian Soldiers With False Plates Are Barred by Regulations.

Toronto dentists, if the Government and General Sam Hughes approve, are shortly to establish a dental clinic at the Exhibition Camp, in Toronto, which will make it thereafter impossible for a man to be rejected on the count of bad teeth. Many Torontonians have complained that they were not allowed to go and fight the Kaiser because their molars weren't ms'es, and the public has been examining its own outfit and wondering just what kind of teeth the Germans like. This is the regulation: A man must have on each side of his mouth three molars in opposition, either two in the upper jaw biting on one in the lower jaw, or one in the upper jaw biting on one in the lower jaw. That makes six molars in all. Partial plates are allowed, and bridges, but no entire plates.

As their share of patriotic work a number of local dentists have volunteered their services to remedy the teeth of the rejected, and the officials of the Toronto Dental Society are now in consultation with Dr. Fotheringham, who represents the militia, regarding the establishment of a dental clinic. Here recruits who have been rejected solely on account of defective teeth will be made perfect again. But the dentists must first be assured that the patients were rejected entirely on account of their teeth. They do not wish to repair a man's teeth and then find the total result rejected because his eyes or feet aren't working correctly. It is also necessary that the man be not able to pay for the work himself. Another and important proviso is that the army dental surgeons be consulted.

The Canadian army has for some years past had army dental surgeons on its staff, though in England this has not been the case. The dental condition of England is deplorable. Among the poorer people teeth are seldom filled, but are extracted on the first pain, which accounts for the almost toothlessness of many quite young men and women who migrate to Canada.

"They are realizing that now," said a local dentist. "They are having big dental clinics at all the concentration camps, and plates and bridges are being made for the rejected men."

If the dentists' offer is accepted it will mean that hereafter any volunteer need only present a certificate from the medical examiner, approved by the dental surgeon of the army, and his teeth will be treated free of charge. There is a rumor to the effect that men examined merely by a medical examiner are ordered to have strange and wonderful things done to their teeth, which do not need doing at all.

"It stands to reason that a dentist would know better when a man's teeth were in good condition, than a doctor would," explained one dentist. "Men have been going to the clinic at the college asking for most absurd things to be done for them. But with a dental clinic all that difficulty would be obviated."

A WOMAN'S ADVICE TO WOMAN REGARDING THE QUESTION OF SECRETS.

Don't talk. Cultivate the art of listening. If your friend does the talking you avoid many conversational pitfalls.

Don't tell your mother the thing you would keep secret. Above everything, don't tell your "best friend."

Don't start "I know something I won't tell." As surely as you do just as surely will little things give away your secret.

Don't get the gossiping habit. Once you start talking aimlessly little details slip out that you would later give a good deal to have left unsaid. Get the habit of weighing your words.

Don't make the common mistake of thinking that thoughtless words are always taken as unthinkingly as they are uttered.

Don't be so anxious to be the first one to tell something that sounds unusual. Exaggeration is always the forerunner of secret disclosures.

A PRACTICAL WRITING TABLE

A simply-made writing table can be improved from an ordinary kitchen table, and made to harmonize with any room. One made for a green and white room had the legs sawed off to a convenient length. The table was painted white, and over the top was stretched a cover of green denim. This was turned in and tucked on the under side of the top. On this was set a large blotter case holding sheets of green blotting paper, a box for paper and envelopes, and a pen tray. The blotter corners were covered with green and white chintz, the box for stationery had a cover of the same smoothly pasted on, and the result was a pretty and practical writing table, costing very little.

AMERICAN STEAMER SUNK BY GERMANS

ALMOST COMPLETE QUIET IN THE WEST

Air Raid by the French Only Activity in West

To-day's Official Despatches From Paris Indicate Little Fighting on the Flanders-French Line---French Aviators Again Show Their Skill at Bomb Dropping.

ANOTHER BRITISH STEAMER SENT TO BOTTOM

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, France, July 26.—A raid by French aeroplanes on a German military depot at Nantillois, northwest of Verdun, was described in the official despatches to-day.

The French hurled explosive and incendiary bombs, and showered several thousand darts, apparently with success.

This afternoon's official communique indicated little action along the Franco-Flanders front in the past twelve hours. Between Aix Noulette and Souchez, an artillery dual is proceeding.

FRANFORT, Germany, July 26.—The Frankfurter Zeitung's Vienna correspondent says the Austro-German forces have captured 131,250 Russian prisoners since July 14th, besides forty-one cannon, one hundred and forty-one machine guns, and an enormous quantity of military supplies.

ROME, July 26.—An official statement says: On the afternoon of July 23rd, two of our seaplanes flew over Riva and dropped eighteen bombs on the railroad station with excellent results. The enemy's artillery fired on the machines without causing any damage.

LONDON, July 26.—The London steamer Grangewood of 3,423 tons, was torpedoed and sunk off the Shetland Islands yesterday, while from Archangel to Havre. Her crew was landed at Lerwick.

Massacres Are To Follow The Fall of Constantinople

ROME, July 26.—The apostolic delegates at Constantinople has succeeded in conveying confidential information to the Vatican that the forcing of the Dardanelles is inevitable, and that the Turks are determined to massacre the Christians when the allies occupy Constantinople, which will probably be razed to the ground.

The delegate urges the Pope to use his influence to prevent massacres and to suggest that the Christians be interned in Asia Minor that they may thus escape a death which otherwise will be inevitable.

The Pope has appealed to Emperor William and to Emperor Francis Joseph, whom he will hold responsible, unless the threatened massacres are averted.

MET FELLOW EMPLOYEES OF THE EXAMINER AT FRONT

Driver Joe Reynolds of Peterborough, at the front with the 4th Battery, and formerly of the Examiner press room, has written the following letter to Mr. "Bob" Long, also of the Examiner press room. Reference is made to several former employees of the Examiner at the front, notably Fred Board and "Bill" Reynolds. The letter follows:

Belgium, July 10, 1915.

Dear Bob.—Just a line letting you know how things are going at present. The other day I had a talk with Fred Board and the two Wyatt boys. They have come through so far all right, and so have I, and I think we will spend another winter at the same game. Fred is looking fine. We had a chat about the old times around the shop, and hope to be able to see the boys again. Fred has had a lot of experiences he never will forget, and so have I. They have made us skidoo once or twice, but a person gets used to it. We have had eight or nine killed and five or six wounded. There are a lot of new faces in the battery now to what there were when we started from Cobourg; but all the other boys are well. We are going for a week's holidays soon, to England—some have gone already. The weather at present is just like fall, very cool at night. The crops are nearly ready to cut. I was out for a walk the other night and ran across Bill Reynolds, who used to work upstairs in the job-room (Examiner). He is with the infantry, but didn't have time to ask what he was attached to. He is the same old Bill.

ENJOYABLE OUTING TO JUBILEE POINT

By the Employees of the Lock Works on Saturday Afternoon—225 Excursionists.

The Peterborough Lock Works' picnic on Saturday afternoon to Jubilee Point, on the Stoney Lake, was one of the most successful ever held by this concern. About two hundred and twenty-five excursionists took in the outing, and all report a very happy time. Dancing was enjoyed on board, Mr. Jack Davis providing very delightful music for the same. A band was also in attendance, rendering musical numbers that were much enjoyed. At Jubilee Point a baseball match between teams composed of employees was played and resulted in a tie. The batteries for the opposing teams were Jas. McLeod and Bill Liddell, and Jack Davis and Preston Grange. The sail home on a beautiful moonlit night, such as Saturday was, made the trip very enjoyable. One and all were loud in their praises of the splendid arrangements of the committee of management. The latter is indebted to the company for a donation of $25 to help in the entertainment of the employees, and to the manager for a box of cigars.

NO DANGER OF LOCAL BOATS OVERTURNING

While there were few boatmen around the city to-day, those with knowledge of the local fleet, state that there is practically no possibility of any accident happening of a nature similar to that of the capsizing of the "Eastland." In the first place they are not permitted to exceed their capacities, and in addition their construction practically renders overturning impossible. This is true particularly of the most familiar boats used in these waters.

Included Schools Of The County

In the list of names published by the Examiner on Friday in connection with the Lower School examinations for entrance to the Normal School, it was stated in error that these were all pupils of the Collegiate Institute. As a matter of fact the list comprised all Peterborough county pupils who were successful, including as well as the Collegiate pupils, scholars of St. Peter's, Ennismore, Lakefield, and other schools in the county.

INSPECTORS ARE BLAMED FOR THE CHICAGO DISASTER

It is Said Catastrophe Could Have Occurred Only as a Result of Gross Structural Defects in the Ship's Hull.

SHOULD HAVE KNOWN

Special Wire to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, July 26.—That the Federal Steamship Inspection Service was in for a bad time in connection with the Eastland disaster was considered a certainty in Government circles here to-day.

Accumulating evidence that the disaster could have occurred only as a result of gross structural defects in the ship's hull, have brought forth numerous expressions of opinion that these defects certainly ought to have been known to the inspectors and the vessel's use prohibited until they were remedied.

Undue consideration of the owners' wishes was the only explanation offered for lack of action in this direction.

At the American Labor Federation headquarters, where the La Follette seamen's law has been strongly supported, the view was expressed that the Chicago catastrophe was calculated greatly to strengthen the new statute.

Asphalt In the Road Oil

Value of Road Oil is in Direct Proportion to Amount of Asphalt Which it Contains

In a recent issue of the "Engineering News," the following reference of observations are made concerning the use of road oil.

"The present practice of oiling street and road surfaces grew out of the use of crude California petroleum on Los Angeles county roads. This original experience was successful because the California petroleums have an asphaltic base, and after the lightest oils have evaporated leave the dust and earth or gravel cemented into a compact crust. Most of the crude petroleums of the east and their distillerties have paraffin bases and are lubricants rather than road binders. While their use as temporary binders and dust layers has been defended, experience has proved over and over again that any road oil is of value in direct proportion to the amount of asphalt (or bitumen in tar products) which it contains.

A complete knowledge of the character and qualities of various asphaltic and tar road oils and binders is probably beyond the comprehension of the average city or town road official, if indeed anyone is quite able to grasp it, but the essential difference between lubricatong oil to a street surface inevitably means a nasty mess, greasy and sticky with ever rain so long as the oil lasts, and a greasy, irritating dust which spots clothing and everything else, as soon as the oil dries out a bit, which does not take long on hot summer days.

Water or calcium chloride is a thousand times to be preferred to "lubricating' oil for laying dust; but if oil is decided upon, every man entrusted by the public with the care of streets and highways ought to have enough technical knowledge to be able to distinguish between lubricating oil and road oil."

The oil that has been used in Peterborough during the present season is represented to contain from forty-seven to fifty-four per cent. of asphaltic content. City Engineer Parsons has frequently emphasized the necessity of securing a brand of oil containing a liberal amount of asphalt. The oil used is a similar product to that from which asphalt is obtained.

SERGT, JAS McGRATH, East City boy, who is now in England with the 39th Battalion, training at Shorncliffe. Sergt. McGrath is one of the well known non-coms. of the 57th Regiment.

LIEUT. W. H. MUNRO, manager of the Peterborough Light and Power Co. and the Peterborough Radial Railway, and is now in England on his way to the front. He has a special appointment under General Carson in regard to the mechanical transport facilities.

LEELANAW IS SUNK BY SUB

American Boat, Owned by a New York Firm and Bound From Archangel to Belfast Is Sunk Off Scottish Coast.

CARRIED CARGO OF FLAX

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, ENG., July 26.—The American steamer Leelanaw, from Archangel, Russia, to Belfast, Ireland, has been sunk by a German submarine off the coast of Scotland, but the crew has reached Kirkwall safely.

The Leelanaw was a steel screw steamer. She displaced 1,924 tons. She was 280 feet long and had a 36.5 foot beam.

The Leelanaw was under American registry from the port of San Francisco. Lloyd's shipping register lists her captain as Myers. She was owned by the Harby Steamship Co. of New York. She had delivered a cargo of cotton to Archangel, Russia, and was en route from Archangel to Belfast when last reported with a cargo of 1,000 tons of flax.

NEW YORK, July 26.—The United States steamer Leelanaw was flying the American flag when sunk, according to agents for the ship.

Despatches state that the crew, a considerable number of whom are Americans, and Captain Delt, were landed in their own boats. Despatches did not state whether a warning was given before the vessel was sunk. The explosion took place shortly after daylight.

The news of the torpedoing of the Leelanaw caused a short period of excitement bordering on demoralization in the stock Exchange.

Later despatches indicated that the Leelanaw was stopped and that when the German commander ascertained she carried flax, he declared the cargo contraband, and ordered the crew to take to the boats.

The ship was torpedoed after the crew had pulled away.

Since the breaking up of the ice in the White Sea made it possible for ships to enter Archangel, German submarines have been lurking off the Orkney Islands and the northwest coast of Scotland, lying in wait for ships passing to and from Russia's only open port in the West.

A number of Russian and British ships, as well as several of Scandinavian registry that were carrying contraband, have been sunk in the vicinity of Kirkwall.

CHICAGO, July 26. — The news that the American ship Leelanaw was torpedoed, caused a slump in the grain market to-day. Wheat lost from 1½ to 2¼ cents per bushel, while corn and oats slumped badly. The drop came after firm and higher opening in all grains.

Not a New Crisis.

LONDON, Eng., July 26.—If official reports bear out the statement that the German submarine commander searched and warned the Leelanaw's Captain, it is not thought probable that the attack on Leelanaw will precipitate a crisis between the United States and Germany.

The dispatches said the submarine commander first assured himself that the steamer carried contraband of war, and then gave the crew time to take to their boats. In diplomatic circles here it was declared the Leelanaw incident therefore becomes almost identical with that of the American bark "William P. Pyre," sunk by a German commerce raider, and is not of the same character as the attack on the Lusitania, the repetition of which America has warned Germany would be considered as "deliberately unfriendly."

The Leelanaw was enroute from Archangel to Belfast after discharging a cargo of cotton at the Russian port. She accepted a cargo of flax from Archangel to Belfast. Flax was declared contraband of war by the German Government in April. For that reason the German submarine commander apparently was acting within his rights in destroying the cargo, but overstepped the bounds of international law in sinking a steamer and setting the crew adrift in open boats.

HAVE DONATED MACHINE GUN

Legal Firm of Peck, Kerr and McElderry Subscribe Price of One, to be Turned Over to Canadian Forces.

THE FIRST LOCAL GIFT

During the past week various public bodies and private citizens have donated to the Canadian Government the wherewithal to purchase machine guns for the Canadian forces. It remained for the legal firm of Peck, Kerr and McElderry to blaze the way for Peterborough in this respect, the three members having united in donating $750 to the Government for the purchase of a machine gun. In many ways have the firm, individually and collectively, done their part in helping to fight the Empire's battle since the war broke out, and their latest action will be warmly commended. One machine gun is said to be the equivalent of fifty men at the front.

Peterborough's first machine gun by their generous and patriotic action, is now assured, and it is expected that this splendid gift will be followed by similar donations from other firms and local bodies.

Accompanying the cheque was the following letter:

The Honourable The Minister of Militia,

Militia Department, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure herewith in enclosing you our firm cheque for $750.00 for the purchase of a machine gun for use by the Canadian Overseas Forces.

We would like to have this particular gun added to the equipment of soldiers from Peterborough, but leave it entirely in the discretion of the Militia Department.

Yours very truly,
(Sgd.) Peck, Kerr & McElderry.

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY SHOCKS PORT HOPE

Edward Tait, Well Known Salvationist, in Moment of Insanity Kills His Twelve Year Old Daughter With an Axe.

SPARED HIS WIFE

PORT HOPE, July 26.—In a fit of mad frenzy, Edward Tait, drummer in the local Salvation Army, and a well known local citizen, attacked his twelve year old daughter Elsie with an axe this morning and killed her by severing her juglar vein. Port Hope is shocked by the tragedy.

Tait attended all the services of the Salvation Army yesterday, apparently in his usual health and spirits and nothing abnormal in his condition was noticed when he retired last evening. Early this morning several cats commenced to howl in the yard of the Tait home, and unable to sleep, Tait went out and chased them away. His own cat was amongst them and picking the feline up he started to carry the animal into the house. Resenting the treatment, the cat scratched the back of Tait's hand deeply, whereupon the man carried it into the shed and chopped off its head with an axe. Still carrying the axe, Tait returned into the house, and going into the room where his little daughter was sleeping slashed her over the neck with the axe, inflicting fatal injuries. He then told his wife to get out of the house before he did any more damage. Mrs. Tait gave the alarm and Tait was arrested and taken to Cobourg, charged with murder.

Tait and his family were very well known in the town. He had been a member of the Salvation Army for a long time.

A SISTER OF TWO LOCAL MEN AMONG VICTIMS

Mrs. John Kirkwood Was Among Those Who Lost Their Lives on the Eastland—Was Sister of Messrs. George and Howard Macdonald of This City.

WILL ATTEND FUNERAL

Two local men to be bereaved as a result of the "Eastland" disaster in Chicago are Mr. George A. Macdonald, 565 Homewood Avenue, and Mr. Howard Macdonald of the same address. Last evening they received word that their sister, Mrs. John Kirkwood, was among those who lost their lives when the big excursion boat turned turtle. Both Mr. and Mrs. George Macdonald will leave this evening for Chicago, where they will attend the funeral, which will take place on Wednesday. Mrs. Kirkwood had numerous friends in the city, having visited here on various occasions. Mr. A. Kerr, 536 Downie street, is an uncle of the deceased. The late Mrs. Kirkwood leaves a husband to mourn her loss. Only on Friday last Mr. Macdonald received a letter from the deceased in which she stated she was in good health and anticipated a visit to Peterborough at an early date.

REGULAR MEETING OF 57TH CHAPTER

Will Forward 50 Pairs of Socks to Shorncliffe.

The monthly meeting of the 57th Regt. Chapter, I.O.D.E. was held in the recreation room at the armouries, Mrs. Mills, 1st Vice-Regent, was in the chair.

The Knitting committee reported 100 pair of socks sent to the Red Cross Society and 81 pairs on hand. It was decided to send 50 pairs to Lt.-Col. Clegg at Shorncliffe to be distributed by him as needed.

The Visiting committee reported 21 visits during the month.

It was resolved to send a vote of thanks to Major and Mrs. Eastwood for their kindness in loaning their grounds for the garden party last month.

Votes of thanks were also moved to Mr. J. M. Greene, for the use of a graphonola at the garden party, and also to Mr. A. W. Turner for the loan of the fish pond.

The meeting adjourned till September.

REORGANIZATION OF ENGINEERING STAFF

Committee Appointed For Purpose Has About Completed Its Duties

For some weeks past a committee composed of members of the City Council has had under consideration the reorganization of the city engineering department. The committee has met from time to time and have about completed their duties. It is understood that Mr. T. A. S. Hay, Assistant City Engineer, will be retained, also Mr. T. Q. Quartermaine. Of the younger members of the office force, namely, Eldred Cumberland and Angus Richardson, one will probably be dispensed with. It is also the intention of the committee to recommend that a stenographer be employed. The committee will probably present their report at the next meeting of the City Council, which will be held on the first Monday in August.

DROVE AUTO PAST A STREET CAR AT REST

Fine of Five Dollars Although Accused Did Not Remember the Infraction.

Dr. Holloway was fined five dollars in the Police Court this morning for driving his car past a street car, in which Police Constable McArthur was a passenger, while it was standing at the corner of George and Charlotte Streets.

P. C. McArthur said that the Jackson Park car had stopped at the corner of Charlotte and George Streets. Two passengers were boarding it. The automobile came east on Charlotte Street and turned north on George Street. The street car had just pulled up and passengers were transferring from the north bound George Street car. They were getting on the Jackson Park car on the south side. Witness was not on duty, but was getting off the Jackson Park car. The auto did not stop at all.

Dr. Holloway said he had no recollection of the occasion whatever. Witness agreed 8702 was his car number. P. C. McArthur said he knew the Doctor. There was another man with him in the car.

The Doctor was informing His Worship that this was the first time that he had appeared for breaking the traffic law during four years' driving.

"Five dollars, Doctor," spoke His Worship, who threw in a kindly smile akin to that of a dentist's when he says, "Now this won't hurt you."

AUSTRALIA LOOKING TO CANADA

Australia still has hopes that Canada will carry out the Laurier naval policy, and provide a navy that will co-operate with the Australian fleet, says the Montreal Herald. It will be remembered that at the last Imperial Conference, Australia was a party to such an arrangement, and has loyally carried out her agreement. New Zealand has since shown approval of this scheme, but Canada has neither repealed the Laurier Naval Act, nor put into effect the purposes of that Act. Mr. Fisher, the Australian Premier, after a recent visit to New Zealand, said:

The vision of the Australian Government is not limited to New Zealand. We hope to co-operate also with Canada and with South Africa in matters of mutual interest. There is a growing feeling in New Zealand that the basic principle of His Majesty's Australian Fleet is a sound one; the people there feel that it is their duty to provide for the defence of their country directly in ships and men, under practically the same conditions as exist in Australia to-day.. Such a fleet, acting in co-operation with that of Australia, would in no way affect the autonomy of the Dominion. We should be able to train New Zealand's proportion of naval cadets as well as their proportion of military cadets; and in any reciprocal arrangement in regard to naval defence, talent will count, and not the size of the country.

Commenting on this, that well-known English publication, The Navy, which is the organ of the Navy League, says: "Mr. Fisher's suggestion may perhaps become a verity. A grand Colonial Fleet would indeed be a priceless possession for the Empire." This is exactly what Sir Wilfrid Laurier has contended all along. Australia has brilliantly proved the correctness of the principle.

NOT SO DISCOURAGING.

An English writer on the war in the July "Fortnightly," makes the statement that "so far the Germans have won rather than the Allies," which gives the New York Evening Post viewing from an unprejudiced point an opportunity to declare that "a cool estimate of the actual forces pitted against each other is not so discouraging for the Allies as the present superficial military situation might seem" The Post remarks that the ultimate resources belong to the Allies and that "if determination is not lacking—as there is not the slightest evidence that it is—they will be the lords of their fate."

Here are some of the reasons which the New York paper gives why the Allies should lose no jot of heart or hope, even assuming that Warsaw will soon fall and that the Russians will be driven out of nearly all of Poland:

One reason may be seen in the attitude of the German government itself. It is unquestionably ready for peace. And it would accept a peace which, from the German point of view, would be on very reasonable terms. These, of course, have nowhere been formulated. Yet the imitations of their general nature have been too thick and too authoritative to admit of much doubt that if, for example, Germany could end the war to-morrow by going back to the status quo ante, she would jump at the chance. Now, what does this signify in a military sense? The interference is unavoidable that the Germans no longer think themselves able to impose their will upon Europe. Great and wonderful as has been their display of fighting power, they are not deceived by it into thinking that they can change the map of Europe at their leisure. They know what a terrible price they have already paid. Moreover, the greater their exertion of military strength, the clearer the evidence of its real failure. This is not meant as a paradox. The whole German theory of the war was that it was to be short. By a series of swift and bloody strokes, Germany was quickly to garner the advantages of her long years of preparation. Paris was surely to be taken last September. By January, German was able to be in a position to dictate peace. But here we are at the end of July, with the prospect of the war going over another winter. Germany may be invincible, but her plans of last year have broken down, and her people know it.

And if, from the fluctuating battle-lines, west, north, and south, we look to the large and steady elements of strength on the part of the allies, we may well understand how they believe that time is fighting on their side, and that all they have to do is to set their teeth and see the thing through. First of all comes the great fact of their having absolute control of the sea. From it German commerce has been swept clean. The German navy for offensive purposes—excepting submarines, and even they have been able barely to gnaw at the real sea-power of England—is as if it did not exist. And this hampering of Germany, heightened by the spectacle of her colonies falling one after another, is likely to be even more severe and telling as the months go by. A nation whose whole industrial life has been for years shaped for over-seas commerce cannot be cut off from the ocean indefinitely without receiving vital injuries. And the Dardanelles campaign is not to be thought of as an isolated venture. It is, in the first place, one evidence more of what sea-power means, and it is also a far-sighted movement, which, if pushed to success, may prove far more important than any battle fought in Galicia or in France. With Constantinople captured, Russia free to come and go in the Black Sea and the Mediterranean, and all the Balkan states wheeling into line with the allies, the German cause would have suffered a fatal blow. In that case, the allies, too, would have their giant pincers, closing upon Germany from the North Sea and from the Bosphorus.

Some of the writers in Old Country publications, as The Free Press, has frequently maintained, seem to have completely lost a proper sense of proportion and perspective. As Hilaire Belloc has stated, the man who takes an optimistic view is regarded as unpopular by those Jeremiahs who persist in closing their eyes to essential facts and magnifying everything that is unfavourable.—Ottawa Free Press.

IS JAPAN PREPARING?

There are signs that Japan is preparing to take a more vigorous part in the war than she has to date, says the London Advertizer. Travellers recently returned from Nippon report unusual military and naval activity. It is stated that two army corps of picked regiments are ready for instant service, and that the crack ships of the royal navy are being fixed up for a long voyage. As good feeling now prevails between Japan and China, it must be that the warlike preparations on such a large scale are preliminary to taking a hand in the fighting in Europe.

Because since the capture of Kiau-Chow the Japanese have done nothing, we are inclined to forget that they are still our allies, ready by agreement to leap into the main zone of the conflict if necessary. And it may be that the hour for that is at hand. Russia is hard pressed, and at least one of the Balkan states is leaning strongly towards the Germanic alliance. The entrance of Japan with her splendidly-organized legions, just at this moment, would tend to swing the tide of war in the east strongly in favour of the Allies. By way of the Trans-Siberian Railway, the Mikado's armies in not more than six weeks' time could be fighting in Poland, and two months from a given date would see them in the trenches of the Dardanelles.

Japan has a direct and vital interest in the success of the Allies. Should Germany win, one of the first things she would do would be to take revenge for the seizure of her great Chinese colony and trade. It is Japan's intention to exercise a beneficient domination of the Far East, and this would be a difficult task if Germany were to get a fresh foothold. Japan knows that the surest way to keep Germany away from the Far East is to crush her now. So before many weeks we may see the little brown fighters lining up with the Muscovites in Poland or with the Allies on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

"THESE VILE GUNS."

Hans Otto Schultze, of Chicago, has written a letter imploring Americans not to make munitions of war for the Allies. Hans deplores the horrors of war and of modern death-dealing instruments, the crippled and silent bodies, and the sorrow and grief of mothers and sisters. If Hans were writing on behalf of some peaceful, harmless nation — say Belgium — he would find a great deal of sympathy with his views. It is indeed a deplorable and horrible thing that this useful, intelligent, benevolent liittle nation has been overrun by gunmen and white-slavers armed with all the modern instruments of murder which horrify Hans. It is a terrible thing that peaceful Belgian homes have been invaded by blackguards such as would be lynched in Chicago. The blackguards have filled these Belgian homes with physical filth and moral filth. It would be a splendid thing to deprive them of the guns and infernal machines with which they accomplish their hellish deeds.

But, strange to say, Hans seems to be horrified, not at the desecration of Belgian homes and the filthy insults to Belgian women, but by the fact that some of the gunmen and white slavers are being killed by modern weapons. It seems that Belgium and the allies of Belgium have actually got hold of some of these guns which Germans used to coerce women and children in Belgium. And do you know, some of these poor gunmen and white-slavers have been wounded and killed with weapons not unlike those which Germany has been piling up for years, in order to make all Europe obey the gunmen and the white-slavers.

And the crime of the Americans who are making these guns to be used against the gunmen. Think of that. It is true that the Americans do not like gunmen and white-slavers and insulters of women. Sometimes they lynch them. But Hans Otto Schultze thinks that the American conscience will be troubled and the American heart will be heavy because of guns supplied to protect the women and children of Europe from the gunmen and white-slavers of Germany.

Hans apparently sees nothing wrong in Germany piling up instruments of murder for years, with the design of terrifying and dominating Europe. But for the peaceful, decent people of Europe to buy guns to defend their own liberties and the honour of their women from drunken, lustful bullies—that seems to horrify our Chicago friend. We like his moral fervor. But is he not shooting at the wrong mark? —Toronto Star.

THERE'S NO FALSE DELICACY ABOUT ROUMANIA'S STAND

There are many reasons to believe that Great Britain's bid for Roumanian support will be successful. The manifest detiny of the extra $250,000,000 Mr. Asquith asked the British Parliament for is to put Roumania in a position to "back the right horse." For months Roumania has been as full of German spies and diplomatic agents as the other regions are full of imps. They are said to have been lavish in the distribution of bribes, literature, promises and lies. There is no false delicacy about Roumania's position. Like Mr. Bunthorne who, on the advice of his solicitor, put himself up to be raffled for, Roumania has publicly offered herself to the highest bidder, but naturally and prudently wants a substantial deposit as a guarantee of good faith and as an assurance that the buyer is in a position to carry out his share of the bargain. For absolute frankness the attitude of the Roumanian Government is beyond praise. Dr. E. J. Dillon says it may be summarily stated as follows: "The choice between belligerency and neutrality must be determined solely by the balance of territorial advantages which is offered by each. We cannot afford to repeat the mistake we made at the time of the Russo-Turkish war, when, in return for heavy sacrifices of blood and money, we were bereft of one of our most fertile provinces and were given a barren tract of land with indefensible frontiers and the undying enmity of its Bulgarian owners. This time there must be advantageous terms clearly specified, adequately guaranteed, and unless they outweigh those we can obtain from the other side in return for mere inaction, we shall feel it our duty to reject them."

If it be true, and true it probably is, that Germany has presented an ultimatum to the Roumanian Government demanding the right to send arms and ammunition to Turkey through Roumania, the time for mere inaction has gone. It is no longer a question of belligerency or neutrality, it is a question as to with which side Roumania will cast in its lot. Both the principal members of the Government and the leaders of the Opposition have declared voluntarily that Roumania would act with the Allies against Austria and Germany and were only waiting for Italy to set the example. What they have been waiting for since Italy sailed in, is matter for conjecture. It is not likely, however, to be due to any doubts as to where the interests of the country lie. If Roumania joins the Allies it will, of course, incur the undying enmity of Germany, but if it joins with Austro-Germany it will incur the undying friendship of Germany, which is much more dangerous. The Austro-Hungarian Empire is just now enjoying the undying friendship of its traditional enemy, Prussia, and already Prussia evidently regards Austria and Hungary as German States. When the Kaiser honoured Francis Joseph by bestowing upon him the privilege and responsibility of starting the present war and promised him all the Balkan territory he fancied, the old Emperor, had he not been in his dotage would have said: "Timeo Manaos et dona ferentes." But directly he smelt the cheese he walked into the trap. The result is, that should Austria-Hungary miraculously have the misfortune to win in the present war, the Germanization of the Empire will follow almost immediately. No country in the world is so generous as Germany in giving away territory that does not belong to her. The Frankfurter Zeitung says: "The national aspirations of the Roumanians seem compatible with the existence and the security of the Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. But our friends and allies must not take it ill if we offer frankly our opinion, seeing that Germany also is shedding her blood for this policy. Well, we hold that the German Government should play the part of counsellor and intermediary. Vast and surprising concessions were held out to Italy. And there is no valid reason why equal and just concessions should not be made to Roumania." Again the trap was well baited. There are more than three million Roumanians in Hungary. Bosnia and Herzegovina and Germany could well afford to let the Dual Monarchy lose three million Slavs while she absorbs that part of the monarchy which is under German domination. Nearly the whole Empire is infested with Germans. The Hapsburgs never forget that they are Germans. There are too many German settlements in Roumania; and although the Roumanians of the better class, the only ones who take the slightest interest in politics, are quite willing to extend their boundaries, so as to include the Roumanians now in Hungary, they would rather do it without extending the sphere of German influence.

Roumania has to come to a quick decision and probably has already decided in favour of joining with the Allies. Within a very few days Roumania should be prepared to resist any attempt by Germany to violate its neutrality by sending ammunition across the country to Constantinople. The situation will also give Bulgaria something to think about. It is the hour of Roumania's opportunity and if she does not open the door to it now, it is not likely to come again. It is, at any rate, a critical time for all the Balkan States.—Montreal Herald.

GERMAN SUBMARINE WARFARE BEEN VIGOROUSLY RENEWED

LONDON, July 26.—After several days of inactivity the German submarine war has been renewed. Reports received here to-day tell of the sinking of one British, one French and one Russian steamship, by submarines, with the loss of four killed aboard the British ship. Four trawlers were also sent to the bottom by the German undersea craft and two other British trawlers were lost, one being blown up by a floating mine. On the trawlers eleven were drowned, five are missing and two were injured.

FOUR BRITISH KILLED

The British steamer Firth of 405 tons, commanded by Captain W. Wright and owned by C. B. Davidson & Co., bound from France to Scotland, was torpedoed to-day by a German submarine in the North Sea. Six of the crew were landed at Lowestoft. They reported that four of the crew had been killed.

The Russian steamer Rubicona, of 3,644 tons, operated by the Russia-American Line, was torpedoed and sunk by a submarine near Fair Isle. Captain I. Luce and the crew of 29 were landed at Kirkwall. The Rubicona formerly was a British trader, registered under the name Sotrudnik.

The French steamer Danae was attacked by two German submarines and sunk 80 miles northwest of Cape Wrath on Friday. The crew was saved and according to a despatch to Lloyds is being brought to Liverpool.

The trawler Persens, which struck a floating mine in the North Sea on Saturday, suffered the heaviest loss of lives. The Grimsby despatch reporting the disaster, says ten of the crew were lost, three of the bodies being landed at Grimsby. The others have not yet been recovered.

The loss of the trawler Briton does not disclose the manner of destruction. The report, which comes from Aberdeen, says the skipper was killed, five of the crew are missing, and are believed to have been drowned and two of the crew were injured and taken to the Lowestoft hospital.

German submarines bombarded and sank in the North Sea four other trawlers, the Henry Charles, Kathleen, Activity and Prosper, all from Lowestoft. Their crews were landed in safety.

The crews of the trawlers state that one of the underwater craft was sunk by means of bombs and guns fired from the trawlers.

Convict's Statement Is Discredited

ALBANY, N.Y., July 26.—Governor Whitman heard directly from Joseph Murphy, a Sing Sing convict, his story of how he overheard Jack Rose, "Bridgey" Webber, and Harry Vallon plot in the Tombs to place the blame for the murder of Herman Rosenthal on Charles Becker.

After a two hours' conference the Governor announced that the story Murphy told was to his mind untrue. Murphy admitted, the Governor said, that he had talked with Becker in the death house at Sing Sing Prison on the evening of June 20 and that on the following day Murphy had written to Bourke Cockran, informing him of overbearing the alleged "frame up."

The guards who had permitted Murphy to enter the death cell would be dismissed Monday, the Governor said, after verifying the fact that Murphy had talked with Becker by communicating with Warden Osborne of Sing Sing. Murphy gained admittance to the death cell by telling the guards he was a member of the Mutual Welfare League and offering to sing for the condemned men, the Governor said.

Another evidence of the activity in the case of former Police Lieut. Becker was a visit to the District Attorney's office of Jack Rose. He was accompanied by his lawyer, Bernard Sandler, and the pair immediately went into conference with District Attorney Perkins.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

On the Jungfrau

Story of a Slip of the Foot In a Snowstorm

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

There is a little town in the Bernese Alps called Grindelwald. It is occupied both in winter and summer principally by English people who go there for relaxation. A fine hotel furnishes accommodation for these pleasure seekers, who in winter skate on the rink attached to the hotel or glide over the crusted snow on skis. At 5 o'clock an English afternoon tea is set in the hostelry which is rather a luncheon than a tea and upon which the appetites of the guests, excited by the winter sports, are satisfied, half a dozen girls in Swiss costume serving the viands.

The summer season at Grindelwald is mostly devoted to climbing. There are mountains enough in the immediate neighborhood to furnish a field for the ambition of the most expert climbers. There are the snowy summits of the Wetterhorn, the Schreckhorn, the Finsteraarhorn, the Eiger, the Monch, the Silberhorn, but the queen of the range is the Jungfrau. Every summer some of these mountains are climbed by men whose heads are sufficiently balanced to enable them to make such an ascent and whose passion lies in ascending to giddy heights.

One night a young American named Harvey arrived at Interlaken, so called from being between Lake Brienz and Lake Thun in the region of the Bernese Alps. The rain was pouring down in torrents, making his introduction to a locality noted for its beautiful scenery anything but pleasant, and, to make matters worse, he was informed that the sun had not been seen there for two weeks.

But the next morning he was awakened by a ray of sunlight and, jumping out of bed, looked through a window. High in the heaven stood the Jungfrau, white as the moon after daylight of a morning. He was first impressed with the beauty and grandeur of the sight, then was seized with a desire to stand on the mountain's summit.

Harvey was directed to go to Grindelwald, which is not far from Interlaken by the narrow gauge cogwheel railroad. From there he could go by the same transportation to Scheidegg, still farther up in the mountains, at the base of the Jungfrau peak, where he would find guides who would conduct him on the ascent.

In the train were a party of Americans and a number of English people, some going as far as Grindelwald, while others would make the trip to Scheidegg and thence down to Lauterbrunnen and back to Interlaken.

On this trip Harvey made the acquaintance of a party of Americans, among whom were several young girls. One of these girls, a Miss Ada Rutledge, proved more attractive to the young American than the Jungfrau, and, though after reaching Grindelwald he was every day about to start for the ascent, it was a month before he made his final preparations for doing so.

Meanwhile a full fledged love affair had developed between him and Miss Rutledge. Love among persons who have nothing to do but enjoy themselves grows rapidly, and with this pair it galloped. Before the thirty days had passed they had plighted their troth.

Most of those at Grindelwald were English people, and among them was a young scion of a noble house, the Hon. Mr. Chidley. Chidley was at first attentive to Miss Rutledge, but when Harvey became devoted to her withdrew from a rivalry that appeared hopeless. Whether he was much smitten with her, whether his predisposition for her had any effect on the main incident of this story, has never become known.

When Harvey finally got away from Miss Rutledge, who was holding him from his desire to rise in the air as a weight holds down a balloon, the parting was accomplished by a party of climbers that was organized to make the ascent of the Jungfrau. The party consisted of four besides the guides, two Americans and two Englishmen, one of the latter being the Hon. Mr. Chidley. They were to go up during an afternoon to a clubhouse on the side of the mountain provided by an Alpine association, where they would remain till about 2 o'clock in the morning, when they would resume their climb.

The dangers attending mountain climbing are well known. Every year a number of climbers meet with accidents and add more graves to those in the cemetery devoted to the bodies of the killed. Naturally Miss Rutledge was solicitous with reference to her lover's safety and clung to him at their parting, loath to let him go.

Most of the guests at the hotel were outside to see the starting and waved a successful climb and a safe return, Miss Rutledge's handkerchief being the last to be withdrawn. The party reached the clubhouse before sunset and helped themselves to what they needed from eatables cached there, leaving money to pay for what they used. Then they threw themselves on the straw which was provided instead of beds.

It was more than an hour before dawn when they were awakened by their guides, who prepared such a breakfast as would be expected on such an expedition, not out of keeping with the straw beds. There is no exhilaration in turning out in the cold at 2 o'clock in the morning, and the climbers started on their march in a silence that was maintained till after day had broken.

It is by no means certain when a party undertakes to make an ascent that it will succeed. In this case it gained the summit and looked over the Alpine area, its various peaks forming a surface something like that of an ocean of gigantic billows. Harvey was delighted and impulsively resolved that if he lived long enough he would climb every important peak in Switzerland.

Man proposes and God disposes. Soon was summoned to be his daily mountain ascent.

In the descent first came a guide, then an Englishman, then an American. The fourth man was Chidley, the fifth Harvey, the sixth a guide, a rope passed from the first to the last bound around the body of each person.

When the party left the summit there was scarcely a cloud in the sky. Two hours later the sun was suddenly obscured, and the party was enveloped in a dense snowstorm. Much depended upon the first guide, who selected the route. He was moving cautiously when the man behind him slipped and fell. The third man was pulled off his feet, and the weight of the two combined threw the front guide. The strain of three fallen men was too much for the rope, which was held taut by the three rear men. It broke, and the front half of the party went down into an abyss.

Chidley, who was now front man, threw himself in the opposite direction from that in which the others had fallen. He fell into a depression some thirty feet deep, covered with snow, and dangled there, not knowing what was beneath him. Harvey and the rear guide fell on the opposite side. The rope held.

That night Chidley staggered into a chalet high up on the mountain and reported that he was the only member of the climbing party left alive. He said that after hanging several hours the rope between him on one side of a sharp ridge and Harvey and the guide on the other side broke and all had fallen. Chidley expected, he said, to go down into an abyss, but had only fallen some thirty feet into soft snow. As soon as the storm ceased he had found his way to the ridge and continued the descent alone.

Chidley was piloted to Grindelwald, where he told his story. The end of the rope about his waist showed evidence of having been cut by ice or a rock edge about four feet from his body. When asked if he believed that any of the others of the party had fallen on ground that would not necessarily bring death he said that the other side of the ridge was very deep and he had no hope that they could have survived the fall.

Miss Rutledge after the first paroxysm of grief insisted on joining a rescue party to go up the mountain and hunt for the others of the party or their dead bodies. All efforts to persuade her to remain failed. The party started soon after daylight in the morning, and she was the only woman with it.

Chidley was so enervated by the terrible experience through which he had passed that he expressed himself as unable to guide the rescue party to the scene of the accident. This set them all against him, for his guidance was essential. No effort could induce him to go, and they were obliged to content themselves with his pointing out the ridge from which the fall had occurred, which could be seen from the hotel.

The party, armed with ropes, food and stimulants, started up the mountain. On approaching the clubhouse a man was seen standing before the door looking down upon them. Then another came out and stood beside him. It looked as though at least two of the missing men had been saved. Presently these two men came down to meet the party. They were Harvey and the rear guide.

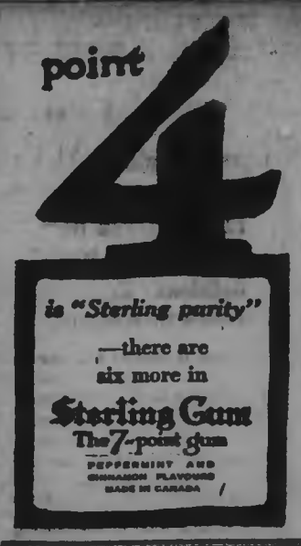
The relief felt by Miss Rutledge was too great to be concealed. She threw herself into Harvey's arms.

The men showed the end of the rope that had held them to Chidley. It had been cut with a knife. He could fray the end he carried away with him with a stone, but not the end next to Harvey. The two men had slid down several hundred feet into a pocket. The three men who had preceded them had gone much farther, but could be seen from a point near which they had fallen. Harvey and the guide, not being able to rescue them without ropes, had continued the descent and had stopped for food at the clubhouse.

The party proceeded to a lodge above the three men they sought and, having rope in plenty, assisted them up an ascent too steep and too slippery for them to climb, especially as one of the party had broken a leg. Having effected the rescue, all returned to the hotel at Grindelwald.

The Hon. Mr. Chidley saw them coming at a distance, counted them and knew that all had been saved. Moreover, they brought with them evidence that he had discovered how near he was to safety and had sacrificed two of them in his desire to insure it for himself. A train was leaving Grindelwald, and he left with it.

The reason why Harvey never climbed another mountain is apparent. In the first place, after his experience on the Jungfrau he had no desire to climb another mountain. In the second place, a Jungfrau in the person of Miss Rutledge, who became Mrs. Harvey, put her veto on his again doing anything of the kind.



Hungarian Ware.

The new Hungarian ware with its vivid colors is effective with willow furniture. This ware is made by the peasants. It is of nondescript color, not white nor yellow. The garish decorations are of flowers and garlands in pinks and greens.

CULINARY KINKS.

It is said beef may be kept for months if immersed in sour milk. The lactic acid in the milk kills the germs of putrefaction.

When boiling green peas add a lettuce leaf and a tablespoonful of sugar. They will retain their color and have a much better flavor.

Peas may be cooked in the pods. Wash them and drop them in hot salted water. When the peas cook the pods will burst open, the peas be released and the pods rise to the top of the water.

No matter how much dripping is used, fish when being fried is very apt to stick to the pan bottom. To prevent this, before using your pan put a tablespoonful of dry salt into it and rub well all over with grease proof paper.

To make sure whether bread dough has risen sufficiently for baking press the finger in the dough. If the hole remains the dough is in proper condition; if the dough rises and fills the indentation this shows that it is in a condition to continue rising.

Size of the Stars.

The latest attempt to determine the absolute diameter of a number of fixed stars is that of Signor Ferrara of Teramo, Italy. Among the stars having a measurable parallax he estimates from photometric measurements that Canopus is the largest, with a diameter fifty-one times as great as that of the sun. Other large stars and the ratios of their diameters to that of the sun are: Castor, 18; Arcturus, 10.4; Pollux, 8.7; Capella, 8; Vega, 6.8. Such determinations are, of course, highly problematical.—St. Louis Republic.

PROGRESS.

What pains and tears the slightest steps of man's progress have cost! Every hairbreadth forward has been in the agony of some soul, and humanity has reached blessing after blessing of all its vast achievement of good with bleeding feet.—Bartol.

Proposes a Moratorium In Christianity

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, July 26—A "moratorium in Christianity" is proposed by a writer in the Christliche Welt, one of the leading religious journals of Germany. The writer urges that "in a war of this character, where ruthlessness of an unparalleled type is displayed and where the very rudiments of Christianity are ignored, it would be wise, if Christianity is to be maintained, that it should not be preached or taught during the continuance of the war."

The writer, who states that he is now serving at the front, says he is convinced that war itself is an evidence that for the time being evil is uppermost in the world. "It is as though one were oblized to lay aside one's humanity and to relinquish all that distinguished a Christian man. It is mockery to ask men with blood-stained hearts to approach the table of the Lord."

The fighting in the trenches, continues the article, is of such a character that every feeling of religion, and every inclination to prayer ceases. "It is not Christian teaching that a man wants as he comes fresh from the frightful hell of the trenches. War is a phenomenon which the Church should not be able to bless. It is opposed to every essential of Christianity, and the sooner a moratorium for Christianity is declared the better.

Girls With Beautiful Faces or Graceful Figures

Canadian girls have a world-wide reputation for beauty, but, at the same time, there are girls in our cities who possess neither beauty of face nor form, because in these instances they suffer from nervousness, the result of disorders of the womanly organism. At regular intervals they suffer so much that their strength leaves them; they are so prostrated that it takes days for them to recover their strength. Of course, such periodic distress has its bad effect on the nervous system. The withered and drawn faces, the dark circles and crow's feet about the eyes, the straight figure without those curves which lend so much to feminine beauty are the unmistakable signs of womanly disorders.

When a girl becomes a woman, when a woman becomes a mother, when women pass through the changes of middle life, are the three periods of life when health and strength are most needed to withstand the pain and distress often caused by severe disturbances.

At these critical times women are best fortified by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription, an old remedy of proved worth that keeps the entire system in excellent condition.

Mothers, if your daughters are weak, lack ambition, are troubled with headaches, lassitude and are pale and sickly, Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription is just what they need to surely bring the bloom of health to their cheeks and make them strong and healthy.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help get Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription in liquid or tablet form. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and receive confidential advice from a staff of specialists, that's free. Dr. Pierce's medicines are manufactured in Canada, at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.—Adv.

Voice of The People

A REPLY TO "CONSERVATIVE"

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Sir,—Replying to "A Real Conservative" in your valuable paper, I want to say that nobody can truthfully say that politics in Peterborough are not clean, and thanks to Mr. Burnham. That is more than half the battle, at any rate in Canada, and that is what makes some few people angry, because they want to get at the spoils, and they want to get at the gilt-edge resources that belong to the people, and Mr. Burnham won't let them. They hate a straight man, for he is no good to them, and only blocks them. He has done more for Peterborough than all the members we have had put together. There has never been a member to touch him for getting things, and I think "A Real Conservative" ought to acknowledge it like a man.

Thanking you for inserting this letter, I remain, Sir,

WAR HORSES IN DEMAND ITALY IS IN THE MARKET

"Breeders and Buyers, Alike, Reap Fortunes," Says Chillicothe, Mo., Despatch—British Allies Busy.

CHILLICOTHE, Mo., July 26.—All of the carefully formulated restrictions that used to control the purchasing of horses for the armies of Europe have gone by the boards.

There was a period during the first month or two of the great conflict that the cavalry officers of the allies, detailed to the United States to secure animals for use on the fighting front made a brave effort to maintain their old standards. A horse had to weigh at least 1,300 pounds, be so many hands high, be free of blemish, both internal and external, have a showy foot action, and show evidences of high spirit. But now all that sort of thing is of the past. Anything that can weigh up to 1,000 pounds and walk on four ostensibly sound legs can get past in flying colours.

Horsemen Reap Fortunes.

Never in the history of American horse raising has there been such a demand for animals as exists today. Breeders and buyers alike are reaping fortunes. One firm located in Missouri is shipping an average of 4,000 horses per month to the Canadian border and is employing 50 buyers to scour the central and mountain western States to secure animals. High as is the price today breeders are holding back and in confidence buyers themselves will tell you that by winter time they expect to see the average price rise to $300.

The demand is becoming more pressing every week. Italy, within the last few days has contracted with an Oklahoma firm for 25,000, while Great Britain and France have lifted the lid on any previous limitations of their contracts. They will take all that are offered.

The average life of a horse at the front is said to be just ten days.

Some of the best bred horses of the west have already been sold and before snow flies many more are going.

"I bought a pacer to-day," said a young horse buyer who makes Missouri and Kansas his territory, "for $500 for the English army. That horse had a record of 2:07 on the Grand Circuit and his pedigree went back as far as you could see. If this war keeps up for another year it will take American horsemen a decade to build up the American horse to the standard it kept before this war broke out."

At $5 a Head.

"We buyers get five dollars a head for every horse we buy. There are 47 men buying horses for my firm. In all there are about 250 buyers now tripping about the West looking for stuff to feed the machine guns in Flanders. I average about eighty horses a week although I bought 200 one week not long ago. That's making a fairly good salary for me. Before this war broke out I thought that $25 a week as manager of a Missouri livery stable was great business. All of the old gang that used to follow the strings about the tricks in the summer and hang out around the yards in Chicago and St. Louis and Kansas City in the winter, are in the horse-buying game to-day and living on easy street. Why, say, I met an old pal of mine in Des Moines who took me up to the Commercial Savings bank and showed me a balance of $50,000 in his favour. He hadn't been making a real good living for the last ten years and now he's fixed for life on what he's cleared on the market in the last ten months."

"July 1st my firm made one of the biggest single shipments of horses ever put on cars. We got hold of 1,000 head on the Mexican border at $60 a head and sold them to Great Britain for about $175 each. The British Government has two horse 'resting stations' in the United States. One of these is at Boone, Iowa, and the other is at Englewood, Ill., near Chicago. We ship most of our animals to Vancouver, B.C., where the English take them over. I understand they are shipped via the Suez Canal."

"The American army is getting into the game now and I have an order for both horses and mules for the U.S.A. However, the American officers maintain the old standards and we take care that our best stock goes to Uncle Sam."

According to English figures the world's consumption of tea is steadily increasing and the demand for British tea far exceeds the supply.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

The Life of Workers In Munition Factories

Camps of Wooden Military Huts are Provided—Mid-day Meals Are Taken in the Dining Room of the Works—The Scale of Living.

"Almost every train brings them," said the ticket collector. "See those young men there with the handbags and parcels? They'll be munition workers just drafted in."

The collector was right. The young men were war munition volunteers drafted that morning from the Midlands. They had enrolled only last Monday evening and were now bound for one of the many big English munition factories working night and day.

All was ready for them at the works. 'Start in as soon as you like to-night if you can," said the booker-on in the time-keeper's office.

"But we'll need to look for lodgings," said one of the newcomers.

"That's already done," said the timekeeper. "Go across the yard there to the housing department and you'll get a list of lodgings to suit your price."

Lodgings Bureau.

The housing department of the works had lists of landladies providing rooms with board, ranging in price between 14s. and 18s. a week per head. Rooms are at a premium just now in the munition areas, but on a wage of from 3 pounds to seven pounds a week, such as many of the munition workers earn, a little extra for board money is not grudged. The housing department also had lists of houses for family men; and with such system have the munition firms gone into this question that they have bought up all available houses in the district and are building others as fast as can be done.

For munition workers drafted from the army and navy there is a special camp of wooden military huts on the heath, not far away, and here the men, though working in the shops during most of the day, become soldiers and sailors again when off duty. Nor is their camp life any the less light-hearted because of its touch with civil life. The parties of workers trooping down to the works morning, afternoon, and night to take their places in the day's three working shifts sing and whistle and joke as heartily as any of the troops busy training elsewhere.

Mid-work meals are taken in the works' dining rooms, and in the offices, at least, and elsewhere where women are employed "afternoon tea" is not an unknown luxury.

Workers' Recreations.

It depends upon the individual worker whether or not he works longer than his actual shift per day and so earns overtime, but almost every man does work overtime. Some have achieved prodigies of wakefulness and have worked days together on a job that was specially urgent. With every man working his best, there is not much energy left for pleasure when work is done, and the munition workers' pleasures are generally of the lighter kind, such as sitting at the "pictures" or reading the papers in the free library. The outdoor swimming bath has some visitors, and the river attracts many.

A good real of cheery fun and companionship is had by some of the munition workers who are "batching" — that is, living together in houses of their own. Apart from a few hours' cleaning and "washing up' done by some neighbouring house wife, the men look after themselves, entertain their friends on occasion, and generally make themselves at home.

The scale of living in the munition areas is eloquently attested by the food displays in the local shops. Little shops, for instance, whose only fish supply in time past was perhaps a few haddocks and herrings, are now able to display whole salmon. There is also a market nowadays for chickens and ducks which did not exist formerly, and for other more delicate fare.

War Loan Subscribers.

Unthinking people have taken these facts on which to base arguments about "improvidence and thriftlessness" on the part of the munition workers, quite overlooking the fact that while a man working so hard must be well fed, his appetite through such work, becmes "dainty." To could not secure seats while large crowds stood throughout the meeting, which lasted until 9.30. The Stringer sisters were at their best and rendered two most impressive selections, while other selections by a ladies' quartette and a men's duet were greatly enjoyed by the big audience.

Introducing his subject Mr. Sharpe said: I have a text to-night which is found in the Word of God, but I do not have to go to the Bible to find it. I can go to your prisons and over the prison doors I find it written. Go to your hospitals and you will find it written over the beds of 9 out of 10 patients. Go into the homes of this city and you will find it there. You can find it written on men's faces. The words are to be found in Gal. 6:7 and 8: "Be not deceived, God is not mocked, for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap."

"Oh, my friends, do you believe that text? It is one of the greatest texts in all the Bible. Infidels believe it. But there are some people in Peterborough who don't believe it.

The devil is no fool. He don't go fishing without bait. Every time you bite the devil's bait there is a hook in it. How does the devil catch the young people of Peterborough—young men. He takes them to saloon doors and says: See that bunch of fellows in there having a good time? Why don't you go in and have a good time, too? Don't be a goody-goody.

Why don't he take him around to the drunkard's home and show him the drunkard's broken hearted wife, and the destitute children?

Young girls. The devil takes them around to the ball room and shows them the good time they are having, and says, why don't you go in and have a good time with the rest of the girls? Why don't he tell them it's the ball room that helps to feed the red-light district of our cities?

I want to say to you smart fellows and smart girls. The devil's got a trap set for you."

Mr. Sharpe closed by appealing to his audience to take Christ's hand, and be reconciled to God.

He announced that there would be service every night this week, except Saturday.

He said he had a sermon up his sleeve for men and also one in his pocket for the women.

Cat's Theft of Veal Roast Ended With Police Court

One Family's Pet Was A Bold Bad Marauder in a House Further Down Hart Avenue —Hence the Divergent Opinions Regarded Cat's Death Differently.

It was inevitable that the cat nuisance in the neighbourhood of Hart Avenue would reach a climax. Here was a defendant in the Police Court this morning, who said that the night serenades were about the limit, but when the felines are so numerous that they tramp down your garden, and so bold that they carry off beefsteak and drag a roast of veal over the floor you can scarcely blame a man for being perfectly neutral. He didn't care what happened to the particular cat that found an entrance into his home and located choice cuts of meat.

So this man was "in at the death," to use a hunting term freely, of a cat that he was not especially attached to, and this morning he pleaded not guilty to having cruelly ill-treated an animal, namely one cat.

The plaintiff, another Hart Avenue resident, told her story of the cruel treatment to her cat, as follows:

Between 6.30 and 7 last Thursday evening I was on the verandah of my home. I saw a man looking very intently up into a tree. A dog was barking underneath. The man was trying to get the dog to jump up towards the branches. When this failed the man went on to the roadway and picked something up and threw it into the tree. Then he got a garden rake, which he thrust into the tree. I saw a cat fall on to the ground, where it hunched its back in front of the dog. Just then I called to my son and daughter, and as I did so I saw the man strike the cat with the rake. Next I saw it a few feet away on the road, stunned and bleeding from a wound under an eye. I don't know whether the dog touched the cat or not. I called my husband, who got a box and carried the cat home. It had been with us about 18 months. It had no particular value, except that it was a pet. We had to have it destroyed afterwards. The tree was on the defendant's property, but the branches come over the roadway.

The plaintiff's son, next called, said he was looking out of a window when the affair happened, and was an eye-witness to the tragedy. After it had been struck by the man witness picked the cat up but it bit him.

"It didn't know friend from foe then," remarked His Worship.

Plaintiff's daughter stated that after the blow had been struck defendant's wife had told her to keep the cat chained up.

Depends on Whose Ox is Gored.

Defendant opened his story with, "The cat was in the habit of coming into our woodshed, sir."

Catch any old mouse?

Yes, but there's a mouse, sir. The first start she was 5 a.m., Tuesday. The missus was going away, and she cooked a roast of veal for me and my daughter. It was in the oven of the stove in the woodshed. When I came down the cat had dragged the roast of veal out on to the floor, and was eating it.

Any cats in your neighbourhood?

I've seen six or seven at a time in my garden tramping it down, sir.

Thursday night I came home and saw the cat in the tree. I got a hay rake and pushed the cat out of the tree. It fell on to the ground and the dog got at it. He gave it a good shake. It couldn't run after that. There are so many cats around there people must dump them around there.

Was this the same cat that got the meat?

Yes, sir.

Did you tell the owners what it had done?

No, I didn't know who owned it.

Defendant's wife said she had left the oven door open about an inch. She did not see it at this meat, but she saw it Thursday afternoon at some beefsteak. Witness chased the cat and saw it go up the tree in question, with the dog close at its heels.

Defendant's daughter revised previous estimates of the feline population of that neighbourhood by saying that there were 30 of them around there. Defendant did not own the dog. It was the collie formerly owned by the late caretaker of the Bank of Montreal.

Magistrate Dumble remarked that it was a question as to what Christian charity should go in regard to enduring cats.

There was no evidence of ill-treatment within the meaning of the Act, that is continued and malicious cruelty.

New Jewelry Store

Frank Clarke Resumes Business at 170 Charlotte Street—Valuable Stock and Handsome Store Fittings.

The distinction of establishing the first jewelry store on Charlotte street has fallen to Mr. Frank Clarke, one of our well-known and enterprising citizens.

After a three years' rest Mr. Clarke comes back to business again with the same resourceful spirit as formerly. He was fortunate in securing a lease of the premises, No. 170 Charlotte Street, a few doors from George Street, where he has remodelled the interior in a very attractive manner.

The fittings are of the Colonial design, with massive ornamental oak pillars, shelving, drawers and cases. Beautiful British plate glass mirrors, and brilliant electric show-case lights with coloured glass effects, adds adornment to the interior. Some idea of the elaborate character of these store fittings may be formed when it is known that their original cost was nearly $3,000.

In the store Mr. Clarke has assembled collections from some of the world's best treasure houses. Diamonds and precious stones with settings designed in platinum and gold, and executed with all the skill of the modern craftsman. Exquisite specimens of the goldsmith's and silversmith's art are shown. Watches are here from the foremost horologists of the world.

Mr. Clarke is making a specialty of the "Omega" watches and Swiss watches, which rank high in public favour. A large assortment of fine presentation clocks and mantel timepieces; pearl bracelets and watches. Cut glass from the best American makers and fancy china and other allied wares. These all bear that distinction of newness and style which is synonymous with the very latest creations in their line.

Novelties and brass goods, gifts for our soldiers abroad, personally picked up for their attractiveness and newness. Fine sterling silverware and silverplate servers, silverplated cutlery, cake and fruit baskets, centre pieces, sterling silver tea sets, etc.

The public will also note the new and attractive window signs, which read as follows: "Goldsmith and Diamond Merchant; Watchmaker and Engraver; Issuer of Marriage Licenses," etc.

Mr. Clarke opens his new store with every promise of encouragement. His former connection with the public, and his present up-to-date establishment will no doubt have their influence in establishing his new business.

GENEROUS OFFER TO MEN WHO ENLIST

The Sandford Manufacturing Co., of Hamilton, one of the big clothing concerns of Canada, has made a patriotic offer to all its employees who enlist. The company offers to pay the difference between the Government pay to soldiers and the company's wages to the employees who go to the front. This offer is extended to all the retail branch stores, and includes the Oak Hall store in Peterborough.

GERMANS LOSE HEAVILY IN WARSAW DRIVE

PETROGRAD, July 26.—The Austro German forces are suffering heavy losses on all three lines of their drive against Warsaw.

In the south von Mackensen has again been compelled to change the front. He is now directing his main move against a position near Trevaka, twenty miles west of Cholm. Every step costs him dear. He found it necessary to exercise extreme caution and is literally feeling his way in the hope of finding a weak spot where he may be able to catch the Russians unprepared.

In the north, on the Narew, severe casualties have been inflicted on the Germans.

In Central Poland the Russian line from Blonie, about eighteen to twenty miles in front of Warsaw, to Ivangorod is very strongly entrenched.

Three Great Attacks.

London, July 24.—The Austrians and Germans are pushing with undiminished energy their three great attacks against the Russian armies defending Warsaw, and at some point report that progress has been made.

They are operating, however, through country which the retiring troops have laid waste, and in which the roads are little suited for the movement of the heavy artillery, which is necessary for the bombardment of the great fortresses that bar their way.

It is not expected, therefore, that decisive actions on any of the fronts will be fought for a few days yet, although the battle between the Vistula and the Bug Rivers, where the German Field Marshal von Mackensen's army is advancing toward the Lubin-Cholm railroad, has about reached a climax. Here, according to the German official communication issued this afternoon, the Germans have succeeded in breaking the obstinate resistance of the Russians at several points and forced them to retreat.

ussians Use the Bayonet.

Petrograd, July 24—At Krasnostav, 34 miles south of Lublin, there occurred an engagement at close quarters which was unusually desperate and deadly. The Russians awaited their attacking opponents and resisted them with the bayonet. They had assembled strong reserves, and the Germans and Austrians had to expend the greatest efforts to overcome them. It was necessary literally to throw the Russians from their trenches.

The lack of good roads in Poland presents an especially unfavourable aspect from the standpoint of the invaders. Deep sand makes the movements even of infantry slow, while from ten to twelve teams of horses must be utilized to draw heavy guns.

Bitter rearguard conflicts mark the slow retirement of the Russians in south Poland. They give way only one step at a time, thus delaying although not preventing, the Austro-German advance.

A bath-room towel rack made of pipe to be connected with the hot water system, has been invented to insure a supply of warm and dry towels.

HOW IT FEELS TO BE IN THE TRENCHES

Only Two Kinds of "Fearless Men" Writes Newspaper Man Who Has Been There—They are Savages and Idiots.

(By E. Richard Schayer.)

NORTHERN FRANCE, July 22.—Show me a man who "doesn't know what fear is" and I'll show you an absolute savage or an absolute fool. For seven months I have been in the thick of the campaigns in Northern France and Flanders. I have seen every branch of the British army, and many of the French, going into action, in action, and after action. Aside from personal observations I have talked with thousands, both at the front and in hospitals who know what it is to be under fiercest fire, and I repeat that there are only two kinds of "fearless" men—savages and idiots.

The first of these is best represented in those little brown devils of the Empire's polyglot host, the Ghurkas. These savage hillmen of Northern India half Hindu and half Mongolian, are truly men without fear.

Their primitive minds seem incapable of grasping the idea that bursting shells and whining bullets are something to be afraid of. In general they are so obsessed with the singleness of their purpose, which is to be permitted to rush upon the enemy and have a good, old-fashioned murder party, that the prospect of death or disablement arriving before their pleasant little plan has matured doesn't seem to get home.

Fearless Man an Idiot.

But in all the months I have been out here I have only seen one white man who lived up to the description of our hero friends of fiction and "didn't know what fear is."

This was a French peasant, who, under tremendous shell fire, calmly set upon a dead artillery horse with his carving knife and turned the shattered beast into steaks and roasts. Whenever a shell burst uncomfortably near him the "fearless" peasant would look up from his work with an expression of amiable annoyance. We learned afterward he was the "village idiot," and exempt from military service because of his mental affliction.

In the "good old days" of our Civil War and even in more recent times warfare offered something of pomp and display and soul-stirring appurtenances, but in this greatest of conflicts things are very different. There are no gorgeous uniforms and imposing arrays of multi-coloured troops, no brass bands to send the blood bounding, no tattered colours to follow. When one goes out of a trench nowadays to charge the enemy's lines it is with the consciousness that the odds are something like two to one against him.

The only wonder is that they can get men to fight at all under these sorbid, hideous and hopeless conditions.

You hear nothing of the stories of German cowardice from the mouths of the Tommies who have fought them all these months. Any British or French soldier who has been at the front any length of time will tell you the Germans fight as bravely, individually and collectively, as any other people.

There are four regular occasions in the system of trench warfare on the western front when a man is in imminent danger. The first of these is when coming into the trenches to relieve troops; the send, when the enemy is bombarding the trenches and making an assault; the third is when ordered forward on a charge, and the fourth when leaving the trenches to retire to a rest-camp for a few days. Of the four, the time of most danger, is of course, the charge, and yet it is then that the average soldier feels the least fear.

Coming down to the trenches in the dead of night is always a nerve-racking business. One never knows whether the enemy is aware of the movement and at what minute the sky will blaze with a hundred star-bombs, illuminating the whole plain and making one's detachment a magnificent target for point-blank shrapnel and machine-gun fire.

When Shelling Begins.

When the German guns begin shelling the trenches in preparation for a great assault, the British soldier has a bad time of it. Cowering in dug-out and under shelving trench walls, he must wait, helplessly, until ordered to line the parapet and begin pouring his rifle fire upon the advancing ranks of the enemy. It is this feeling of absolute helplessness, with the earth being torn and shattered on every side, that makes one's heart gripe with terror.

It is then that men show the stuff they are made of. I have seen young, beardless officers trying to light their cigarettes in a nochalant manner, their hands trembling so as to extinguish match upon match, and I have seen hundreds of men shiver slightly as though from cold and turn up the collars of their tunics.

A veteran sergeant major, who won a Distinguished Conduct Medal in the Boer War, told me a trick of his adopted to keep his teeth from chattering during such moments. It was merely a little block of wood, so whittled as to be easily gripped between the jaws. Here was a man who had done exceptionally brave things and was likely to do them again, but who knew what fear was every time he went under fire.

Just Before the Charge.

The moments just before being ordered to charge from the trenches are the worst a soldier has to endure. Every nerve is strained to the breaking point. Behind him his own guns thunder and pour their fire upon the enemy's lines. Just overhead the enemy's answering shells shriek and howl and burst, while the upper edge of the parapet over which he is about to plunge snaps and bursts into little sputterings of sand and gravel from the impact of the showers of rifle and machine-gun bullets he is soon to face.

It is then the officers and non-coms must hide every trace of their own fear and inspire their men with the courage of desperation.

But once out of the trench and dashing forward with fixed bayonets fear gives way to a form of hysteria. I have asked hundreds of men to tell me what they remembered of their feelings when making a charge and never have I been able to get a satisfactory answer. None of them remember anything more than a confusion of shells, shouts and falling bodies, a feeling of intense desire to get to the enemy's lines and have it over with. Never have I found a single man willing to tell, or able to remember, what his feelings were when he reached the enemy's trench and set to work with the bayonet and rifle-butt.

Nor have I found one man willing to admit ever having killed a man in hand-to-hand combat. Whenever one finds some braggart relating with much gusto how he killed fifteen or twenty Germans in one charge, it is a safe bet he's an out and out liar. Sergeant O'Leary, who was given the Victoria Cross for outstripping his battalion in a certain charge and killing or driving about twenty Germans out of their trench single-handed, has never admitted remembering anything about it.

Sensations Under Fire.

Every time I have been under fire I have longed most, ardently to be somewhere else. If my sensations were those of the average man I marvel all the more that an army can be made to stick it out as it does.

My most horrible moments were those when, in line of my Army Service Corps duty, I have had to enter trenches under bombardment and distribute rations. I can conceive no keener sensation of helpless terror than to face the explosion of several hundred shells with nothing in one's hands for defence but a half section of a dairy cheese and a tin of biscuit.

At such times I have found it all I could do to force myself to keep moving. One feels as though the spot on which one stands at the moment is the only safe place. The other spots in all directions are undergoing such devastating changes and one's own little spot seems so comfortable and secure.

CHANGE THE VIBRATION
It Makes for Health.

A man tried leaving off meat, potatoes, coffee, etc., and adopted a breakfast of fruit, Grape-Nuts with cream, some crisp toast and a cup of Postum.

His health began to improve at once for the reason that a meat eater will reach a place once in a while where his system seems to become clogged and the machinery doesn't work smoothly.

A change of this kind puts aside food that is slow to digest and takes up food and drink of the highest value, already partly digested and capable of being quickly changed into good, rich blood and strong tissue.

A most valuable feature of Grape-Nuts is the natural mineral elements (phosphate of potash, etc.,) grown in the grains from which it is made. These elements are absolutely necessary for the well-balanced rebuilding of body, brain and nerves.

A few days' use of Grape-Nuts will show some way to physical and mental strength well worth the trial.

Censorship In Belgium Strict

ROTTERDAM, July 25. —The Neiuwe Rotterdamsche Courant has learned from the Viaammen Post, which is still published at Ghent, that the German military authorities have issued new regulations with regard to the censorship which are to hold good throughout the whole of that part of Belgium occupied by them.

Must Get Censor's Permit.

According to these, no printed matter is to be published without written permission from the censor's office. This also applies to newspapers and periodicals, which are only to be published in the German or Flemish language; the French language is to be permitted only if the necessity for its use can be proved to the office.

The importation of printed matter from other countries is forbidden. Special permission must be obtained from the military authorities in order to paste bills, or to distribute or sell papers in public places.

Examination and written permission on the part of the censor is also to be required for theatrical productions, public lectures of all kinds, and cinematograph and picture performances.

Rules for Film Shows.

In picture palaces and so forth an explanation of the films shown may be given in the German of Flemish language, or in both. The French language may be used together with either the German or Flemish, but not alone. Attendance is forbidden at performances which are not authorized.

Transgression or neglect of these regulations, whether intentional or otherwise, is punishable by a maximum fine of 12,000 marks (15,000 francs), or imprisonment up to three years, unless a more severe sentence be imposed by martial law.

MOLASSES COOKIES.

Mix a cupful of molasses and a cupful of brown sugar, dissolve a teaspoon of soda in a cupful of boiling water and add it to the other ingredients with half a cupful of flour sifted with a tablespoon each of ginger and cinnamon: Drop from a spoon on

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

(Introductory Observations.)

The committee have the honour to present and transmit to you a report upon the evidence which has been submitted to them regarding outrages alleged to have been committed by the German troops in the present war.

By the terms of their appointment the committee were directed "to consider and advise on the evidence collected on behalf of His Majesty's Government, as to outrages alleged to have been committed by German troops during the present war, cases of alleged maltreatment of civilians in the invaded territories, and breaches of the laws and established usages of war; and to prepare a report for His Majesty's Government showing the conclusion at which they arrive on the evidence now available."

It may be convenient that before proceeding to state how we have dealt with the materials, and what are the conclusions reached, we should set out the manner in which the evidence came into being, and its nature.

In the month of September, 1914, a minute was, at the instance of the Prime Minister, drawn up and signed by the Home Secretary and the Attorney-General. It stated the need that had arisen for investigating the accusations of inhumanity and outrage that had been brought against the German soldiers, and indicated the precautions to be taken in collecting evidence that would be needed to ensure its accuracy. Pursuant to this minute steps were taken under the direction of the Home Office to collect evidence and a great many persons who could give it were seen and examined.

For some three of four months before the appointment of the committee, the Home Office had been collecting a large body of evidence. This evidence was taken from Belgian witnesses, some soldiers, but most of them civilians from those towns and villages through which the German army passed, and from British officers and soldiers. More than 1,200 depositions made by these witnesses have been submitted to and considered by the committee. Nearly all of these were obtained under the supervision of Sir Charles Matthews, the Director of Public Prosecutions, and of Mr. E. Grimwood Mears, barrister of the Inner Temple, whilst in addition Professor J. H. Morgan has collected a number of statements mainly from British soldiers, which have also been submitted to the committee.

The labour involved in securing, in a comparatively short time, so large a number of statements from witnesses scattered all over the United Kingdom, made it necessary to employ a good many examiners. The deep depositions were in all cases taken down in this country by gentlemen of legal experience, though, of course, they had no authority to administer an oath. They were instructed not to "lead" the witnesses, or make any suggestions to them, and also to impress upon them the necessity for care and precision in giving their evidence.

They were also directed to treat the evidence critically, and as far as possible satisfy themselves, by putting questions which arose out of the evidence, that the witnesses were speaking the truth. They were, in fact, to cross-examine them so far as the testimony given provided material for cross-examination.

We have seen and conversed with many of these gentlemen and have been greatly impressed by their ability and by what we have gathered as to the fairness of spirit which they brought to their task. We feel certain that the instructions given have been scrupulously observed. In many cases those who took the evidence have added their comments upon the intelligence and demeanor of the witnesses, stating the impression which each witness made, and indicating any case in which the story told appeared to them open to doubt or suspicion. In coming to a conclusion upon the evidence, the committee have been greatly assisted by these expressions of opinion, and have uniformly rejected every deposition on which an opinion adverse to the witness has been recorded.

Part II Introductory Observations will appear in Examiner Tuesday, July 27th.

CONSTRUCTION OF THE STEAMER EASTLAND CAUSED OVERTURNING

Equipped With Water Ballast for Shallow Harbors and Was Removed Saturday Morning Because of Extra Crowd.

JURY ON THURSDAY

CHICAGO, July 25.—Federal Judge Landis ordered a special grand jury empanneled to make an investigation of Saturday's disaster on the Chicago river.

The jury will meet next Thursday.

Steamboat inspector William Nicholasy is investigating a report that water ballast was pumped from the hold of the Eastland as the passengers boarded, so that the boat would rise and that more passengers might be carried.

One theory of the cause of the overturning of the vessel is that the steamer stuck in the mud and had failed to free herself when the engines were started, causing the outer side of the steamer to list. The weight of the large crowd aboard augmented this to such an extent that the boat could not right itself, but caused the hawsers to break and the boat continued to list until it overturned.

Construction Was Responsible.

A few hours' inquiry, however, caused investigating officials to lean strongly toward the theory that the peculiar construction of the boat was responsible for the accident.

The Eastland was equipped with water ballast so that it could enter the harbour of South Haven, Mich., and other shallow ports and river mouths. When approaching such entries the water would be forced from the tanks, reducing the boat's draft. Ballast would be taken on again when the vessel emerged from the harbour.

It was the theory of the officials that most of the ballast had been forced from the tanks in anticipation of a heavy load to-day. The steamer was thus rendered top-heavy, it was thought, and this, if a fact, would explain why she capsized so quickly.

Captain and Mate Arrested.

Acting under a demand from Commissioner of Public Works W. Burkhardt, Deputy Chief Schuettler at 1.30 ordered the arrest of Captain Pederson and First Mate Bell Fisher. It was intimated that there had been a clash of authority in the matter of the rescue work between some boat officers and the police. It was said one of the former had ordered the drillers to stop cutting out the side plates.

Ten thousand or more persons who crowded South Clark street, along which Captain Pederson and Fisher were taken to headquarters at the City Hall, indulged in a near riot when they recognized the prisoners.

Before the twenty policemen who were escorting the men could beat back the crowd, two men had reached Pederson. One of them struck him in the face. The police had to draw clubs and wield them before the crowd gave way.

Turned from the attack on Pederson, the crowd tried to reach the dock. The neighbourhood for blocks around, already jammed with from 20,000 to 30,000 persons, soon was impassable. Outlying precincts were cleaned of roundsmen and desk men to augment the police in that district. It was more than an hour before the police could restore a semblance of order.

To Stand Eastland on End.

Three huge dredges were put to work on Commissioner Burkhard's orders in an effort to stand the Eastland on end. To prevent possibility of bodies being swept down the river orders were issued at the great pumping stations which force the water from the lake to the drainage canal to reverse the process sufficiently to make the water stagnant. City divers went to work shortly after this. Four more were put to work this afternoon.

The commission stores and business houses in the neighbourhood of the Clark street bridge view with one another to give assistance and comfort to the saved. The Steele-Weedels coffee house ordered business suspended. Clerks were set to ripping open sacks of coffee to make up a great cauldron of the beverage for scores of rescued who were taken into the store.

By noon a card file system to learn the names of the missing and known dead was established by the police at 216 Clark street.

Eastland Built Too High.

Joseph A. Forrester, who holds a Mississippi River master and pilot's license, declared the Eastland never should have been used for passenger services.

Forrester, who is visiting here and was early on the scene, continued,

"There were not enough holds below the water line. The Eastland was built too high. When she started listing, nothing on God's earth could have stopped her, because there was more of her above water than below, which is contrary to all ideas of boat construction."

There was row upon row of bodies at a score of temporary morgues in first floor offices throughout the neighbourhood. And the pitiful thing was that for every body of a man there were from three to five bodies of girls, children and women. In the stiffened arms of some of the women were clutched their babies hugged tightly.

A Recruiting Appeal

The action of the Toronto Ministerial Association in issuing a recruiting appeal, will be universally approved, and no doubt the local clergymen will do their share in the movement. The appeal issued by the Toronto Association is signed by Rev. Byron H. Stauffer of the Bond street Congregational church; Rev. W. W. Hincks, of the Broadway Methodist Tabernacle; Rev. Daniel Strachan, of the Rosedale Presbyterian Church; and Rev. Andrew Robertson, of St. James' Presbyterian Church, representing the Association. It is addressed to all church ministers of the Dominion, and calls upon them to point out to their people the solemnity of the task confronting them.

"Therefore, will not we fear, though the earth be removed; the God of Hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our refuge."

"The very hour which we sought to avert is upon us. Our Empire is engaged in the greatest struggle of the ages. The most sacred possessions that have been won only through the travail and pain of the centuries, are at stake. The priceless gift of liberty, with all that it means to a free citizen, is in the balance. These are threatened by armed invaders who are possessed of the very spirit of Satan. The foe has thrown off every pretence of fairness, and is using all his scientific skill to perpetuate the cruelest and most horrible atrocities not only on our soldiers, but on the weakest and most defenceless citizens. As a nation we must see the thing through to victory. Whatever the cost, whatever the strain, whatever the sacrifice, the way must be travelled. To that end every one must do his part. Our prayer is that we, as the Lord's prophets, may not be found wanting in the hour of national peril.

"We are told that the people are looking to us to-day for leadership. The truest leadership is that which can so impress the people with the solemn significance of the task that every soul will feel it the highest privilege to have some part, and every eligible man will seek to bear the arms of his nation and the colours of his King. We believe it is the solemn duty of every Christian pulpit in Canada to create an atmosphere in which recruiting will be easy."

Austro-German Progress to Warsaw, So Far, Has Been Devoid of Any Real Result

LONDON, July 23.—The Austro-German armies continue to press the Russian forces defending Warsaw, and while they have made progress at some points they have not as yet made any serious breach in the well fortified inner lines defending that city.

The Russians, it is true, have been pressed back to the bridge-head positions directly west of Warsaw and into the fortress of Ivangorod further to the south-east on the Vistula. But at these points they are probably in a better position to offer stubborn resistance to their opponents.

The two attacks that are being made, that from the north along the Narew River by Field Marshal von Hindenburg, and that which Field Marshal von Mackensen is directing from the south-east, between the Vistula and Bug Rivers, apparently have been held up, or the Germans are waiting for an opportune moment to move forward and catch the Russian armies, should it be decided to evacuate Warsaw. At any rate, the Berlin official statement does not claim any advance for von Mackensen, while the report, although it states that the Russians have ceased their counter-attacks along the Narew, does not mention any success on the part of von Hindenburg.

Warsaw's Fall Discounted.

However, should the Russians hold Warsaw it would surprise the military critics in the allied countries, who have discounted the loss of the city, attacked from all sides by opponents possessed of superiority in guns and munitions. Grand Duke Nicholas, although able to deliver some stinging counter-attacks and inflict heavy losses on the Austro-Germans, must in the first place consider the safety of his armies, the loss of which would be much more serious for the Russians than retirement from the Polish capital and the territory around it.

In the region of Shavli, on the Dubyssa river, and on the Mariampol-Kovno road, the Germans claim a series of successes, but nothing is said of the fighting nearer Riga, for which city another German army is heading.

Only at Ivangorod does the situation appear to have undergone any marked change during the last 24 hours. Here the Russians have evacuated all the territory on the west, or left, bank of the Vistula, withdrawing their troops to the entrenched lines before the fortress along the river. This movement is described in the Austrian official report as a great success for the Teutonic allies, and Vienna announces that the Austrians now are approaching Ivangorod from the west, while the Germans are coming up from the south. Nevertheless the Russians here are believed by London military critics to be in a better position for defence than they were before, when their lines were extended across the river.

Russians Burn Villages.

The retreat behind the Vistula, according to the Vienna report, followed the penetration of the Russian fortified positions at several points west of the Vistula, and the statement is made that the Russians burned many villages before evacuating them, this procedure apparently being general on the part of the Grand Duke's forces everywhere on the eastern front.

On the left bank of the Vistula, to the north of Ivangorod and directly west of Warsaw, the Russians have made a new stand on the so-called Blonie-Grojec line, which is just east of the abandoned Baura-Rawka line, Warsaw's railway communications northward by way of Nowo-Georgiewsk towards Petrograd and southward by way of Ivangorod and Lublin towards Odessa, remain intact at the latest accounts, although further progress by the Austro-Germans in the investment of Ivangorod may soon cut off the latter line.

RUSSIAN AVIATOR TOOK TERRIBLE RISK TO RELEASE BOMB

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 26.—A French aviator, apparently serving with the Russians, tells in a letter received here of a most unusual and horrible predicament in which he found himself. He says:

"I have been able to make two good flights by moonlight. The second was the most terrible experience I have yet known. I started at 11 o'clock with Capt. M.— as look-out, with 18 gallons of petrol and four machine shells. We climbed 2,500 feet, dodging all the time two Austrian projectors which were searching the heavens. Then, circling over the barracks on the river bank, we took careful aim and dropped our bombs. We could hear the muffled roar of the explosions.

"As luck would have it, our third bomb failed to get clear and became entangled in the landing gear of our machine. What were we to do? To descend was impossible, for the bomb was primed and would have blown us into the next world directly we touched the ground. We were then 7,000 feet up. 'It's my fault,' said M.—, 'so I'll go down and unhitch it.' So we eased ourselves of the fourth bomb and then started to plane down towards our aerodrome.

"At 2,500 feet M.— climbed over the tank, threaded his way through the wires, and, on his knees, hanging over the abyss, with an icy wind blowing at the rate of 700 miles an hour, bent over and disentangled the bomb, which dropped into a deserted field. Then he crept back to his seat and soon afterwards we were in port."

Inquest Being Held To-day

In Connection With Tragic Death of Lindsay Man.

LINDSAY, July 26.—The preliminary inquest into the death of the late George Switzer, who was killed by a C.P.R. train Friday afternoon, was held in the Council Chamber before Dr. J. W. Wood, coroner.

After viewing the body the inquest was adjourned until to-day.

A combination of hammock and cot has been patented by a Cincinnati inventor, one end of its mattress being raised to form a pillow when it is used for sleeping on.

Plenty of Work in Canada On The Munition Contracts

TORONTO, July 26.—"The contractors do not need to worry, there is plenty of work for them," states General Alex. Bertram, chairman of the Shell Committee. "The important thing is to get the shipments going." General Bertram is making a tour of the factories making ammunition, and to use his own words, "I am hurrying up the slow end of the work, which is cartridge case ends." The general left Niagara camp yesterday morning by motor, and visited St. Catharines, Hamilton, Galt, and Dundas.

"When will Mr. D. A. Thomas arrive in Canada? asked the reporter. "I don't know," said the general. "I had a letter from him a few days ago, and I do not think he will arrive in Ottawa until the return of the Premier or Minister of Militia."

"Some of the contractors, according to statements published, think they will be through their orders by October, and will have to close down," said the newspaper man.

"They do not need to worry," replied the general. "October is a long way off, and there is plenty of work in sight."

"Have you received any new orders?"

"No, but you must remember that we have orders in Canada amounting to $162,000,000, we have only shipped about $10,000,000 worth. As a business proposition the British War Office cannot be expected to place more orders until the shipments are heavier. That is what is needed, and we are working to that end. The important thing now is to get the work out and shipped, there is no question about the future and more work. No business man would continue placing orders until he saw good shipments. It cannot be expected."

"I suppose you are waiting for Mr. Thomas, to find out about new orders?"

"Not at all. We are arranging to make fixed ammunition, and going straight ahead. It is all right to discuss these things on paper, but it needs work to organize the industries to make fixed ammunition, and that is why I am touring now, looking after the slow end."

"Are you arranging to make time fuses?"

"Yes, we are organizing now to make them, and will be able to make fixed ammunition."

"Will the Government establish a central plant for the assembling of the different parts, ready for shipment?"

"The Government, as a matter of fact, hasn't got much to do with that. All the orders are directly under the jurisdiction of the British War Office, through the Shell Committee."

"Are shells being assembled now somewhere?"

"Certainly, down east, but we never say where they are being assembled."

THE WORLD OF SPORT

EAST CITY AND THISTLES WERE SATURDAY WINNERS

Dan McCabe's Team Have Only to Break Even on the Next Two Games to Annex the Championship—Louis Yeates' Team Won From the Empires.

The Thistles were the winners in the first game at Riverside Park on Saturday afternoon over the Empires, by the score of 10 to 6, while in the second fixture East City, the League leaders, swamped Vic Fowler's Classics, 17 to 3.

In the first game the Thistles did not have enough men on the field to commence and a youngster by the name of Green, from amongst the spectators, was agreed upon as the ninth man. Green was sent out to the right garden, where he performed very creditably, and at the plate he got to first twice, and the other twice up, poled out sacrifice hits.

The Thistles took the lead in the first innings, Jackson coming in on Murphy's procession of errors. Murphy muffed seven chances out of nine during the afternoon, having a particularly bad afternoon. Cherrett tallied in the Empire's half of the first, and tied up the score. Murphy let the Thistles start again in the second, and when the third man was out they had tallied three more. Empires were ahead once in the sixth, but Thistles counted four in the seventh, taking the lead, and retaining it until the end.

Huycke did not have a particularly good day, while Rahmel, who opposed him, went had several times when a slip meant a run. Henderson twirled for Rahmel in the eighth, striking out two men and giving one single.

After the first four innings in the second game it was a procession for the East City team over the Classics. Vic Fowler's team was all primed to take a fall out of the League leaders, but their expectations fell down when Neary, their star twirler, went up. Lornie Rose came to the rescue for a little while, but he jumped in from playing third base and did not do any better. Neary finished the game, after Rose took a try at heaving.

Kirn, for East City, was not in very good trim either, but he scattered his hits enough to keep out of trouble after the fourth when the Clasics scored their only three runs of the game.

HERE IS SOMETHING FOR OUR LOCAL ATHLETES TO THINK OVER SERIOUSLY

Brockville Times:—Wounded Canadian officers are back in Canada asking young Canadians why they have not enlisted for active service when they are badly needed for the defence of the Empire.

Canadian soldiers at the front are writing home with bitter acorn asking why their pals at home have not donned khaki instead of staying behind in ease and idleness.

Correspondents are writing to the Canadian newspapers asking why Canadian newspapers continue to brag in black display headlines about the wonderful deeds of the Canadian soldiers at the front, when by far the greater part of the so-called Canadian soldiers are British-born (Irish, Scottish or English), who have come to Canada of late years and who have enlisted in Canada.

There seems to be no disguising the fact that the greater part of the men who have gone to the front in Canadian units are not native-born Canadians, but chiefly British-born, and that since the country has been pretty well drained of these men, the enlisting is dragging badly; in fact, the native-born Canadian is not enlisting as he should.

This is an unpleasant state of affairs, and not at all creditable to Canada.

It is not a matter of physical courage, as we have said before, because the cases of individual funk in action are few and far between—a negligible quantity, in fact. It is that the eligible young Canadians who should be in the ranks, and have no legitimate cause for refraining, are either ignorant of the gravity of the situation, or else are too indifferent to their duty.

What will these young men of Canada have to say when their comrades come back from the war? In years to come how will they feel about it?

There are plenty of young lusty Canadians who play hockey, baseball, football, lacrosse with pluck and courage. Why don't they enlist when their chums at the front declare that they are needed there?

Hamilton Rugby Players Hear The Empire's Call

Hamilton Spectator—If there is rugby played next fall, and it looks as though there will be, the Tigers will be without the services of two of their outside wings, Punk Thompson having gone with the 36th overseas battalion, and Orval Walsh having decided to enlist. Other players have applied for commissions and there will be very few of the old faces left when the Tigers step on the field. The Hamilton Rowing club members promise a surprise after the Canadian Henley is over, for many of the Oarsmen will join the colours, among them being Sam Manson, the Tiger captain. Sam will take out a commission with one of the local regiments and will await his turn for overseas duty. Other members of the Rowing club and Tiger clubs will enlist, and it looks that by the time the football season rolls around there will be very few of the regulars on either of the local senior teams.

This War Is Unlike Any Other--- Twelve Nations Are Already In The Arena---Others Preparing

(By Sydney Brooks in the Montreal Standard.)

People talk of this struggle as "the greatest of all wars," and "unlike any other war." They are perfectly right. I wonder. Indeed, whether they altogether realize how right they are.

Twelve nations are already in the arena. Three others are visibly preparing to entering; a fourth, across the Atlantic, may not impossibly be likewise drawn in; of no European country, unless, perhaps, it be Spain, can one predicate an absolute and permanent neutrality; while at the other ends of the earth China and the great Republic of South America alone seem secure in their present immunity.

There is no need, however, for speculation. The war is big enough as it is. The Dardanelles war alone is the biggest Great Britain has ever engaged in apart from the war in Flanders and the South African War. Fully half the entire population of the world and all but three-fifths of its total land surface are at this moment to be classed as belligerent. In Europe of course, the proportion is much larger. Our of every seven square miles of European soil the warring Powers own five; out of every dozen persons ten are their subjects. Over 400,000,000 people in Europe, occupying roughly 3,000,000 square miles of territory, are at war. Fewer than 60,000,000 are at peace.

But even this percentage, grotesque as it is, is exceeded in the case of Africa. If we include Morocco among the French possessions the ony neutral States in the vast ontinent are the kingdom of Abyssinia, the Spanish colonies, and the Republic of Liberia, and they cover abrely one-twentieth of the whole area and contain less than a seventeenth of its inhabitants. In Asia all but half the population and over half of the territory are embraced by the struggle. In North America above the Rio Grande slightly more than half are ares and about a twelfth of the popualtion own allegiance to one of the belligerent nations. South America alone shows a genuine surplus of neutrality. Only about one fifty-sixth of its surface and considerably less than one per cent. of its peoples come within the category of combatants.

A Thousand Million People.

Adding to it all together one finds that some 30,000,000 square miles and not far short of 1,000,000,000 people are involved in the war. By far the greater part of these colossal total falls to the share of the Allies. In Europe alone they own nearly six times as much territory and govern over twice as many people as the Germanies and the Turkish ally; while throughout the world their land possessions are nearly thirteen times as great and their population all but six times as numerous as those of their enemies. It would be useless to attempt to compute the financial or commercial resources that the Powers are thus squandering on their mutual destruction—useless because the figures would pass at once into a merely meaningless immensity. It conveys nothing to be told that the Governments of the belligerent States were raising in the year before the war about a thousand and a half millions of revenue or that the annual foreign trade of their peoples, which was, of course, but a fraction of their total buying and selling, ran in the neighbourhood of five thousand millions. Such sums defy vital comprehension. I give them only to suggest that in point of size "the greatest of all wars" justifies its title.

In point of the actual area, however, over which the fighting has taken place, the present struggle has not yet fetched a wider compass than the Seven Years' War or the Napoleonic wars. For all that, it is sufficiently diffused. Its guns have been heard on every ocean from the North Sea to the Bay of Bengal, among the beanfields of Shantung, in the islands of the Pacific, off the Chilian coast and the Falkland Islands, on the banks of the Nile, at the head of the Persian Gulf, along the courses of the Tigris and Euphrates, amid the water of South-West Africa, the oil points of Togoland and the Cameroons, the uplands of East Africa, in the Caucasus and the Italian Alps, in the Dardanelles and Syria and across the Persian frontier, around the east coast of Britain, and over the heart of Europe from Paris to Warsaw, from Switzerland to the sea, from the Danube to the Baltic.

Other wars have seen huge armies — Napoleon a hundred and three years ago crossed the Niemen at the head of 680,000 men—but this one alone has witnessed some 20,000,000 men under arms. Other wars have been in the main armies wars of soldiers; this is a war of peoples.

Every Living Person Affected.

Other wars have been expensive, but in this one alone has civilization spent ten or twelve million sterling a day on blowing itself to pieces. Other wars were fought when industrialism was still in its infancy and before the railway, the cable, the telegraph, the steamship, and the universal web of commerce and credit had compressed humanity for a thousand purposes into a single, sentient and interdependent organism. Their effects, therefore, were chiefly local to the people immediately engaged in them. The effects of this one are world-wide. Other wars brought in their train a limited disturbance and disorganization where the one brings a universal cataclysm. There is probably not a solitary being on this planet to-day who has not felt directly or indirectly, for good or evil, in his own life or person or interests the gigantic upheaval of the present conflict.

We used to number armies by the score of the hundreds of thousands. We now count them by the millions. Battles that formerly were fought out on a manageable front, were over in two or three days, and led to decisive results, now stretch into weeks, along lines a thousand miles long, and have no conclusive issue. Where fighting was once open and visible we have to-day a subterranean warfare of intermin[illegible]. Where the man used to predominate over the machine we see to-day the human factor waiting upon and subordinate to the material. In the air and below the sea, by mines and bombs, and torpedoes and barbed wire, and trenches of concrete, and machine guns firing six hundred rounds a minute and hurricanes of shells like inverted earthquakes, war, once a matter of movement and elbow-room, and the shock of great charges, has been pegged down to a series of sieges and assaults, to ironmongery, chemists, and the overpowering appliances of mechanical science.

Truly this war is unlike any other war. No struggle was ever so extensive and so intensive, none destroyed life and wealth at a greater rate, none brought into play, as this one does, the whole of each belligerent's moral, physical and intellectual power, none ever left so deep a mark on the political arrangements, the economic and social life of such multitudes of peoples, none was so clearly a contest of sheer endurance. Industry in general, have recently highly developed, and that Italy alone of the great powers has given herself five full months of time in which to accumulate munitions for her entry into the campaign, months during which she had ample leisure to observe and profit by those lessons of the war which had come to other powers as novelties, striking them under the full strain of the campaign.

Similarly Prussia totally misread the subtle political temperament of modern France; the whole of her plan of campaign was based upon the conception that an attack on Paris would disorder the whole French military arranzements, and upon the further conception that invasion would at once produce violent discords between the population and the soldiers.

She did not appreciate to what a depth the politician had sunk nor to what a height the soldier had risen in modern France. She in no way understood the foundation of the national spirit, and she paid the penalty of her gross effort in the battle of the Marne, which finally forbade her victory and since which she has been fighting for mere life.

In the same way Prussia has misunderstood the reations of the British national temper. Not that this temper is what its own self-praise describes it as, not that the British national temper is particularly sober and calm: upon the contrary, living in large towns mainly informed by a sensational press, and with little past experience of war at close quarters, the public opinion of this country was bound to suffer a very considerable disturbance with each new effort at creating panic that Prussia attempted.

But what Prussia in no way understood were the two further characters which strongly mark the English temperament to-day, the first of which is the rapid reaction through which it can pass and the recapture of its balance after a moment of uncertainty, and the second of which is the new power of national co-ordination. In this last point there is so much novelty that even close observers have hotherto failed to remark it.

Summary of Situation as Seen in England.

Put all this together and you may sum up somewhat as follows:

1. The Prussian theory that war must be waged through the terrorizing of civilians as much as though military action has reached in this campaign an extreme hitherto unknown in Europe.

2. It has been particularly directed against Great Britain, because Great Britain is under a form of government more civilian at this moment than any other of the Allies, and contains a larger proportion of non-military population which is, further less actively in contact with the campaign than the invaded nations of the Continent.

3. This Prussian effort to terrorize Great Britain, to spread panic in its civilian population, is of a character cumulative and increasing and will probably proceed to greater lengths than it has hitherto reached.

4. Its failure is progressively evident and appears the more striking, almost in proportion as the efforts to promote it increase in intensity.

5. This failure is due to certain features in the British national temper, some of them novel and due to modern conditions, which features German opinion as a whole ignored.

Finally, one may justly conclude that like almost every other German effort in this war, the particular effort here discussed has miscarried. It has been highly developed, laboriously conceived, put forward with great exaggeration of detail, carried to a great length, and like the advance on Paris, like the effort for Warsaw, like the use of close formation, like the project of separate peace, like the diplomacy that would have kept Italy neutral, and like every other major piece of the enemy's plan, it has failed.

HOLLAND READY; HAS 600,000 MEN TO FIGHT KAISER

THE HAGUE, July 25.—Although it is the dearest wish of the Dutch Government and the Dutch nation at large to remain neutral, a number of far-seeing and patriotic Hollanders have warned Holland to the effect that a victorious Germany would mean the end of Holland's independence and territorial integrity.

This idea is slowly permeating the Dutch mind, but as it has been voiced by such authorities as Prof. Hector Treub, Prof. Kernmann of the Utrecht University, and others, even the most Germanophile Dutch are reaching the conclusion that there is something in it.

Prof. Hector Treub, the leading surgeon in the country and a brother of Mr. W. T. Treub, the Minister of Finance, and the "strong man" in the present cabinet, puts it this way: "We are anti-German because we are good Hollanders and love our country." That is the standpoint almost every Hollander takes now. The possibility of Germany annexing Belgium is a nightmare to every Dutchman, and many authoritative quarters think that the declaration of such annexation, if it were ever to come, should be taken up by the Dutch as a casus belli and should force Holland to wage war against Germany.

The Dutch do not want war. If they fight Germany their territory will be invaded; if they fight the Allies their colonies will be taken away from them, and in both cases the end of the kingdom of Holland will have been reached.

In spite of it all, war is still possible, and it may come in a night. The government of Mr. Cort van der Linden has, therefore, devised a scheme which will allow them to increase the efficiency of the army.

It is about to bring before parliament a new bill providing for a vast increase of the reserves which will, if carried in the original form, turn the present Dutch army of 300,000 men into an army of 600,000. Holland will then practically be a "nation in arms," and the willingness of the peaceful and superneutral Dutch to accept such a bill shows how deeply they are concerned about the German peril threatening their very existence.

WARSAW IS LITTLE EXCITED, CITY IS UNDER ARMY CONTROL

PETROGRAD, July 26.—There is little excitement at Warsaw, and the people are fairly confident. The city is entirely under military control.

The most important fighting is still occurring between the Vistula and the Bug, where Gen. Mackensen is trying to blast through, while the Russians are offering a magnificent resistance. Two days ago it seems to have stopped the Germans, who were pressing toward Lublin. The Germans were reinforced, however, and returned to the attack, with the result that Saturday night they were within a few miles of the town, so that eventually the Russian front may be along the Lublin-Cholm railway.

There is a feeling at Petrograd that in facing a great rush the Russians are considering the interests of France and Great Britain in preference to their own. It would be a small matter for Russia with her vast territories to give up for the time being a little more of Poland, but it has been clearly recognized by those directing the plans of the allied armies that further retirement without fighting would allow the enemy to transfer large forces to the west in order to break through to Calais and possibly to Paris.

Taken From Germans Only After Many Attempts Shows The Doggedness of the French

General Headquarters, British Expeditionary Force, July 26.—I went to deserted Vermelles recently, writes a correspondent. Vermelles probably conveys little to you. Maybe you recall it vaguely in connection with a French success. But it is a name to note and remember. Vermelles is more than just the little township it seems to be, straggling over a low ridge in the Black Country of France in a flat plain that, as I saw it, was ablaze with poppies and cornflowers.

Vermelles as it stands to-day, battered and ruined and deserted, is the most striking repudiation imaginable of those facile theories of armchair strategists that lay it down as gospel that the French soldier is not a "stayer," that he must win outright or not at all. Vermelles, with every ruined wall loopholed for defence, is the most graphic illustration I have seen in this war of the supreme importance of the machine gun to a defending force.

Vermelles was captured from the Germans by General Maud-huy's 10th Army on December 1 after assaulting operations which had begun far back in October, on the failure of the great German thrust against Arras, and had lasted for fifty days.

The French, on advancing from the west, were held up at the very entrance to the village by German machine guns installed in the houses there. The Germans were very strongly entrenched and the place was loopholed in all directions and fairly bristled with machine guns which spat their stream of death from cellars through holes knocked level with the street or through the shutters of windows on the first floor.

Foiled in their frontal attack the French assaulted from the sides, grasping the two main centres of German resistance, the brewery and the chateau, in a pair of pincers, as it were, and squeezing the Germans until their resistance broke and the French won the village.

Never was the painstaking thoroughness of the French mind seen to better advantage than in the patient and elaborate operations which led to this result. As the German strongholds were practically impregnable to frontal assault owing to the machine guns installed everywhere where a direct line of fire was obtainable, each one separately had to be mined and blown up, the French infantry then swarming in to the assault.

Stroll Over the Field.

Vermelles, lying abandoned in the sunshine, with practicallyevery house roofless, every window broken, every house front pitted and scarred with shell splinters and sprapnel bullets, with rough graves, both French and German, dotted about in the gardens and adjacent fields, was like an exhibition model of a scene of street fighting of the most desperate order.

One did not need the imagination of an Edouard Detaille or an Anton von Werner to people these narrow streets of white houses with red-trousered Frenchmen advancing at the double with heads well down amid clouds of shell smoke against battered buildings whence spurts of fire leaped out without cessation.

I could mark the successive lines of the French advance by the long, narrow trenches which had originally been underground saps but which were afterwards broken down and made into communication trenches. In the same way one might see the traces of the Germans' retreat by the successive lines of houses or walls loopholed for rifles and machine guns.

The brewery in which the Germans made a most stubborn resistance was built round an open quadrangle, the living house on one side. Only the walls of the dwelling house have been one vast pile of twisted ironwork and left standing. Within there is just broken bricks, and the very steps are all chipped and pitted by shrapnel and rifle bullets.

In order to reduce this last point of resistance the French had to drag a mountain gun up to the first floor of the brewery building opposite and from there batter the dwelling house about the defenders' ears.

But the most desperate fighting took place about the chateau which, when it stood, must have been an ugly and pretentious mansion, modern in style, with an elaborate glass veranda, surrounded by a pretty garden enclosed with a high red brick wall. Directly you enter the drive four graves meet your eye. Three German pioneers and a French second-lieutenant are buried there. The young French officer's grave has a neatly inscribed cross; the German crosses have the name, rank, and regiment of the dead man written in pencil.

For a long time the Germans ensconced in the chateau held out. The German chief command was installed here in a cellar under the steps leading up to the front door, the cellar openings protected by sand bags. The Germans had mounted machine guns along the high red wall surrounding the chateau, and all attempts to capture the place by storm failed before the terrible fire they were able to converge on any given point attacked. So the French mined the place.

Chateau Well Mined.

I saw their mine dug in the white chalky soil a good distance from the chateau wall. The French sappers had sculptures in the soft clay at the foot of the shaft they had sunk leading to the sap which ran out towards the chateau. In the sap the French placed their bags of powder, but they had to explode the mine before the work was quite complete, as the Germans in the chateau noticed the mining operations from the mounds of white chalk which were piled up at the mouth of the shaft and opened a heavy fire on the infantry massing for the assault.

The sappers had done their work well. When the smoke of the explosion had cleared it was seen that a huge breach had been torn in the high wall, great fragments of which were lying in the deep craters formed by the explosion. The French infantry swarmed through the gap with bayonet and bomb. The last resistance was overcome. Vermelles was captured.

Winter and spring have passed over the trenches which the Germans had dug in the chateau grounds, and now their form is almost lost. But the French who entered the place say they found that every possible object that might serve to support sandbags had been pressed into service by the Germans, from parts of beds to perambulators. The Germans had put out every effort to hold Vermelles, and its canture was a magnificent tribute to the fine combination of endurance and dash which the French troops are now again displaying in the desperate fighting about Arras.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

An exchange says: Certain interests declared the continued moribund and weak condition of the railroads almost appeared as if designed. They hinted it would not be surprising if the weakness had been arranged to keep speculation out of the railroads until the Western rate case has been decided, as a bull market in the rails would not have a favourable influence on the Interstate Commerce Commission when the roads were pleading poverty and asking for higher tariffs."

Baltimore and Ohio's recent advance is an example of what it is believed may occur in other rails if earnings take a pronounced turn for the better. Following B and O.'s excellent earnings in June comes the announcement that gross thus far in July has shown a daily average expansion of $38,000, which, if maintained, would mean an increase of about $1,000,000 for the month.

During June the United Kingdom succeeded in getting only 20,000 tons of refined sugar whereas in 1914 she imported 89,000 tons. Last year Germany and Austria-Hungary supplied 75,000 of the 89,000 tons, which explains the present shortage. England's stocks of raw and refined sugar amounted on July 1, according to official figures, to 304,000 tons, against 357,000 in 1914.

U. S. Steel Corporation earnings for the second quarter will be made public to-morrow, and estimates made on Saturday of the showing ran from below $5,000,000 to $30,000,000. Meanwhile new business is in good volume and higher prices continue to feature the current steel trade.

Canadian Financing in the United States since the first of the year totals $105,000,000.00.

Crown Prince Massing His Troops For a New Attack

LONDON, July 26.—Severe fighting is still going on in the Argonne and in the Vosges on the western battle front, but without bringing any very material changes in the positions of the opposing armies.

It is reported unofficially that the Germans are massing troops at St. Mihiel for a more extended offensive, but the official communications do not indicate that anything in the nature of a serious engagement has occurred there as yet. That the Germans will attempt an offensive here is considered by the military observers as quite likely, as they assert that the recent activity of the German Crown Prince's army shows that they are hoping to weaken the French hold on Verdun.

"Comparative quiet on the whole front" was reported last night by the French War Office, but during Thursday night and early Friday morning several lively engagements occurred. An attack by French forces in the forest of Le Pretre resulted in the Germans losing a part of the trenches they recently had seized in that region.

The Vosges Battle.

The fighting in the Vosges again centred around the Lingekopf and Barrenkopf, north of Muenster, where the battle appears to have become very confused, judging from the flatly contradictory nature of the French and German official statements. Each side states that the other penetrated the positions on the two peaks and was repulsed later after sanguinary hand-to-hand fighting. The French report, however, definitely states that the peaks at present are in the hands of the French troops, while the German report is vague on this point. Berlin also makes the curious assertion that the French were "ejected from their advanced positions" near Metzeral, and then goes on to announce that the Germans later evacuated these positions, "according to our plan, to avoid losses." The subtle purpose of the "plan" is not announced.

The Germans bombarded Pont-a-Mousson, on the Moselle, throughout Thursday night, this action being described as a reprisal for the recent French bombardment of places behind the German lines between the Meuse and the Moselle, where the Crown Prince is reputed to have been accumulating vast stores of war material.

Thursday night also was marked by the usual aerial raids and reconnais-

PATRICIAS HELD THE LINE
HAD NO TIME TO RETIRE, ONLY QUARTER OF NUMBER SURVIVED

BRITISH HEADQUARTERS, July 27.—Corporal Christy, the bear hunter, took particular pains with his shooting on that day of days, May 8, in the history of the Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry in Flanders. Instead of standing in the trench and resting his rifle on the parapet, when the Germans charged, he crawled out on the parapet. In keeping with Col. "Fanny" Farquhar's instructions that the way to end the war was by killing Germans, he was acting strictly according to instructions. No danger of his getting "buck fever." One bullet—one German! As he had no clerk along to keep count we shall never know how many he got.

The 4th of May was bad enough, a ghastly forerunner for the 8th. On the 4th the Princess Pats, after having been under shell fire throughout the second battle of Ypres, the "gas battle," were ordered forward to a new line to the southeast of Ypres. To the north of Ypres the British line had been driven back by the concentration of shell fire and the rolling, deadly march of the clouds of asphyxiating gas.

GERMANS WANT YPRES.

The Germans were still determined to take the town which they had showered with $4,000,000 worth of shell. It would be big news, the fall of Ypres as a prelude to the fall of Przemysl and of Lemberg. A wicked salient was produced in the British line ot the southeast by the cave-in to the north. It seems to be the lot of the Princess Pats to get ino salients. On the 4th they lost 28 men killed and 98 wounded from a grueling, all-day shell fire and stone walling. That night they got relief, and were out for two days, when they were back in the front trenches again. The 5th and 6th were fairly quiet: only three men killed and 17 wounded.

Start With 635 Men.

On the night of May 7th the Princess Pats had a muster of 635 men. This was a good deal less than half of the original total in the battalion, including recruits who had come out to fill the gaps caused by death, wounds and sickness.

The Germans were quiet that night, suggestively quiet. At 4.30 the prelude began; by 5.30 the German gunners had fairly warmed to their work. They were using every kind of shell they had in the locker. Every signal wire the Princess Pats possessed had been cut. The brigade commander could not know what was happening to them, and they could not know his wishes, except that it may be taken for granted that the orders of any British brigade commander are always to "stick it."

By noon there were as many dead and wounded in the Princess Pats' trench as there were men fit for action. Those unhurt did not have to be steadied by their superiors. Knocked down by a concussion they sprang up with the promptness and disgust of one thrown off a horse or tripped by a wire.

Reinforcements Cheered.

At 1.30 o'clock a cheer rose from that trench. It was for a platoon of the King's Royal Rifles, which had come as reinforcements. Oh, but that band of Tommies did look good to the Princess Pats. And the little prize packet that the very reliable Mr. Atkins had with him, the machine gun!

Making another tour of his trenches about 4 in the afternoon Niven found that there was a gap of fifty yards between his left and the right of the adjoining regiment. Fifty yards is the inch on the end of a man's nose in trench warfare on such an occasion. He was able to place eight men in the gap. At least they could keep a lookout and tell him what was going on.

It was not cheering news either to learn a little later that the regiments on his left had withdrawn to trenches about three hundred yards to the rear, a long distance in trench warfare. But the Princess Pats had no time for retirement.

The Supreme Effort.

Now was the supreme effort. It was as a nightmare in which only the objective of effort is recalled and all else is a vague struggle of all the strength one can exert against smothering odds. The Princess Pats shot at Germans. After a night without sleep, after a day among their dead and wounded, after the torrents of shell fire, after breathing smoke, dust and gas, these veterans were in a state of exaltation, entirely unconscious of dangers of their surroundings, mindless of what came next, automatically shooting to kill, as they were trained to do, even as a man pulls with every ounce of strength he has in him in the crucial test of a tug of war.

The Germans got possession of a section of the Princess Pats' trench, where, it is believed, no Canadians were left alive. But the German effort died there. It could get no farther. This was as near to Ypres as the Germans were to go in this direction. When the day's work was done and there, in sight of the field scattered with German dead, the Princess Pats counted their numbers; of the 635 men who had begun the fight at daybreak 150 men and four officers, Niven, Papineau, Clark and Vandenburg remained fit for duty.

HALTED AND THROWN BACK

Von Hindenburg's Forces Fail in Attempt to Drive Russians Back Upon the River Bug.

A STUBBORN COMBAT

Special Morning Cable:

PETROGRAD, July 27.—Von Hindenburg has been halted and thrown back in an attempt to drive the Russians back upon the river Bug defences, north of Warsaw, the War Office announced in an official statement early to-day.

"After a stubborn combat, the enemy forces who crossed the Narew south of Rozan and were advancing southward toward the Bug, have been repulsed and driven back from Ozh to Olsanki," said the official statement.

"South-east of the fortress of Pultusk, other forces of the enemy who succeeded in rossing the arew were repulsed in their attacks on our positions at the river Prout, seven miles north of the Bug.' All German attacks on the Narew front in the last 24 hours have been unsuccessful."

Minor outpost fighting is occurring around Ivangerod and Novo Georgiewsk.

Continuing their campaign to sweep the Black Sea of Turkish shipping and cut off supplies en route for Constantinople, the Russian Baick Sea warships have sunk forty small sailing vessels laden with coal in the last 48 hours, it was announced to-day.

Advices received here say that the plight of the Turks is growing desperate. By wrecking coal docks on the Asia Minor coast and destroying coal carriers, the Russian fleet has made it necessary to shut down many Turkish factories, and railways and munition works for lack of coal.

Travellers arriving at the Russian frontier say it may be necessary to shut down the Constantinople waterworks.

Serbian Writer's Glowing Tribute To England

The following eloquent tribute to England, moving in its expression of the deep faith which the smaller nationalities have in our country, and inspiring in its incentive to act in the present according to the traditions of a great past, is from the pen of a Serbian writer, M. Lazare Kossovac, and has been contributed to the official Serbian journal, Samouprava:

The English people are silent, but it is remarkable that when these northern men begin to speak they are more eloquent than we of the south. More eloquent is Macaulay than Mirabeau, and Carlyle than Renan, and Gladstone than Mazzini. As if the chill northern mists pressed upon the mouth, their thoughts come to the tongue and go back again from the tongue unexpressed. Englishmen are thoughtful and silent. Never was this island more silent, more thoughtful, or more busy than it is now. The war has given to the whole of Great Britain a solemn aspect. As I stepped upon British soil at Folkestone, I felt as though I had entered Westminster Abbey. All this island is transformed into an abbey; every man is silent, thoughtful, and busy.

DETERMINATION INCREASED

In the Dardanelles five great battleships have gone down. In the southern lands such losses would cause countless comments; but they cause Englismen to become only more silent, thoughtful and busy. In the Atlantic there was committed the "superman" crime of the Lusitania, which like some vast sarcophagus was laid on the floor of the deep. But in England, as the news arrives, lips are only pressed more tightly, the brain is more intensely concentrated, and tasks are more bravely seized. The Zeppelins make daily competition with their brothers the submarines in the destruction of private property and of unarmed and innocent people. At home poisonous bombs may fall from airships, while poisonous gases evoke the heroic men in the trenches. Day by day appear the long columns of killed and wounded. But the granite island is silent, thoughtful and busy. Thus it makes answer to all calamity.

RULING THE WAVES.

The English have to-day a veritable sea-dominion from Pole to Pole. If their duty of the allies was to free the waters they have done that duty brilliantly. To-day a Serbian can embark at Salonika, and travel through Suez to the Antipodes, around the globe and back through Gibraltar to Salonika again. During the whole journey he will travel upon the friendly English green sea-fields. English power upon the waters was never realized in such measure—and so effectively—as now. Never was there in history upon land such power as the English are exercising now upon the waters. You will say "the waters are only a highway, nothing more.' No the waters are more than a highway.' They represent nine-tenths of the best strategic positions, which thanks to these Britons, are now in our possession: but which without these Britons, has certainly been in German hands.

The free highway of the sea precludes the allies from starvation: makes possible the transport of men and munitions, and transforms what would otherwise be widely scattered parts into a well knit and inseparable whole. Imagine if it were not so: imagine if the Germans had such dominion on the waters! Their battleships would now be at Salonika, Kronstadt, Vladivostock, at Naples, Marseilles and Odessa, at Jaffa and Bombay. Then from all these sides would creep the German hosts: and who knows how many tribes and nations would now be fighting against us on the Prussian side? It is indeed our happiness that these nine-tenths of the best strategic positions the English are holding now and not the Germans.

PARIS, July 27.—Desultory fighting is taking place at many points to-day, but there are no serious changes.

British Losses Total 330,995

Figures for the Army are Complete to July 18 and Show a Total Loss in Killed, Wounded and Missing of 321,889

NAVAL LOSSES 9,106

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, July 27.—British losses in the war thus far including both her military and naval forces, total 330,995, Premier Asquith stated to-day in printed reply to a query put to him in Parliament.

The figures for the army are complete to July 18 and show a total loss in killed, wounded and missing of 321,889. The figures for the navy are complete to July 20.

The heaviest losses suffered by the army, naturally were in fighting in Northern France and Flanders, where the total losses were 11,254 officers and 255,649 men. These losses were divided as follows:

Officers—3,288 killed, 6,803 wounded, and 1,153 missing.

Men—46,373 killed, 156,366 wounded, and 50,909 missing.

The Dardanelles losses, including both land and naval forces, total 48,239, indicating that the fighting along the sands of the Gallipoli Peninsula has been as furious as in any other battle area in Europe. These losses are divided as follows:

Officers—567 killed, 1,379 wounded, and 196 missing.

Men—7,567 killed, 28,135 wounded, and 10,892 missing.

The army losses in all theatres of war, including particularly the operations in German South-west Africa, total 5,448, divided as follows.

Officers— 145 killed, 248 wounded and 22 missing.

Men —1,445 killed, 3,247 wounded and 641 missing.

The navy's losses, exclusive of those in the Dardanelles land operations, are divided as follows:

Officers—480 killed, 87 wounded and 29 missing.

Men—7,430 killed, 787 wounded and 274 missing.

FIGHTING IS VERY SERIOUS IN POLAND

Terrible Struggle In Wilds Of Mountain Lake Results In Brutal Murder of Trapper

TORONTO, July 27.—News of a terrible struggle in the wilds of Mountain Lake, which culminated in the brutal murder of Harry S. Brown, a trapper, reached the headquarters of the Ontario Provincial Police yesterday morning. A report from Provincial Constable Campbell, following his return from the scene of the tragedy, contains the details of the crime. One man has been placed under arrest in connection with the case and a search is being made for his partner. The police suspect that the missing trapper may also have been murdered.

DEAD LONG TIME.

On June 23 a trapper named Wm. M. Salt reported to Provincial Constable Campbell at Fort Frances that he had discovered the badly-decomposed body of a man lying in a shack at Mountain Lake. The officer secured a guide and made a three day trip to the scene, taking Salt with him. He found the shack near an abandoned lumber camp. The door of the shack was locked from the outside by means of a padlock and staple. The officer removed the staple, and entered.

A TERRIBLE STRUGGLE

Signs of a terrific struggle were at once evident. In one corner of the room he found the body of Brown covered by more than twenty sacks. The remains were badly decomposed. Near the door were large splotches of blood and a trail of blood led from the door to the palce where the body lay. Constable Campbell also found a revolver holster belonging to Brown, and several revolver shells lay nearby. On the table was a bottle half filled with whiskey. There were blood stains on the bottle where it had been hld by someone and sticking to these stains were pieces of lint from the sacks covering Brown.

WAS A MASON.

On examination the constable found that one bullet of .41 calibre had penetrated the right breast. A gold ring was on one finger and a Masonic ring on the other. A gold watch and chain with the Masonic emblem was also found on the body. The officer then wrapped the remains in oil cloth and brought them to Mine Centre.

When questioned Salt stated that he had passed by the shack last April with a man named Tony Ross, who was a partner with him in trapping. They had not seen Brown at the time. Since then Salt had lost track of Ross according to the story that he told the police, and did not know where the latter had gone.

WHERE IS ROSS

On his way to Mountain Lake, Constable Campbell found Salt's canoe in the lake upside down. He searched for the body of Ross but failed to find it. It then appeared as if Ross had either left the country or else had met his death in some way and his body was at the bottom of the lake.

A postmortem examination showed that four bullets had penetrated the body of Brown, one of them having passed through the chest and out the back while the other three remained inside. All the bullets were of .41 calibre. The police also found $34 in cash on the remains.

SALT UNDER ARREST.

Salt was later placed under arrest by Constable Campbell. When asked how he had found Brown's body without entering the shack he said that he had forced the staple off and had then put it back in its place before reporting it to the police.

The theory of the police is that Brown's assailant came to his shack and a quarrel over furs or traps resulted. A hand to hand battle ensued and the assailant seized Brown's gun and shot him four times. He then made sure his victim was dead, covered the body over with sacks, took a drink of whiskey from the bottle and left the shack, locking the door from the outside.

Italian Nation Favours Full Participation in War

ROME, via London, July 15—When Italy declared war on Austria, and immediately began progressing with unexpected rapidity. Trentino was to be occupied in ten days and Trieste in twenty, a prophecy which has gone the way of many others during the last twelve months. Italy went to war to wipe off a long-standing score against Austria. That undoubtedly was the primary motive; but she drew the sword also inspired with the higher ideals of humanity.

Italy's participation in the war reveals an interesting psychological problem. Before war broke out, Italian public opinion, a reasoned and gradually formed opinion, had grown into being, without any governmental inspiration.

The strength and tendency of that sentiment were proved by the attitude of the people during the two days that the Salandra crisis lasted. Italians had made up their minds then that it was a war which no German or internal intrigues could keep them out of; now that they are in it public opinion is undoubtedly moulding itself in favour of the fullest participation warranted by the military and naval power of the nation.

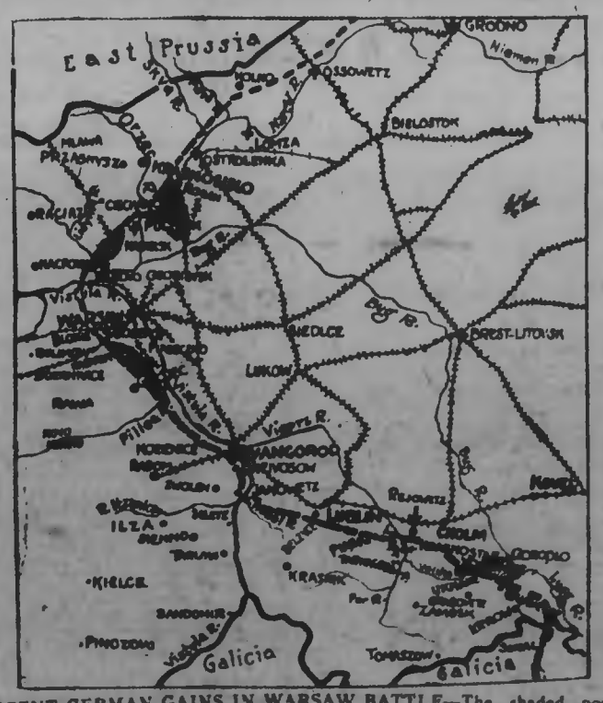
For ten months she had watched the progress of the most terrible war in history, a war disgraced on one side by the employment of methods repugnant to the traditions of chivalry boasted by the profession of arms. She knew that war was a costly enterprise both in the lives of men and the expenditure of money.

Her women folk, more profoundly horrified by tales of slaughter than men usually are, were as keen as any Italian patriot for the entry in line of their country by the side of the Allies, though they knew that another ghastly harvest of death garnered on a fresh field of battle might mean the loss of their means of support—and, worse, irreparable bereavement.

And now the women of Italy are organizing and working to do their part at home for the national war, while men are speculating how Italy's strength can be best employed to secure victory, not only against Austria, but in the wider field of the European war.

The first thought is to help the Allies in the Dardanelles. Co-operation there seems natural, and, besides, the prospect accords with the political aspirations of the kingdom in the Eastern Mediterranean. Until an effective blow is struck in that quarter Italians look forward to the continuance of Austro-German intrigues in the Balkans and the development of inter-State rivalries which may end in negativing the value of any intervention in that quarter. It is not so much however, the direction in which these new activities are contemplated as the fact that these does exist in Italy a spirit of enthusiasm in favour of the ideals for which the Allies are fighting.

It is true that many of the newspapers in their headings make a distinction between "Our War" and "The War," but the Italians know that ultimate success is bound up with fate of the Allied forces in half a dozen different theatres of operation, and are taking a much wider view of the future than is indicated in the scope of their own military intervention so far as one is able to judge it up to the present.



RECENT GERMAN GAINS IN WARSAW BATTLE—The shaded portion of the map shows the slight gains made by Von Hindenburg's forces in their fight for Warsaw. The Bug River may be the scene of the real battle to decide the fate of Warsaw. Further south Von Mackensen has been unable to pierce the Russian lines.

German Prisoners Boys, Says Letter

HARTFORD, Conn., July 26—In a letter to his cousin, B. Gordon Hunter, of this city, Gray Blackburn, who is with the British Army in France, says the Germans taken prisoners in the fighting about Neuve Chapelle are mere boys. He writes as follows:

"We have undermined the Huns from our last trench. It is a weird proceeding, the engineers having to work on their backs, as the tunnel is only two by two feet. It happened last night—what we all had been expecting for a fortnight. All this time troops and guns were being gathered up here.

"Yesterday afternoon we were moved out of the convent. At ten minutes to 7 o'clock we were told what was going to happen. We waited, silent, till just before seven o'clock, and then an English aeroplane came over our heads. On the stroke of seven a red flare was sent up from it as a signal. My God! It was awful.

"Up went the hill with the Germans, blown up by mines, and crash went our big guns. Neuve Chapelle lasted half an hour. The German prisoners started away this morning. They all are mere boys. We really felt sorry for them; it was so terrible for them last night. But at the same time we bore in mind it was what they did to our men at Mons. It is pitiful to see the old men and women flying for shelter. One poor old woman of eighty was trying to run. I thought she would die of fright."

HELD 8,000 OPERATIONS.

PARIS, July 26—The surgical record of the war is held by Dr. Rutaca of the Jaggersdorf hospital, who performed more than 8,000 operations between November of last year, and June

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

"He was a wonderful bright boy, but full of mischief," went on Isaac. "His mother provided a private teacher for him who was a personal friend of mine, and she told me herself that she made him take nearly two years' work in one. I saw him often for I was interested in the same work as his mother; but he has changed a lot and I didn't recognize him. I did recognize the photygraph, though, and of course I studied about how it got there. Then it become plain that Tom Smith and Lester Mortimer were the same, and so I sent for his mother at once."

"Why didn't you send for his father?" asked Red.

"His father is a very ordinary man," sez Isaac. "He never engages in public work. He is a man of means and shrewd in business, but he is selfish and does not lend his talents to the broader field."

"Just one of these old-fashioned stupids who haven't any business to mind except their own, hnh?" sez Red. "Well, just as soon as the Begum clears out, I intend to invite him out here and I'll show him a good time. I'll get him boilin' full, call him by his nick-name, quarrel with him, let him lick me 'til he's plumb tuckered out, and then throw myself on his mercy and beg him to spare my life. The' ain't nothin' in life so depressin as ingrowin' self-respect, and I'll bet he's suffered with it ever since she euchered him out of his own name."

After a time, Shorty was able to see that, takin' everything into consideration, Isaac couldn't have done anything else and so we wandered up to the house, and got there just as a feller arrived on hoss-back with word from Bradin that a big bunch o' rustlers were collectin' up in the Beaver Crick brakes, and that now was the time to make a clean-up, and for us to send as many as we could spare. I told Jim that I had promised Tom Smith to go with him on a life and death journey, but that I lidn't know a thing about the country up Beaver Crick way and that Phil McLaughlin could go as well, so he, Missourie, Mex and the two Jones boys left as soon as they could saddle up.

Red and Shorty began to howl about what would be left for them to do, so Jim sent Flames over to get the Hagus boys, and I milled around and wondered if Tom Smith's mother was also goin' to get her rope on Tim Smith's neck, and add to my troubles.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SIX.
The Palo Duro Canon.

While I was studyin' over whether or not Tom Smith would have the grit to shake off the Begum, or whether he was just one o' those men which any woman at all can wrangle, I heard the voice of the Begum bullyin' her son in a way to take the heart out of any man.

"Oh, Lester, Lester dear," wailed the Begum; "you're not going to leave me again. Oh, you couldn't have the heart to do that, you couldn't, you couldn't! You have no idee how hard it has been for me here at this lonely place—and now, and now—"

The door opened and Tom Smith stepped out with his face lookin' like a piece o' granite, and the Begum was hangin' to him with the tears streamin' down her cheeks. Her hair was mussed, her clothes were mussed, her features were mussed, but she didn't care two-bits. I felt as though I was the member of a gang organized to kid-nap infants, and Jim he broke for cover like a fox; but Tom Smith's face didn't change a line.

He gently removed his mother's hands, kissed her once on the brow, and headed for the corral with long, quick steps while I followed after tryin' to look as though I had no idea what he was up to. For one moment I thought the Begum was goin' to rush out and capture me, but she turned and went sobbin' into the house, and then I knew that Tom Smith would go through whatever was before him.

After we'd got away he headed south and west. "Aren't you goin' to stop at the Horse-shoe?" sez I.

"What for?" sez he, bitin' it off as though breath cost him a dollar a quart.

I felt the way ya do after havin' took pity on a stranger who seemed about all in, and then to have him shove the bottle back in your face and preach temprence to ya 'til you wished he'd ketch delirium trimmins from drinkin' boiled water. "Oh," sez I, "I thought mebbe you'd like to know something of how she'd feel whichever way this meetin' with the Banty woman happened to pan out; but 'tain't nothin' to me."

"I'm not bargainin' with Kate," sez he loftly. "I said good-by to her last night; and if I ever do see her again, it won't be as Tom Smith."

"Who then?" sez I, as innocent as a dove.

"Why, Lester Mortimer," sez he, droppin' down a peg.

"I thought the' was another joint to it," sez I.

"I reckon that's enough," he grumbled, from the very dirt floor of his voice, and I dropped behind him to grin a little. It allus made him scringe to have me speak of the Banty woman in the tone I used when I wanted to make him scringe, and I had a notion that flauntin' his full name wouldn't soothe him much; but he should have learned by this time not to put on any of his lookin'-glass airs with me, 'cause I didn't claim to be a gentleman.

Jim now, he was a gentleman, the old hermit said so, and told me as how ya could tell. He said, a gentleman was one who knew exactly how to take revenge for small impositions, but who passed up the chance with a smile. The Begum had rode Jim's soul more rough-shod than she had even Shorty's, but he had allus treated her the way he'd like to a'a' had his own mother treated, even if she wasn't rightly balanced.

We rode silent till we got to Tom Smith's mound, where he gave the Mexican boy a note to send to his unknown boss the first chance he had, and then we turned our hosses loose, cooked us a meal, caught up some fresh ponies, and pushed on again, and I began to hunt for the nospicion that old Josiah was the real owner o' those goats, he havin' done all his dickerin' through old Corrigan.

All afternoon we rode and from time to time I'd pinch myself to think of the show I had made of myself in givin' that boy ridin' instructions. He not only knew how to stick on a hoss which is one thing, but he knew how to get out of a hoss what the hoss had in him, and yet not worry the hoss, which is quite another and a blame sight scarcer article.

We rode until well into the night, and I figgered that we had checked up close to seventy miles. Then we et another meal, took off the saddles, and had a quiet smoke, after which we threw the saddles on again and did some more ridin'. Finally we came to a sheltered cove and here we turned the ponies loose and cached our leather.

"How long 'd you sleep if you went to sleep?" sez he.

"'Till the dawn breeze," sez I.

"You'd have to run truer 'n that to do well on the road," sez he; "but sleep in peace; I'll wake in plenty of time."

He was asleep before I was, but not much, and it seemed to me only about two blinks before he shook me awake again, and I began to hun for the hoss furniture. "Never mind," sez he, "we foot it the rest o' the way."

I scrambled along after him and presently we started to go down, then we went down, and after this we kept on goin' down. After a feller has reachin' out his foot in search of the bottom for twelve or fifteen hours it gets monotonous, and I whispered: "I've allus heard it was hot at the centre of the earth, but I can't feel no change."

"Shsh," sez he.

We were crawlin' down the side of a wall and I could see the start up above and hear a bold-runnin' stream down below, but these were all the comforts of life I had left, and it was mighty peaceful when we finally reached the level. We followed the wall along to the right and finally rounded a crag and saw the embers of a fire and several pine shelters, out of which we saw two pairs of socks stickin'.

Tom Smith looked things over and then tolled me to the crag and helped me climb on to it. It was flat on top and some bushes grew in the loose dirt which had settled there.

"You are to be the messenger," sez he, "and you have no part in whatever may follow; so don't interfere whatever happens."

What to Do to Get Fat and Increase Weight

The Real Cause of Thinness—A Physician's Advice.

Most thin people eat from four to six pounds of good solid fat making food every day, and still do not increase in weight one ounce, while on the other hand many of the plump, chunky folks eat very lightly and keep gaining all the time. It's all bosh to say that this is the nature of the individual. It isn't nature's way at all.

Thin folks stay thin because their powers of assimilation are defective. They absorb just enough of the food they eat to maintain life and a semblance of health and strength. Stuffing won't help them. A dozen meals a day wont make them gain a single "stay there" pound. All the fat producing elements in their food just stay in the intestines until they pass from the body as waste. What such people need is something that will prepare these fatty food elements so that thir blood can absorb them and deposit them all about the body—something, too, that will multiply their red blood corpuscles, and increase their blood's carrying power.

For such a condition I always recommend eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is not, as some believe, a patented drug, but is a scientific combination of six of the most effective and powerful flesh building elements known to chemistry. It is absolutely harmless, yet wonderfully effective and a single tablet eaten with each meal often has the effect of increasing the weight of a thin man or woman from three to five pounds a week. Sargol is sold by all good druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back.

TO REMOVE STAINS

THE summer season is the time of year when so many dainty frocks come in contact with stains of various descriptions. If one is not familiar with methods of removing such stains, a dress will often be ruined after an outing, such as the annual picnic. During the hot weather, mildew is apt to destroy the clothes if they are allowed to remain damp too long. Then every household has experienced the effects of such stains as coffee, tea, fruit, paint, iron rust, etc. Below we give some "spot removers," and would suggest that these be clipped and placed in a scrap book or some convenient place to which they may be referred in case of necessity:

Grass Stains—Cotton goods, soak the stain in kerosene and launder at once or wash the stain in alcohol or ammonia and water; silk or wool goods, cover stain with chloride of tin and wash at once, press dry.

Mildew—Cotton or linen goods, soak the stain in one-half pint of water to which has been added one tablespoonful of lemon juice and one teaspoonful of oxalic acid, or use Javelle water, aided with bleaching, or use buttermilk; woollen goods, use diluted ammonia water.

Iron Rust—Rub the spot with lemon juice, salt and sun bleach it. Repeat the process if necessary. Oxalic acid may be used if neutralized afterward with ammonia water; wash the goods well. When using strong acids stretch the fabrics over a bowl of water, thus controlling the spread of the acid.

Blood Stain—Wash the fabric in cool water until the water remains colorless, then wash it in lukewarm soapy water. Hydrogen peroxide with ammonia will remove old blood stains.

Paint or Varnish—Dissolve the spot with turpentine, benzine or gasoline. Alcohol will wash away linseed oil.

Fruit Stains—These should be removed as soon as possible. Stretch the fabric over a bowl and pour boiling milk or hot alcohol on the spot. Heat the alcohol over hot water.

Coffee or Tea Stains—Pour on the spots boiling water from a height. Glycerine is a solvent for the coloring matter.

Scorch—Unless a very deep burn, wash and hang fabric in sunshine. Repeat until stain disappears.

Axle or Auto Grease—Rub butter or lard into the stain, let stand 15 minutes, wash in the usual manner.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE EVIL EYE

A Tale of the Sea

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

Jim Butterworth, a sailor, while ashore with a liberty party at Tangier got into a row with a Mohammedan snake charmer and had an eye gouged out. Jim was not overparticular about his looks, but tired of answering questions about how he lost his eye. The orifice left after the eye had been eliminated was certainly shocking to behold and caused every one who came near him to shudder. He wore a green patch over it for awhile, but found it very troublesome to keep in position. One day a shipmate said to him:

"Jim, why don't you get an artificial eye put in your face?"

"What's that?" asked Jim.

"Why, an eye made of glass painted to look just like a real eye. They make 'em so fine you can't tell 'em from the real thing."

"Where do you get 'em?"

"Oh, at any respectable port. They sell 'em in the shops."

The next port the vessel Jim had signed with stopped at was Naples. As soon as Jim was permitted to go ashore he took two or three of his shipmates with him, went to one of the shopping streets, and the party stopped at an optician's. The shopkeeper brought out a tray full of artificial eyes and set it before the sailors for selection.

Jim's single natural eye was a dark brown, but it did not seem to occur to any of the party that the artificial eye should be of the same color as the real one. One recommended a blue, another a steel gray, another a black with a superfluity of red in it. Doubtless the artist who had painted in the colors had done his best to make the glass resemble real eyes, but the best was by no means good. Indeed, some of them were soulless, some wild, and a number were well fitted to express insanity.

The shopkeeper, realising that the sailors were about to make a mistake in the selection, picked up a brown eye, the nearest match to Jim's remaining eye, and offered it as the one best suited to the case. But Jim's mates scoffed at it.

"Wot?" cried one of them. "Put that thing into his head? You might as well give him an eye from a dead man."

"There's a dandy," said another, taking one of a greenish hue with a tinge of red from the tray and holding it up beside Jim's natural eye. "There's some expression in that eye. You'd clean out the sultan's harem with it, Jim. No woman could resist you."

Jim took it and stood before a mirror, holding it in position to see how it would look in its proper place.

"Mates," he said, "if you all agrees that it's wot's wanted I'll take it, but I don't believe any of you would stand your ground at meetin' me wearin' it on the fo'c'sle on a dark night with the lightnin' playin' round."

"It's a jim dandy," replied one.

"A beaut!" cried another.

"It reminds me of the eyes of a gal I fell in with at Madeira," said another.

"Well," said Jim, "since you all agrees that it's becomin' and I brought you 'ere for your opinions I reckon all I've got to do is to plank down the price."

The shopkeeper was willing to part with the artistic production for the sum of 10 lire, which Jim produced; the vender adjusted it in Jim's eye, and the party departed to enjoy themselves in a neighboring wine shop.

When the men returned to the ship Jim found that his artificial eye attracted more attention than the empty socket. But when he asked his shipmates their opinion as to the looks of his "new eye" they all pronounced it "one o' the finest blinkers afloat."

The eye not having been put into the socket by a skilled surgeon was not very comfortable, and Jim soon sought relief in wearing it in his pocket instead of in his face. Then he fell to alternating between the glass eye, the patch and the empty socket. The crew gradually became accustomed to the "blinker," but the time never came when it ceased to excite comment. And whenever Jim went ashore, no matter at what port, his eye excited the astonishment and often the terror of the inhabitants. Children especially would flee from him, bawling. As to the girls, Jim never found a sweetheart in any land while wearing it, except on the African coast.

But a day came when all this was changed; when Jim's eye was an object of worship by both the officers of the ship and his messmates; when Jim was as proud of his glass eye as if it had been a decoration.

One day the Mary Robinson was sailing under a four knot breeze in the Malay archipelago, when the captain raised a glass and brought it to bear on a dhow on his starboard quarter. This archipelago has always been dangerous water, being a favorite region for pirates. The dhow under the glass did not improve. Captain Wainwright could see the decks crowded with copper colored men, who were leaning over the bulwarks to get a glimpse of the Mary Robinson. The interest manifested argued that it was of a covetous kind. The captain well knew that if the crew did not have designs upon his ship they would not have paid any attention to it.

"Mr. Ruggles," he said to the first officer, "we're going to have trouble with that craft out there. Put on full sail. We may leave her behind."

"Aye, aye, sir," said the mate and gave the order as directed.

The Mary Robinson was a poor sailer, and there was a better breeze where the dhow was than with the other. The moment the ship hoisted all her canvas the dhow did the same and pointed to head off the Mary Robinson. It soon appeared that in this she would be successful.

The ship's crew soon saw what the upshot of the matter was and from the captain down were much frightened. They had no means of defense worthy of the name, a couple of six pound carronades and small arms. However, Captain Wainwright ordered the carronades loaded and provided with ammunition, of which there was a-plenty, and the muskets and cutlasses brought on deck. It was not probable that the pirates had any extensive armament, but there were so many of them that the danger was they would overpower their opponents by force of numbers.

The pirate drew nearer, and in time the men on her decks could be seen brandishing their weapons and by their looks indicated that they were anticipating an easy prey. The crew of the ship showed no signs of what they felt within, which was that in case they were captured every man of them would either be cut down in cold blood or forced to walk the plank. Naturally every man felt that it was incumbent upon him to fight to the death. Every available weapon was brought into requisition, even to caldrons of boiling water. There were but twenty-six men in all for defense, including the officers.

The ship and the dhow were converging to a meeting. As soon as the latter got within range she opened a port, there came a puff of smoke, and a round shot went tearing through the bowsprit chains. Captain Wainwright had ordered his carronades to be placed on that side of the ship and replied, sending a shot into a crowd of copper colored villains standing against the gunwale. This opened the fight, the pirate craft edging constantly nearer, and men could be seen from the Mary Robinson getting grappling irons ready to use for boarding purposes.

This the white men dreaded on account of the superiority in numbers of the pirates. They might kill as many Chinamen as themselves and double the number would remain. Captain Wainwright would have sheered off if possible, but his ship was as close hauled to the wind as she could get without going about. However, when the pirate came within a cable's length the tiller was put hard down, and the Mary Robinson swung round and stood off at a right angle with the pirate's course.

The dhow followed this maneuver, though not at once. For awhile she kept on her course and since she was a faster sailer than the other gained leeway. It was evident that she would grapple the Mary Robinson on the next tack. Having made what gain she required, she swung round and sailed on a course to head off her enemy. Captain Wainwright, seeing that when the two met his ship would be boarded, called the crew aft and said to them:

"Men, if those cutthroats board us we are all doomed. See to it that the first man doesn't get aboard alive."

When the two vessels met their prows formed a right angle. Every man on the Mary Robinson was on the forecastle armed either with a cutlass or a loaded musket (if it were within reach) except Jim Butterworth, who preferred an ax. He took position as first man and waited with his weapon high in the air to cut off the hand or cleave the skull of the first would be boarder. A powerful Malay stood at the head of the pirates ready to jump the moment the ships touched.

Suddenly the advanced pirate was seen to shrink away as though he had seen something to take the stiffening out of him. Jim saw at once that it was his glass eye. Lifting a hand he removed it and made a motion to throw it at the Chinaman, who shrank back, pushing his followers to the rear. Jim returned the eye to the socket. Others among the Chinamen by this time had become impressed with what they considered the evil eye and those in front crowded to the rear.

"Give em a volley!" roared Jim.

Every white man dropped his cutlass and seizing a musket poured a couple of dozen bullets into the throng of pirates crowded on the forecastle of the dhow, dropping a goodly number of them. A cry was raised by the pirates which was not understood by the white men, but in English it meant:

"The evil eye!"

Jim unloosened a grappling iron that had been fastened to the ship's forward gunwale, and slowly the dhow sheered off, Jim staring at the pirates with his glass eye while every man of them was trying to hide himself from its evil influence.

The two vessels became separated and the pirates did not return. As soon as it was evident that the crew of the Mary Robinson was saved all hands crowded around Jim, those nearest to him embracing him. Then all gave way to Captain Wainwright, who, taking Jim by the hand, said:

"Men, the first man who cracks a joke at Butterworth's glass eye will receive punishment to the full extent of what maritime law allows me as master of this vessel. That eye has saved every mother's son of us from death at the hands of the yellow varmints. He will hereafter be third mate and in future will be addressed as Mr. Butterworth, and don't you forget it."

Cheers greeted this speech and grog was served to the crew.

Many Children Die
From Summer Complaint

When They Could Be Saved By Using
DR. FOWLER'S
Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Mrs. Guy R. Rhyns, Middle Clyde, N.S., writes: "Last summer my little boy Ross, then a year old, had summer complaint. He was so bad the waste matter from the bowels looked as if it had come from a broken boil. I live some distance from a doctor, but I sent word to him to come as soon as he could. In the meantime I gave him Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and he gradually grew better after the first two doses, and after using all the bottle he was cured. I am the mother of three children, and I could not get them through the long summer months without it."

Thousands of families throughout Canada and the United States have used this sterling remedy during the past 70 years and have always found it a "friend in need."

When you ask for "Dr. Fowler's" see that you get "Dr. Fowler's." Don't accept some no name, no-reputation medicine which some dealer may say is "The same" or "Just as good."

There will be spare wheels, spare poles, spare gun parts, spare saddlery and harness to an enormous quantity. And all this mass of paraphernalia is required to maintain in the field only 41,000 men.

ENGLAND'S NEEDED MEN

Twelve Leaders Selected Make Interesting List—Lloyd-George First

A London newspaper offered a prize for a list of twelve men who could be spared least at this critical period of England's history. Readers of the newspaper named twelve leading Britons and the winner of the competition was a woman, whose forecast of the voting was adjudged the most nearly correct. The popularity of English leaders may be estimated from this list of twelve who obtained the greatest number of votes in the order named:

David Lloyd-George.
Earl Kitchener.
H. H. Asquith.
Sir John French.
Sir John Jellicoe.
Sir Edward Grey.
Arthur J. Balfour.
Winston Churchill.
General Sir Ian Hamilton.
Andrew Bonar Law.
Sir David Beatty.
King George V.

Modern Service Bullets

It takes a bullet fired from the short Lee-Enfield rifle .338 seconds to travel 200 yards, 2.375 seconds to travel 1,000 yards, 6.367 seconds to travel 2,000 yards, and 10.820 seconds to travel 2,800 yards. The bullet is made on scientific principles, and is not, as many people believe, a mere piece of lead. It is a compound consisting of a cone containing 98 per cent. lead and 2 per cent. atimony, in an envelope of 80 per cent. copper and 20 per cent nickle. It is about one and a quarter inches long. The case is made of brass and contains a charge —31 grains of cordite in strands. The weight of ten rounds of ammunition is, roughly speaking, ten ounces.

When Hot Days Come
The Happy Coolness of Montserrat Lime Fruit Juice

This healthful, golden juice, with its snappy, fruity, aromatic flavour, is a summer necessity as well as a summer luxury. It keeps you well, it does you good; it supplies the pure fruit acid that the system needs. Else why is it supplied by the British Government in such large quantities to the Navy and the Expeditionary forces? The reason is, it keeps people healthy and is a most satisfying cooling beverage for a hot day.

MONTSERRAT LIME FRUIT JUICE is refined from cultivated Limes grown in the beautiful island of Montserrat.

All leading druggists and grocers have it. Get the genuine MONTSERRAT.

Italy Was to be Easy

"An amusing instance of German arrogance is related in Genoa," writes Mr. Donohoe in the Daily Chronicle. "The departing German Consul, on leaving his house, was observed to have no luggage, save two small handbags. The cabman asked if there were not some trunks, whereupon the pompous German replied: 'I will return for the remainder of the luggage together with my Emperor.'

"'In that case,' said the cabman, driving off, 'you had better wait here till he comes.'"

An English scientist believes there is an individuality in heart beats affecting the handwriting to such a degree that it can be identified when the writing is magnified.

ABOUT CONSCRIPTION

Compulsory Military Service Law Annually Suspended in Britain

That a form of conscription was introduced into the United Kingdom by the Ballot Act of 1860, which provides for all males over 5 feet, 3 inches, between the ages of eighteen and thirty to enlist if called upon for military service, will probably surprise many people. This form of conscription, however, is held in abeyance by an annual Act of Parliament, with the result that the United Kingdom and the United States are the only two Powers that do not compel military service.

In France liability for service extends from the age of twenty to forty-eight, no exception being allowed except for physical disability, although at one time a man with sufficient means could buy himself off or pay for a substitute. In Germany liability for military service commences at the age of seventeen and ends at the age of forty-five, but actual service begins at twenty. The term of service in the first line or active army is seven years, the next thirteen years being spent in the first and second ranks of the Landwehr, and finally German soldiers pass into the Landsturm, in which they remain until they reach the age of forty-five.

Service in the Italian army or navy is also compulsory and universal, the total period being nineteen years, beginning at the age of twenty. The term of service in the ranks of the permanent army is two years for all arms. After passing through the ranks, the men are placed on "unlimited leave," i.e., they are transferred to the reserve, in which they remain until they have completed a total of eight years' service. From the reserve the soldier passes to the mobile militia, the term of service in which is four years. After completing his term in the mobile militia, he is transfered to the territorial militia, in which he remains seven years, thus finishing his military service at the age of thirty-nine.

In Russia, too, compulsory military service begins at the age of twenty, and extends to the completion of the forty-third year. In Turkey liability for military service commences at twenty and lasts for twenty years. Certain sects, such as Jews and Christians, are exempt from conscription. Furthermore, compulsory service cannot be enforced in Arabia, while the Kurdish and Arab tribes in Asia Minor are also exempt.

There is no standing army in Switzerland, that country depending for defence upon the national militia. Service in this force is compulsory and universal, with few exceptions except for physical disability, those excused or rejected paying certain taxes in lieu of military service. Liability extends from the seventeenth to the end of the fortieth year.

Spaniards serve for twelve years, three with the colors, three with the reserve, and six in the Landsturm; while in Portugal, where the period of service is three years with the colors and two with the reserve, a man may buy freedom from service, the rules of exemption being many.

CANADA'S COOL VALOR

Wins High Praise of Guardsman on the Battlefield

The cool valor of the Canadians is described by Corporal O'Brien, 3rd Battalion, Coldstream Guards, in a letter to a friend at Battersea: "The Canadians went into the attack the other day just as if they were drilling in Hyde Park. Well, I never saw anything like it, each man keeping about two paces interval, going at a walking pace with dozens of Maxims turned on them, besides field artillery guns and the whole of the German rifle fire for about a mile in front of them.

"In fact, no better example could be shown of any regiment under the British flag, and it gives us better courage to know that we have such men to rely on."

The view Risboro lines, shows the married men's quarters of the camp, now filled with Canadian bachelors, while the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital at Beachborough, two and a half miles away, is the Elizabethan mansion which the Canadians and Anglo-Canadian residents of London presented to the War Office at the outbreak of war. Col. Donald Armour describes it as being "gloriously situated and an ideal place for convalescents."

No Man's Fool.

Before David faced Goliath he had to face the ridicule of his brothers, and that was harder. Once in Athens a man dropped a loaf of bread and was afraid to pick it up again for fear some one might make fun of him. To teach him a lesson Diogenes tied a cord around the neck of a bottle and dragged it through Athens. "Many people will laugh at you," said a man to the philosopher. "But I am not laughed down," Diogenes replied. That is the stuff of which David was made and all other heroes.—Christian Herald.

Had Given It.

Here is a good story of a popular English actor. He had gone to give an entertainment at the house of a nouveau riche. There was a dinner on. When he got there, to his amazement, he was shown into the servants' hall to wait. Their dinner was just on the table, so he accepted the butler's invitation and sat down to it with them. After the meal, at which he was particularly bright, he was at all through his program for the benefit of his hosts, the servants. He had hardly done when he was summoned to the drawing-room, to find the guests there solemnly seated in rows, waiting for him to commence.

"Commence?" he asked, with the bland smile for which he is noted. "Commence what? My little entertainment out? Oh, I see. Very sorry, but—it's over. I gave it, as I always do, where I dined. Good night."

Curran's Grim Joke.

"I cannot sing; I really cannot," protested the famous Lord Norbury of hanging fame" to a pretty and pressing hostess. "I have neither words nor voice."

"You are too modest, chief justice," said Curran, who was standing by, "for I know hundreds that have hung on your words and thousands that have been transported by your voice."

Too Horrible to Contemplate.

"No, Mr. Upp," Phyllis said, with a sigh, "I cannot marry you. I confess that I have much more than a friendly feeling for you, but suppose we were to marry and you should die and leave me in straitened circumstances and I should take in boarders and they should make a pun of my name as landlady, calling me Phyllis Upp?"—London Stray Stories.

IVORY PRODUCERS.

Curious Facts About the African Elephants.

The main supply of ivory is derived from the African elephant, and not from his Indian or Asiatic brethren. There are numerous differences between the two—the African beast being the larger, a foot taller, having bigger ears, a somewhat flatter head, and with four nails on each foot; whereas the Asiatic elephant has four nails on each hind foot and five on his fore feet.

It is the absence of tusks in the Asiatic elephant, or their partial development, which is the great difference. The tusks of the African elephant vary with the size or age of the animal.

They have no roots like the teeth of animals, "but fit firmly into what are called premaxillary sockets," and if we should examine this buried or hidden portion, we should find that it was partly hollow, so to speak, the ivory at the root being very thin and surrounding a pulp, where the ivory is being secreted.

As the animal increases in years the hollow in the tusk is filled up with solid material, and "in extremely old elephants it disappears entirely, and the tusk is solid ivory."

The dentine, as in the matured tusk, begins in a pulp cavity, which may be 10 inches or more long, imbedded in the skull, and this is soft.

Sometimes it happens that a ball has been fired at an elephant, which is imbedded in the softer portion of the tusk, and after a while is surrounded by the harder ivory. Such balls are sometimes found by ivory workers.

The true teeth of the elephant have a curious method of progression, "moving gradually forward from behind in regular succession; each old front tooth, as it is worn away, being pushed out of place by its successor."

The wear and tear on the teeth of this animated grinding-mill must be immense—a large Indian elephant consuming 800 pounds of green fodder in 18 hours.

An English officer in charge of elephants belonging to the Government found that for years the animals had been given 250 pounds of green fodder, and had been starved, because, through ignorance, the Government had fixed the rate. The elephant uses his tusks for attack and defence, but principally, in a wild state, to overturn trees of small growth, so that he can feed on their branches. Sir Samuel Baker measured mimosa trees four feet six inches in circumference and 30 feet high, which elephants had pulled down, and the damage they cause is almost incredible. These trees, however, have no deep root, and are comparatively easy to overthrow.

It is the trunk of the elephant which is its most remarkable feature. Cuvier estimated it as containing 40,000 muscles. It is both hand and nose.

Though the trunk is so useful, it is a very tender and delicate organ, and is not used in the rough manner generally supposed. "In making an attack, it is raised high in the air out of the way. When a great weight is lifted, it is not the trunk, but the tusks, which are employed, the former only holding the object upon the latter."

There are many facts in regard to elephants which are novel to readers. It is not generally known that there is a resemblance between the stomachs of the elephant and a camel, since both possess the power of storing water.

"Hunters have often been astonished at seeing elephants, which they have been chasing for some time, insert their trunks in their mouths, and there obtain a supply of water that is blown over their dry and heated body."

Fireless Locomotive.

The Admiralty recently purchased a fireless locomotive for service at one of the explosive depots, where absolute safety from fire is of the first importance. The locomotive, which resembles in appearance a miniature railway engine, minus the funnel, is without fire or heating apparatus of any kind. Its reservoir, which is partly filled with water, is charged with high-pressure steam from a boiler placed outside the danger zone. The locomotive can work on one charge of the reservoir for several hours on continuous hauling or for much longer time on ordinary shunting work. It will stand for twelve hours in ordinary open-air temperature, with small loss of steam, and can run back to the charging station under as low a steam pressure as 15 pounds per square inch. The locomotive is easily handled, and acts in exactly the same way as an ordinary steam engine. The rubbing surfaces, such as the brake blocks and buffers, are rendered sparkless by the use a special fasings.

HANDSOME HAND BAGS.

Fabrics and Leather Combined to Make Popular Accessories to the Toilet.

The smartest and newest hand bag is not a hand bag at all. It might better be called a hand box or a hand trunk, for it is a tiny square box of leather. Indeed, it is like a miniature jewel box.

On the top of the box, which opens with two flaplike covers that meet under the handle, is the owner's monogram in gold and silver.

The box is very tiny, but its square shape makes it possible to stow in its depths a surprising number of articles. To begin with, the box is fitted with a coin case for twenty-five cent pieces and a pocket for bills, a receptacle for lip salve, a powder box, a tiny mirror, a file and manicure scissors and several other dainty fittings that make its exploration interesting. Besides these, there is room for various other belongings.

The hand bags illustrated here are modish affairs of moire. They are simple in style and of colors to harmonize with the gown.

The Substitution.

It is a well known fact that both Sir Arthur Sullivan and Sir W. S. Gilbert had a horror of the titles of their operas becoming known until the very night of their performance. This fear that they might be forestalled created considerable confusion at the initial production of "Iolanthe; or, The Peer and the Peri." The opera was rehearsed for weeks under the title of "Perola." It was only at the dress rehearsal that the company was instructed to substitute the name Iolanthe for that of Perola wherever it occurred in the text or lyrics. It was no easy task to replace vocally and in the dialogue a name of three syllables for one of four. Sullivan, however, said (maybe aside to one or two of the actors who were nervous: "Go ahead and sing the music. Gilbert won't be in front" (Gilbert never attended the first night), "so use any name that you think of first if you are rattled. No one in the audience will be any wiser."

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Neuralgia.

Neuralgia is a functional disease of the nerve trunks characterized by paroxysms of intense pain. Many sufferers usually have warning of an approaching attack. There will be chilliness, depression of spirits and, perhaps, a tingling in the part affected. The most prominent symptom is pain, which is intense and of a stabbing, sharp character. The parts affected usually reveal nothing abnormal, although occasionally a distinct swelling may be seen. The attack may last from a few minutes to many hours. The treatment of this distressing disease consists first in searching for the cause and removing it when found. During an attack dry or moist heat may be applied to the affected part. Wrapping the head in flannel with a hot water bag against the flannel covering the painful part is very soothing. Hot water to the feet, or a hot mustard foothath, affords great relief sometimes. It is always best to undress and go to bed and try to sleep off the attack. The pain excites the nervous system greatly and the rest in bed is very helpful in lessening the weakness resulting from the intense pain and nervous strain.

UNCOOKED FOODS.

Desirable For Summer Use Since They Are Digested Easily.

To preserve the health in summer make the simple foods your first choice. In selecting fruit always give preference to that which has ripened on the parent stalk.

Bananas, for instance, should never be cut from the stalk as long as a speck of green remains. You can often buy bananas at half price because they are black. If they are not decayed they are much better food than yellow bananas.

Dates, figs and raisins are all good foods and can be used to good advantage as a summer food which requires no cooking. The unpressed figs are considered to be much cleaner than the pressed, and the seeded raisins are more desirable than the unseeded.

When buying apples pick the bright red ones which have ripened in the sunshine.

Other desirable foods for summer which require no cooking are ripe olives, nuts, peanut butter, milk, honey, fruits, celery, cabbage, lettuce, cucumbers, radishes, onions, tomatoes, cress, chives, cheese, berries, pears and plums.

Admirals of the Coast.

The recent German raid on the English coast recalls the fact that there are in the peerage a number of gentlemen who hold hereditary rank as admirals or vice-admirals of the coasts of different counties. Some of them, however, are well known for other reasons. Thus Lord Lonsdale is Hereditary Admiral of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and the Duke of Argyll holds the same rank in the Western Isles. Lord Londesborough, whose wife was actually in residence at her Scarborough house during the bombardment, is Vice-Admiral of the Yorkshire coast. Lord Mostyn is Vice-Admiral of North Wales and Carmarthenshire, Lord Mount Edgcumbe of Cornwall, Lord Ormonde of Leinster, Lord Stradbroke of Suffolk, Lord Yarborough of Lincolnshire, and there are others.

According to some of the old pictures, the patriarchs wore bath robes a long time before baths were invented.

THIS SCHOOL GIRL HAD BAD FAINTING SPELLS

Was Weak and Run Down. But Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Made Complete Cure

The most critical time in a girl's life comes during the school age, when she is impelled by rivalry to put forth her best efforts in studying for examinations. At the time she should have healthful outdoor exercise and abundance of fresh air, to keep the blood pure and rich, she is confined to her studies. Is it any wonder that she becomes run down in health and suffers from headaches, indigestion, loss of appetite and spells of weakness or fainting?

The case described in this letter is a good illustration and you can read here the splendid results of using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to help through this critical period.

"While attending school my daughter became weak and very much run down. She was frequently troubled with bad fainting spells, and nothing we tried seemed to do her any good. We were advised to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and did so with most satisfactory results. I am pleased to tell you that after using five boxes of the Nerve Food she was completely cured, and has no return of the fainting spells."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Hamilton Houston, Justice of the Peace.

The reason Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is so effective in cases of this kind is because of its extraordinary blood-forming influence. By creating an abundance of rich, red blood it strengthens the action of the heart, revitalizes the exhausted nerves and builds up the system in every way.

The appetite is restored, digestion improves, you rest and sleep well, and the new vigour and energy is felt in every organ of the human body. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is doing wonders for men, women and children whose systems have become weak and run down. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

MISSES' MIDDY BLOUSE.

By Anabel Worthington.

The middy blouse remains with us from year to year and in the pretty model which we have selected for illustration we have it brought up to date in every little detail.

As is usual with these blouses, it comes down far over the hips, and the lower edge of each side seam is left open and provided with a lacing, so that it may be adjusted to each individual figure.

The opening below the collar in front is short, and the edges of the neck opening are trimmed with a wide sailor collar. The opening at the neck is large enough to admit of slipping on the blouse over the head. The sleeves are inset with a slightly widened armhole, and they are full length, ending at the wrist with a band cuff or made shorter if preferred.

White linen and duck are liked for these blouses, and they are trimmed with colored braid. They are also made of serge or flannel and trimmed with silk as well as with braid.

The blouse pattern, No. 7,271, is cut in sizes 14, 16, 18 and 20 years. Medium size requires 2¾ yards of 36-inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

The Germans To Stick To Pirate Policy

Big Recruiting Campaign In Peterborough

INFANTRY IS IDLE ON FRENCH-FLANDERS LINE ARTILLERY TRYS A HAND

Long Range Bombardment by Both Sides Only Feature Reported To-day in the French Official Communique---German Under-Secretary Talks to United Press Correspondent---Says Germany Will Remain Firm in Regard to Submarines.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS (French Official Communique) July 27.—For the first time in several weeks, artillery duels along the sand dunes of the Belgian sea coast were reported in official despatches to-day.

The Germans shelled Furnes, behind the French lines, with their long range guns, and bombarded Oost Dunkirk, the famous seaside resort two and one-half miles from Nieuport, hurling shells all around the Grand Hotel.

During the night a German aeroplane dropped five bombs on Dunkirk, doing no damage.

In retaliation for these attacks, the French heavy artillery bombarded Westende and Middlekirk, held by the Germans, for several hours, with considerable effect.

The German artillery replied, and throughout yesterday and last night the roar of the big guns was heard all along the sea coast.

Scarcely any infantry fighting has occurred in the last twelve hours. The French have consolidated their positions at Linekopf by short charges, and are maintaining their positions against all German counter-attacks.

Skirmishes have occurred in the Argonne.

LONDON, Eng., July 27.—The Norwegian bark Barboe, of Christiania, was set on fire and destroyed by a German submarine Sunday afternoon. The crew was given ten minutes in which to collect their belongings and take to the boats.

ROME, July 27.—Fano, a noted Italian watering place, has again been bombarded by Austrian warships and aircraft. The damage is not serious.

—LONDON, Eng., July 27.—The Danish steamer Nogill has been submarined in the North Sea.

The Nogill's crew landed at Wilhelmshaven.

The trawler Honaria was another submarine victim reported in the despatches this afternoon. She was sunk in the North Sea and her crew landed at Kirkwell.

LONDON, Eng., July 27.—The magnitude of the German enveloping movement in the eastern field now is absorbing the attention of the British officials and public. The latest reports show that General Von Buelow's 30,000 cavalry have turned southward from Riga and are within 80 miles of the railway connecting Petrograd with Warsaw.

The Times believes the operations are a real danger, not alone to Warsaw, but to the whole system of railway defences of which the city is the centre, and that it now is apparent that the Germans are planning to envelop the entire Russian army in this region. The newspaper points out that the fall of Warsaw will have grave significance for the west, as it will mean that Russia's power to resume a successful offensive will have been indefinitely postponed, and that the principal bases for offensive operations will be in the hands of Germany.

WILL STICK TO SUBS.

(By Carl W. Ackerman)

(Copyright 1915, by the United Press, Copyrighted in Great Britain.)

BERLIN, via The Hague, July 27. — "Germany, in her reply to the American note must stand firm."

Under-Secretary for Foreign Affairs Zimmerman to-day read me that excerpt from a letter, one of many he and other officials have received from German citizens, indicating that the people will not sanction the giving up of Germany's submarine warfare.

"Firmness and courtesy are needed," the letter continued.

"Exactly," said Under-Secretary Zimmerman, tapping the desk before him to emphasize his remark.

"Do the future relations between Germany and America look as dark as some declare?" he was asked.

"No," was the quick response. "In this day and age it is possible for two great nations to differ without coming to a break. Germany will never do anything to bring that about. You can assure the American people of that."

"Is an adjustment of the German-American controversy still possible?" I asked.

"We hope so," responded the Under-Secretary. "We tried our best in our last note, but your Government did not accept our proposals.

"What we shall do next is, of course, undecided. We have not yet discussed the note here in the Foreign Office. It will be some time before it can be discussed fully in other Governmental departments. But in all probability we shall answer in the manner the writer of this letter calls for when he says 'be firm.' We can never give up submarine warfare. The people would never sanction that."

Under-Secretary Zimmerman asked if public opinion in the United States would sanction the last American note. I answered that I believed it would.

"Well, you can see that the people here will back us up," he remarked.

I suggested that America only desired to safeguard the lives of American citizens on passenger ships.

"Germany tried to accomplish that in her last note, but it was not accepted," was the answer.

"How soon Germany will send her reply cannot at present be determined," Under-Secretary Zimmerman said. "There is no hurry," he added. "Your President is undoubtedly a figure of the greatest importance in America, but in Germany we have faced greater problems than this. A nation at war has its daily crisis."

Despite the warning contained in the latest American note, officials here still declare it unwise for Americans to travel in ships of belligerent nations.

THE BRYCE REPORT.

Attention is again directed to the complete report of the finding of the Bryce Commission in regard to the German atrocities in Belgium, now appearing in the Examiner. Lord Bryce, as chairman of the commission, has a high standing, not only throughout the Empire, but also in the United States. His splendid reputation in the Republic has stamped the report with a reliability which has been generally acknowledged throughout the States where this report has been given full credence. It is the result of widespread and minute investigations and should be followed by every reader of the Examiner.

WHAT YOUR 25c WILL BRING FOR THE BOY ON THE FIRING LINE

The above cut shows just what The Examiner and Overseas Club Tobacco Fund will do. 25c will gladden the heart of a hero, and he will remember you because your name and address is written on the postcard we enclose in every 25c parcel you subscribe for. A quarter means 50 cigarettes, 4 ozs. of tobacco, and a packet of matches. The postcards enclosed are a most pleasing feature. They bring those who give into direct touch with those who receive in a personal way never before attempted. The destination of your parcels is left entirely to yourself. The main thing is to keep the ball rolling. We want to send a parcel of cigarettes and tobacco every week to every Peterborough soldier. Our soldiers are giving their lives; you are asked to give them something to smoke. Tommy Atkins must be assured of his smoke as long as we are assured of his bravery—a quality which will endure as long as there is a feather left in the wing of the Prussian eagle. Every parcel is welcome proof that some one here at home is thinking of him day by day, and week by week. Put your name down for as many quarters as you can. The Overseas Club members have collecting books in which you may mark your subscription, or they may be left at The Examiner Office.

LIEUT. GRAHAM WILL ARRIVE THIS EVENING

Reception Will be Tendered Heroic Young Officer of the 2nd Battalion When he Arrives Here on the 5.30 Train.

IS INVALIDED HOME

Lieut. Gordon H. Grahame, son of Mr. Laurence Grahame, of Lakefield, who has been at the front with the 2nd Battalion, 1st Canadian Division, and has been invalided home, will arrive here on the 5.30 G.T.R. train en route for his parents' summer home at Stoney Lake. Arrangements have been made for an impromptu reception at the station on the arrival of the train. The 57th Regimental Band will take part in the reception.

Although not a Peterborough boy, Lieut. Grahame is widely known here and has a host of friends in the city. He has been a resident of Lakefield for a number of years and was at the time of his enlistment on the staff of the Grove school. At Stoney Lake he was a prominent figure in the life of the summer resort, winning considerable fame as a paddler and for several years he carried off the canoe championship at the annual regatta.

He enlisted as a private in the 2nd Battalion and was attached to the machine gun section with Heber Rogers and other Peterborough boys. It will be remembered that shortly before the battle of St. Julien he had his arm broken while playing baseball. He was in hospital when the battle started, but hearing of the struggle at the front, he evaded the attendants and escaped, walking thirty miles across country to join his comrades on the firing line. His bravery was recognized by a promotion to lieutenant. Shortly after he was wounded and sent to England. Now he has been allowed to come home.

There undoubtedly will be many citizens at the station at 5.30 oclock to help in the welcome to the first of the heroes from this immediate district to return home.

STRUCK BY AUTO BOY DRAGGED 75 FEET UNDER CAR

Harold Grady, Son of Mr. and Mrs. John Grady, Had Narrow Escape on Romaine Street Last Night

DRIVER OUT ON $2,000 BAIL

Harold Grady, the four year-old son of Mr. John Grady, baker, Park St., was struck by an automobile at the corner of Park and Romaine streets last night at eight o'clock, was dragged about 75 feet, sustained a deep scalp wound and numerous bruises, and was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital.

The car was driven by Harry Legrow, chauffer, who appeared in the police court this morning charged with wanton or furious driving, and wilful neglect in contravention to the criminal code. This is an indictible offence, and the accused declined to plead until he had seen a lawyer. His hearing was remanded for a week, and bail was fixed at $2,000.00.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

Harold Grady and his sister had left Brioux Brothers' store at the corner of Romaine and Park streets. He was crossing Romaine street and did not apparently notice the automobile approaching from the west. Those who witnessed the affair stated that the car was almost on top of the boy before he saw it. He was struck by the hood and knocked to the ground, but fortunately escaped the wheels. He was dragged along Romaine street for about 75 or 80 yards. A wound in the head bled profusely, and at the hospital required five stitches to close it.

This morning the hospital reported the little chap to be recovering from the shock. He received many bruises when he was dragged along the roadway.

A WEEK'S REMAND.

Before Magistrate Dumble this morning County Crown Attorney Hatton asked for a remand until August 3rd to await the progress of the Grady boy. The required bail was provided in two sureties of $1,000 each.

Mr. G. N. Gordon is acting for the defendant.

ATTEMPTED A RESCUE.

It was stated that Mr. George Willette, an employees of the De Laval Company, attempted to snatch the boy from the crossing, and in his effort received a number of bruises and scratches.

ITALIANS SCORE BOTH ON SEA AND IN LAND FIGHTING

In Attack on Gorizia Positions Italians Capture 1600 Austrian Prisoners While Naval Force Occupies Island of Pelagosa.

BASE IS DESTROYED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, July 28.—The following official statement was issued to-night:

"On the Isonzo River yesterday, after an artillery bombardment, Italian troops advanced and progressed. On our left we occupied a large forest.

"On the centre we occupied the entrenchments defending Sella San Martino.

"On the right we took and lost several times Monte Sei Busi, the largest part of which remained in our possession. The engagements were of the most bitter character, especially those in the forest, where the Austrians were strongly entrenched. They were expelled at the point of the bayonet. The Austrians used asphyxiating bombs. We made 1,600 prisoners, including 30 officers."

The Island of Pelagosa, off the southern Dalmatian coast, has been occupied by Italian naval forces, according to another official communication issued to-night. The island, which is important for its strategic situation, is about 40 miles southwest of the Island of Lagosta. A French destroyer to-day demolished an Austrian naval and aeroplane base on Lagosta Island.

MACHINE GUNS AND FIELD KITCHENS FOR THE 59TH BATTALION

PTE. ARNOLD WOOD, 477 Bolivar street, with the second reinforcement draft of the 8th C.M.R.

Lawn bowling

Capt. M. H. Park and Lieut. G. K. Rackham, of Peterboro, Point Out the Need of Such Equipment and Ask for the Assistance of Local People.

WOULD SAVE MANY LIVES

Barriefield Camp,
July 26, 1915.

It is a regrettable fact that the Canadian troops at the front have been very seriously handicapped by the shortage of machine guns, the Germans having four to our one. It is quite evident that a Canadian Battalion must have at least the same number to be on an equal footing with the enemy. Since the Government, at present, supply only four to each Battalion the others must be procured by private subscription, and it is with this object in view, among others, that the officers of the 59th Battalion, C. E. F., now in training, at Barriefield Camp, are making strenuous efforts to raise a Regimental Fund, adequate to the purpose.

Further, the proper feeding of our fighters in the field calls for the most up-to-date equipment in the form of four Field Kitchens per battalion, (none supplied by the Government), and other appliances. In addition, there are a thousand and one small comforts which go far toward making life bearable for our men and which, of necessity, must be procured through the Regimental Fund.

We do, therefore, most earnestly appeal to the already oft proven generosity of the people of Peterborough and district, many of whose sons are in the 59th and other battalions already overseas, to aid us in obtaining sufficient money to ensure the attainment of the object in view. When one considers that this added equipment means the saving of many lives on the battlefield, the money required seems a very small matter after all.

It is our privilege to have been detailed by Lt.-Col. H. J. Dawson, O. C., 59th Battalion, C.E.F., to look after Peterborough's share in this worthy object. The whole of the 3rd Division is being visited by the officers in their own district and we feel confident that Peterborough will appreciate her opportunity and head the list.

H. M. Park, Captain.
G. K. Rackham, Lieut.

TO START CAMPAIGN

Speakers' Patriotic League Outline Plans for a Ten Day Campaign for Recruits, Commencing on August 4th.

BIG PUBLIC MEETING

A well-attended meeting of the Executive of the Speakers' Patriotic League was held in the Oriental Parlours last evening, President R. B. Rogers in the chair.

Lieut. Chas. M. Cockrane, Secretary of No. 2 Military Division, of Toronto, was present, and outlined the work taken up by the leagues in the different cities and districts. After a very clear explanation from Lieut. Cochrane of the duties of the Patriotic League, as requested by military authorities, it was decided that a recruiting campaign would be inaugurated in the city and county of Peterborough, to commence with a public meeting on August 4th, the first anniversary of the declaration of war. This is to be followed by a ten days' recruiting campaign; officers will be furnished by the Military Department, and it is expected that every available man in Peterborough will be interviewed as to his stand in this important matter. A committee was also appointed to obtain the active support of every employer of labour in the city.

Mr. F. Dobbin has accepted the position of Publicity Officer, and the League has been promised the active support of the clergy, of leaders of societies, and also it is expected all the different ladies' leagues in the city will co-operate with them in the efforts to carry out this important work.

It is expected, from present indications, that a very large public meeting will be held on Wednesday night August 4th. It is requested that all other meetings or engagements that might interfere with this meeting, be postponed, so that this meeting will be an unanimous meeting of the citizens of all classes for the purpose of not only assisting in this campaign to obtain recruits, but to enable the citizens of Peterborough with the citizens of every other town and city, not only in the Dominion of Canada, but in the whole Empire, on that date to repledge to the world their determination to see this war through to a successful conclusion.

The Patriotic League, on behalf of the Military Department and Government, asks for the unanimous support and enthusiastic help of every citizen of the city and county of Peterborough, and before the campaign is finished, every village and township of the county will be visited to give every person an opportunity to do their share.

MR. ANDREW MERCER DIED IN TORONTO

Sudden Death of Former Peterborough Business Man Yesterday

Mr. Andrew Mercer, a former Peterborough merchant, died in Toronto yesterday afternoon. The news received this morning caused many expressions of regret from the citizens who remembered him as a friend and business man. Mr. Mercer conducted a men's furnishing and merchant tailor shop in the store on the north-west corner of George and Hunter streets. As his business grew he afterward moved to the present location of Richard Hall & Son. Sixteen years ago he removed to Toronto, and Peterborough thereby lost a citizen who was widely known for his success in business and his genial withal retiring disposition. Born in this city 53 years ago he had won a large number of friends. His business was one of the most successful in its field then established in Peterborough. The late Mr Mercer had only recently returned from New York whither he had been called on account of the illness of his brother, Mr. Frank Mercer. Mr. Mercer is survived by three sisters, Mrs. Robt. Neill and Mrs. Chas. Stapleton of Peterborough and Mrs. T. White of Chicago, by his brother Frank, in New York, and also by his wife and two daughters.

Information received here from relatives of the deceased was to the effect that Mr. Mercer had died suddenly of heart disease.

GERMANS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Much has been said about the great German population of the United States, but when one looks up the statistics it becomes apparent that it is the nerve of that population, rather than its numbers, that makes it so assertive. It is a highly organized minority in a country where the vast body of the people do not as yet feel under the necessity of becoming aroused to active resistance to the agitation being carried on. From the United States census of 1910 as given in the World Almanac for 1915, we take these figures, showing the Germanic (German and Austrian) population of the republic; i.e., those foreign-born, whether they have been in the country half a year or half a century:

Germany	2,501,181
Austria	1,174,924
Hungary	495,600
Luxembourg	3,068
	4,174,773

This falls very far short of the 20,000,000 which some say is the number of Germans in the United States. No doubt, however, those who put the estimate two or four times higher than these official figures include the children and grandchildren of those born in Germany.

From the same census returns it will be interesting to set off the British population of the United States as against that of Germany and Austria; i.e., those persons in the United States who were born in the British Empire as follows:

England	876,485
Scotland	261,084
Wales	92,479
Ireland	1,352,155
Canada and Newfound'd	1,201,146
	3,773,269

There are, too, in the republic, the following numbers from the allied countries:

France	117,386
Russia	1,602,752
Italy	1,343,070
Belgium	49,397
	3,112,455

Turkey is the ally of Germany, and there are 91,920 persons from that country in the republic, making the total population derived from Germany, Austria, and Turkey, 4,266,696.

Against this the total American population derived from the allied countries is 6,887,724. They far outnumber the Germans, and if one were to take into account the lineage of the American-born the Germanic percentage of the population would prove a diminishing one the further back the comparison is carried.—Toronto Star.

THE ALLIES' STRANGLEHOLD.

The German flag has disappeared from the ocean, says the Toronto Globe. Germany's overseas trade has been utterly destroyed. Her fleet, though still "in being," has ceased to count. Her submarine warfare has failed alike in the earlier stages of the conflict, when directed against British ships of war, and in the latter, when merchant ships have been the especial target. Losses there have been of vessels and of precious lives, but they have not been such as to cause the slightest modification in Britain's naval policy. The Grand Fleet from an undisclosed base somewhere in the mists of the north awaits in instant readiness any attempt of the German navy to emerge from its place of concealment. For almost a year the Fleet has held its post. In storm and sunshine, tempest and fine weather, the British patrols have scoured the North Sea. Not a single German warship has been able to run the blockade. The fast auxiliary cruiser Berlin, the only ship that tried to do so, is now interned in a Norwegian port. By the closing of the Straits of Dover on the south and the northern exit from the North Sea between the Norwegian coast and the Shetland and Orkney Islands every other league of ocean on the earth's surface has been closed to the Germanic powers, save for the passage of submarines, and that becomes more perilous daily.

This is the stranglehold of the Allies. Von Tirpitz, head of the German navy, declared months ago that the British navy was "choking" Germany. The process takes time, but no great nation has ever been able to live long without access to the world's markets, and Germany will prove no exception. If it is found that through Scandinavian ports oceanborne raw materials are reaching Germany, and German products are being exported in disguise, Britain will unquestionably take measures of the most vigorous sort to prevent Germany and Austria from using the Scandinavian side entrance.

The power of the Allies to control the world's ocean-borne commerce is beyond all question. The Navy, the organ of the British Navy League, states in its July number that at the end of 1915 the British navy will be nearly double the size of the total navies of Germany, Austria, and Turkey combined, and nearly two and a half times greater than the German navy alone. Taking the entire naval forces of Britain, France, Russia, and Japan, and leaving Italy out of the calculation, the fleets of the Germanic powers and Turkey have less than a third of the strength of those that can be brought against them.

This irresistible sea power of Britain and her allies will in the end prove the decisive factor in the war. It has been exercised silently and with relatively little bloodshed, but it has counted for far more in the wide sweep of the world war than all the battle in Poland and Galicia since hostilities began. Had Britain's fleet not held the seas the closing of the two ports of Vladivostok and Archangel would long ago have enabled Germany to dictate in Petrograd a peace disastrous to Russia, for her internal resources have proved entirely incapable of producing war munitions in the volume required by her armies in the field. That one service, the safeguarding of her vital ports, has been of more value to Russia than ten army corps. France, too, left to struggle alone against German sea power, would have been cut off from ocean-borne supplies, her ports would have been blockaded, her coasts ravaged, and German armies would have landed on her Atlantic seaboard and outflanked her armies on the frontier. Britain may have done comparatively little on land toward the destruction of German militarism, but without the British navy's strength to turn the scale against them, the armies of Germany would have won before this a decisive victory. Sea power has been Britain's contribution, and sea power in the end will win.

GERMAN MACHINATIONS.

Germany is moving heaven and earth—or rather hell and earth—to [illegible] the United States and the European allies. One method is by getting German-Americans to demand that the Washington authorities forbid it. Another is by instigating strikes in the factories where the supplies are made. Another is by bringing moral pressure to bear on the owners of these factories.

There cannot be the least doubt that the strike at the works of the Remington Arms Company at Bridgeport, Connecticut, was of German origin. It has fizzled out, but other and bigger strikes are being planned throughout the continent. If the demand were for some share of the extra profits made by manufacturers of munitions in war time, there might be some reason in it; but it is for much more than that. It is for such hours and wages as could not be afforded in time of peace, for a period of three years, whether the war ends sooner or not. That is to say, the object is not to get more for work done; it is to brew trouble and prevent any work being done.

The appeals to owners of factories on moral grounds are amusing when we know how bankrupt Germany is in moral principle. A circular letter, for instance, is being sent out, signed by Hans Otto Schulze, of 1337 Dearborn avenue, Chicago. This man says some of his relatives in Germany have been killed by American-made bullets, and goes on: "Surely you must be aware that you are directly assisting in this wholesale slaughtering; perhaps, if some of your own death-dealing instruments would strike back at those who are dear to you, would you then be able to grasp the immensity of a crime to which you are lending a willing hand? . . . Can you close the day and face the world without a sting in your self-respect as a worthy member of our society? Have the heart to show this letter to your wife, mother and daughter. May your conscience allow you to enjoy your life undisturbed by visions of crippled and silent bodies which the Lord will lay before your door." Satan reproving sin!

Equally silly and futile are the appeals to Washington. It seems to be assumed that President Wilson is a Kaiser, and could forbid the trade in munitions by his mere fiat. On the contrary, that trade could not be forbidden without explicit legislation by Congress. Dr. Woolsey, former professor of international law at Yale University, says: "At the outset of the Spanish war such legislation was passed, as a war measure, forbidding the export of coal or other war material at the discretion of the President. But by resolution of Congress of March 14, 1912, the 1898 resolution was so amended as to apply to American countries only. The reason for this distinction was of course to limit the danger of such exports of arms to our neighbour states, particularly to Mexico, as might endanger our own peace and safety. The general right to trade was left undisturbed." The President cannot interfere. If Congress can be induced to do so, that is another matter.

On the general question the views of Dr. Woolsey are very enlightening. "We permit," he says, "the munitions trade with both belligerents, it is true, and yet, owing to the chances of war, the right to buy inures to the advantage of one only. Does this stamp our conduct as unneutral? Quite the contrary. To embargo munitions bought by one side because the other does not choose to buy would be the unneutral act. Germany does not buy because she cannot transport. She cannot transport because she does not care to contest the control of the seas with her enemies. Have we aught to do with that? To supplement her naval inferiority by denying to the allies the fruits of their superiority would be equivalent to sharing in the war on the German side. Moreover, to asume and base action upon German naval inferiority in advance of any general trial of strength, would be not only illegal but even an insult to Germany."

In a word, the German case has not a leg to stand on, morally or legally. American manufacturers will go on furnishing all the munitions they can make or the allies can pay for. If this factor is not big enough to determine the issue of the war in our favour, it will at least do much to shorten the conflict.—Hamilton Spectator.

THE PART OF SCIENCE IN THE PRESENT WAR

From the beginning of the present war, applied science in its most wonderful forms has been resorted to continually.

For the allies, a great problem was present in rapid land transportation of great bodies of troops and great quantities of supplies of ammunition and war material of every description. Modern science was ready with an answer in the highly developed auto truck. Practicable auto trucks of great carrying capacity are of very recent achievement. It has taken a number of years to make them really efficient. Fortunately, high efficiency has been reached just prior to the outbreak of this war. Consequently, the allies were able to rush large numbers of these trucks to all necessary points. This enables them to shift their troops and supplies almost as quickly as by railroad to any desired point.

A strange but enormously valuable development of science in this great war is the Russian "bath train." The health of any army to-day, as always, depends greatly upon sanitary conditions. Good sanitary conditions mean health, strength, and victory, while poor sanitation spells pestilence, decay, and probable defeat. To make sure of the health of its troops, the Russian army has provided specially constructed trains which pass continually back and forth along the lines nearest the fighting forces. There are at present four such trains, and each capable of giving a bath to over 3,000 soldiers a day. These trains are made up of bath cars, supply cars, tea cars, tank cars, the locomotive, and cars for the crew and attendants. Each bath car has a number of shower baths along each inside wall and several steam compartments through the centre. Cold water comes from the tank cars, and hot water from the engine boiler, so that the men may have a shower of whatever temperature they desire. Then enter the undressing car, strip, and pass to the bath car. Their clothes while they are bathing are disinfected, or burned, as required. From the bath car they pass to the dressing car where they receive their own clothes disinfected, or a new outfit. After dressing, they pass to the tea car for something light to eat, have a short rest, and then out to their quarters. Such modern sanitary methods make a wonderful difference on the health of the individual, and on the whole Russian army.

One of Italy's first moves in the war, as soon as she entered, was to recall her most famous inventor William Marconi to give Italy the benefit of his wonderful achievements and experience in the wireless telegraph. It is hardly necessary to state that such an invention is of invaluable importance in getting information from one point to another right over the heads of the enemy, and to any distance desired. Doubtless, Mr. Marconi will develop some very valuable and startling uses for wireless telegraphy for his native land during this war. If so, we may hear of them later, or after the war.

Repeatedly, this war has been called the war of science — German science against that of the allies. There is much in the statement. As evidence of the fact, England has just recently organized a department of inventions to discover and develop ways and means of combatting the plans and devices of Germany and her allies, especially the submarine. This department is headed by Lord Fisher with such inventors and scientists as Sir J. J. Thomson, Sir Charles Parsons, Sir William Cooke, Sir Oliver Lodge, and Prof. Ernest Rutherford, as his advisors. Already, this department is reported to be testing a device which it is thought, will make the allies' warships entirely immune to attacks by submarines.

The United States has organized a similar department with Thomas A. Edison as its chief, and many of America's most noted scientists and inventors. Surely, when this war is over, a great and interesting chapter in applied science will be open with many astounding disclosures.

THE HEIGHT STANDARD FOR RECRUITS

In reducing the standard of height for volunteers for Canadian regiments, the Militia Department has done a sensible thing. In modern days, a healthy man of five feet two (or of two inches less than five feet for that matter) makes just as good a soldier as a man of five feet three, or for that matter six feet three. What is essential in these days of fire-arms, is not height but a sound consitution. There is no better army than the Japanese, and the men of that army do not average five feet three.

In a bayonet charge, the average big man may be slightly more efficient than the average small one, but there is precious little bayonet work in this war. The bayonet is mentioned occasionally with much flourish in reports from the front, but the hospital returns in England show that not one man in every two hundred wounded has been hurt by an "incised wound," namely a wound from a bayonet, sword or lance.

MY SON.

I that had yearned for youth, my own again
And mourned the wasted hours of younger days,
I that had sighed for spring, for summer, when
The snows of winter covered all my ways—
I that had prayers for years, for only one,
Have found that prayer answered in my son.

He is myself again, with hopes of old,
With old temptations and with old desires:
He is myself again — the clay to mould,
Into the man, and all the man aspires.
Who says that youth returns to us no more?
He is as I was in days of yore.

In my own days, in my days of youth,
Oh, how I wished a comrade and a friend!—
To help me keep the quiet path of truth,
And through temptation my own feet attend,
So shall I journey onward by his side,
His father—yes, his comrade and his guide.

I that have failed shall shape success in his,
I that have wandered point the proper path,
A signal when the signal lights are dim,
A roof to find him from the storms of wrath—
So we shall journey upward, I and he
And he shall be the man I meant to be.

LETTER FROM PETERBORO' BOY

Is With the Canadian Field Artillery, Shorncliffe—Trip Over Was Uneventful

In a letter dated July 14th to a friend in Peterborough, Signaller Frank Randall of the 3rd Battery, Canadian Field Artillery, and formerly of the Peterborough branch of the Bank of Ottawa, has the following to say of the trip over:

"We have been on the move quite a lot, recently, and it is somewhat of a change to have a little rest. It is quite a long while since we were drafted to go to England. We were held back for further instructions at Barriefield Camp for almost a month and we set sail on the "Northland" from Montreal on June 29th. The voyage over was very tedious. There were between 1,400 and 1,700 troops on board, comprising drafts from different brigades and battalions.

The artillery consisted of drafts from the 25th, 26th and 27th batteries, and also one from the 5th Brigade, Winnipeg. Nothing of any event happened on the way across. We did a little physical exercise every day, and had a couple of lifeboat drills, which, however, only helped to show us how futile it would have been for us to try to escape by the aid of them in case we encountered a submarine. On the second day before we landed, fifty men with rifles were stationed forward. I am glad we did not have to depend on them, either. The last day out two torpedo boats found us, and conveyed us the rest of the way.

We landed at Devonport about 11 a.m. on Friday morning, and entrained right away. The train finally landed us in Kent and we marched three miles to camp and went under canvas for about one hour and were fed.

At noon we got orders to be ready to move at any moment and we stayed packed up until 6 o'clock without any more food. We then marched to the Reserve Brigade of Shorncliffe, a distance of seven and a half miles. We then assigned to the Reserve Brigade reinforcements for the 1st Contingent artillery. On Monday we were shifted to the third battery where we are now.

They are treating us well here. I don't think we will be moved away for some time yet, but one never knows. As far as training goes we are backward, but I expect about six weeks of the work we get here will lick us into shape.

MEETING OF CENTRAL CHARITY BOARD

Statement of Orders Given During the Past Month

Following is a statement of the orders given out by the Central Charity board since the last meeting, which was on June 28th:

Groceries (since last meeting) $85, (during 1915), $1,866; wood (since last meeting), $4.50, (during 1915, $888.25; tickets, (since last meeting', $3.90, (during 1915), $94.35; Protestant Home and sundries, (since last meeting), $145.10, (during 1915), $2,598.29. Total (since last meeting), $238.50; (during 1915), $5,157.89.

Accounts Passed.

At a meeting that was held last evening the following accounts were passed: R. C. Braund, $8.00; House of Providence, $78.00; R. H. Hunter, $22; M. H. Halpin, $4.00; John James, $4.00; F. W. Miller, $2.10; E. F. Mason, $14.00; M. Nesbitt, $30.05; E. Oliver, $3.00, Peterborough Protestant Home, $136; Peterborough Examiner, $3.50; Claude H. Rogers, $525.00; Jas. Skinner, $3.90; G. F. Toone, $2.00; P. S. White, $6.00.

DEATH WAS ACCIDENTAL

Train Crew is Exonerated From all Blame.

LINDSAY, July 27.—An inquest to enquire into the death of George Switzer, who was thrown from the C.P.R. tracks on July 23rd, was held before Coroner Dr. Wood, in the town hall.

The witnesses were: Dr. F. Blanchard, C.P.R. surgeon; N. LeBarr, G. Phillips, Richard Abercrombie, J. A. Bett and James Growden.

THE VERDICT.

The jury returned a verdict "that the deceased, George Michael Switzer came to his death by being struck by a C.P.R. engine while walking on the tracks on July 23rd inst. ,and no blame is attached to the train crew."

COTTAGE AT STONEY LAKE

Figures in Estate of the Late Mrs. Acton Rogers.

Clifford Eli[illegible] Rogers, of Toronto, has applied for letters of administration of the estate of his mother, Jane Acton Rogers, who died intestate on 2nd June, and left an estate valued at $5,763, including a cottage at Stoney Lake. The latter is valued at $500.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

(Introductory Observations. Part II.)

This seems to be a fitting place at which to put on record the invaluable help which we have received from our Secretaries, Mr. E. Grimwood Mears and Mr. W. J. H. Broderick, whose careful diligence and minute knowledge of the evidence have been of the utmost service. Without their skill, judgment, and untiring industry the labour of examining and appraising each part of so large a mass of testimony would have occupied us for six months instead of three.

The depositions printed in the appendix themselves show that the stories were tested in detail, and in none of these have we been able to detect the trace of any desire to 'make a case" against the German army. Care was taken to impress upon the witnesses that the giving of evidence was a grave and serious matter, and every deposition submitted to us was signed by the witness in the presence of the examiner.

A noteworthy feature of many of the depositions is that though taken at different places and on different dates, and by different lawyers, from different witnesses, they often corroborate each other in a striking manner.

The evidence is all couched in the very words which the witnesses used, and where they spoke as the Belgian witnesses did, in Flemish or French, pains were taken to have competent translators, and to make certain the translation was exact.

Seldom did these Belgian witnesses show a desire to describe what they had seen or suffered. The lawyers who took the depositions were surprised to find how little vindictiveness or, indeed, passion, they showed, and how generally free from emotional excitement their narratives were. Many hesitated to speak lest what they said if it should ever be published, might involve their friends or relations at home in danger and it was found necessary to give an absolute promise that names should not be disclosed. For this reason names have been omitted. In all cases the depositions are given as nearly as possible (for abbreviation was sometimes inevitable) in the exact words of the witness, and wherever a statement has been made by a witness tending to exculpate the German troops, it has been given in full. Excisions have been made only where it has been felt necessary to conceal the identity of the deponent, or to omit what are merely hearsay statements, or are palpably irrelevant. In every case the name and description of the witnesses are given in the original depositions and in copies which have been furnished to us by His Majesty's Government. The originals remain in the custody of the Home Department, where they will be available, in case of need, for reference after the conclusion of the war. The Committee have also had before them a number of diaries taken from the German dead.

It appears to be the custom in the German Army for soldiers to be encouraged to keep diaries and to record in them the chief events of each day. A good many of these diaries were collected on the field when the British troops were advancing over ground which had been held by the enemy, were sent to Headquarters in France, and despatched thence to the War Office in England. They passed into the possession of the Prisoners of War Information Bureau, and were handed by it to our Secretaries. They have been translated with great care. We have inspected them and are absolutely satisfied of their authenticity. They have thrown important light upon the methods followed in the conduct of the war. In one respect indeed, they are the most weighty part of the evidence, because they proceed from a hostile source, and are not open to any such criticism on the ground of bias, as might be applied to Belgian testimony. From time to time references to these diaries will be found in the text of the report. In appendix B they are set out at greater length both in the German original and in an English translation, together with a few photographs of the more important entries.

In appendix C are set out a number of German proclamations. Most of these are included in the Belgian No. VI. which has been furnished to us. Actual specimens of original proclamations, issued because of the binding of the German Military authorities, and posted in the Belgian and French towns mentioned, have been produced to us, and copies are to be found in this appendix. Appendix contains the rules of the Hague conventions dealing with the conduct of war on land, as adopted in 1907, Germany being one of the signatory powers.

In appendix E will be found a selection of statements collected in France by Professor Morgan.

These five appendices are contained in a separate volume.

(Part III. continued in Wednesday Evening Examiner).

Birthday Dinner Downfall Of a $24-a-Week Bank Teller

NEW YORK, July 27.—Thousands of dollars passed daily through the hands of Frederick W. Smith, a $24 a week paying teller of the Security Bank of New York. Up to four months ago the white lights of Broadway had had no attraction for him, a young man with an excellent record and father of two small boys. Then the temptation became too great. Yesterday Judge Otto Rosalsky sentenced Smith to a minimum of two and a half years in Sing Sing after he pleaded guilty to stealing $620 and falsifying the books of the bank.

The bank officials, after looking over his books, asserted that he had misappropriated $3,800. His wife and mother cried out against what they termed the injustice of the charge. They told what a model son and husband Smith had been.

"I am dazed," said his wife, at their home, 607 Morgan Avenue, Brooklyn, yesterday. "I cannot account for Fred's taking the money. I know the temptation was awfully great and we were living right along on $24 a week. We tried to economize during the entire nine years of our married life.

"And now he's been taken away. I still think it's all a dream. Why, Fred never came home late, never drank intoxicating liquors and seldom smoked."

Smith said in court that up to last March he had never touched intoxicating liquors. At that time he attended a birthday dinner, took his first drink and visited the Tenderloin every night thereafter. After an automobile accident five months ago in which he and a girl figured, Smith's employers looked over his books and watched his accounts closely.

Smith was given two weeks before going to jail to strive to provide for the support of his wife and children. His wife distractedly paced the small kitchen of the $16 apartment and cried out against the sentence, which would necessitate her seeking employment and estrangement for the greater part of the time from her children.

"I have no folks to turn to," she said. "When I married Fred I was an orphan. My husband has a mother and his sister supports her."

"I have been told that Fred will most likely be sent to Sing Sing. I am glad, as near as one can be glad on such an occasion, that he will be under the supervision of Warden Osborne. He will give Fred a chance to prove he's all right, and perhaps I won't have to wait so long to have my husband near me again.

Former officials of the old Union Bank, which went out of business in 1907, and where he was at one time employed, will take up the fight in behalf of Smith, according to a report made last night.

Ireland Sending 124,000 Troops To The Front

NEW YORK, July 27.—The correspondent of the World in Dublin, reports as follows:

"Sir Edward Grey said at the commencement of the war that Ireland was the one bright spot in the situation, and this has proved true. The greatest disappointment Germany has met with has been the attitude of Ireland, South Africa, India and Egypt. In all of these places, Germany reckoned not only on disloyalty but on revolution when she provoked the war. Instead of that, England has the heart support of these countries against Prussianism—an asset of immense moral as well as material value," said Mr. John Redmond, M.P., leader of the Irish Nationalist party to the World correspondent at his home in the Wicklow Mountains.

IRISHMEN ARE STIRRED.

On the subject of Irish recruiting for the British army, Mr. Redmond was emphatic, saying:

"Irish recruiting has been a marvellous success. I have the latest figures issued by the Irish Government, and according to them, there are to-day with the colours 124,000 Irishmen. There are 24,000 National Volunteers in the army. Recruiting is going on at the rate of from 6,000 to 7,000 a week. These figures speak for themselves. They show how thoroughly stirred the Irish people are against the German menace."

Asked whether he could give the recruiting figures by provinces, he answered:

"I have not the figures by provinces, but in any case if your idea is to arrive at the proportions of Nationalists and Unionists who have enlisted such figures would be very deceptive, because I need not point out that one-half of Ulster is Catholic and Nationalists, and I know that recruiting in the Nationalist parts of Ulster has been exceedingly satisfactory."

ULSTER'S SHARE.

Reminded of the claim put forward before the war by the Orangemen that they had 250,000 armed and drilled Ulster Volunteers ready to fight against a Home Rule Parliament, the World asked Mr. Redmond what had become of them.

"We know nothing about the Ulster Volunteers," the Nationalist leader answered, "except some 24,000 or 25,000 of them have enlisted."

Mr. Redmond speaking on the general relations of Ireland and the Empire in war time, says the Irish have proved worthy of the trust placed in her by the democracy of Great Britain.

WHY HE REFUSED OFFICE.

Asked why he declined to accept a post in the Coalition Cabinet, the Irish leader said:

"My reasons for refusing to take office in the Coalition Cabinet were two fold — first the traditional objection to taking office in an English Cabinet until Home Rule was an actual fact in being and in operation in Ireland; and secondly, I felt that my power to assist the Government in bringing the war to a speedy termination would be diminished rather than increased by my taking office. The whole national sentiment of Ireland approved my decision."

DRINKING ON DECREASE.

He was then asked whether there was any drink problem in Ireland as a result of the war.

"The consumption of drink in Ireland and consequent drunkenness has substantially decreased since the war began. In fact this may be said generally of all classes of crime. You know that Ireland's crimelessness since coercion was abandoned has been frequently pointed out. There is no country in Europe more free from crime than Ireland. The prisons are nearly empty, the prison staffs have less and less to do, and the judges at the assizes very often have no indictments before them."

To the question whether he anticipated an increased emigration from Ireland after the war, as a result of it, he said:

"I don't anticipate any such thing. Last year the emigration to America was less than in any year since the great famine of 1847, and, as a matter of fact, the population of Ireland has increased for the first time since that date.

NOT RUNNING TO U. S.

"The yarn about young men running away to America for fear of conscription is a cruel and untrue one. I believe a few young men from the west of Ireland did go some months ago, but public opinion now in this country is so strong upon the point that no young man would have the courage to face it.

"However, the recruiting returns are the best answer to statements of that kind. The young men of Ireland have come forward nobly to take their stand against Prussianism, which is detested here as cordially as in any country in Europe."

THE COMSTOCK SALE OF FINE FURNITURE

The Large Stock to be Sacrificed to Clear the Decks for Building Improvements.

People who want furniture never had a better opportunity to buy than is now presented by the Comstock Building and Attraction Sale now in progress. Yesterday was the first day of this sale, and the general interest which it has awakened fairly warrants the statement that it will become "The Talk of the Town."

The reasons offered for this sale are genuine—Mr. Comstock having decided to make additions to his large warerooms and remodel the front of his block. This work will of course require ample room for the workmen to proceed, and as "necessity knows no law," a speedy reduction of the large stocks of furniture is imperative, and compels out-of-the-ordinary prices.

When Mr. Comstock states that reductions of from one quarter to one-half off the regular values of his splendid stock will be offered throughout the entire stock, it will be quite evident that the sale should create such a stir in buying that will make it the chance of a lifetime. An effort will be made to clear the entire stock out of the buildings, so that the contractor may have perfect freedom to hurry forward the contemplated improvements.

It is scarcely necessary to refer to the high class character of the Comstock furniture. Few housekeepers in the city, but that the stock has been most judiciously and carefully chosen, and that many of the styles are in a class by themselves, the designs bearing a distinction synonymous with the best productions of the factories.

The solid reliability and integrity upon which the firm is working, and the straightforward methods adopted by them, will also conduce to increasing confidence in this sale.

The few leaders which have already been offered show the trend of the general reductions and may fairly be taken as a criterion for the extraordinary values which will prevail throughout this money-saving sale.

Buy furniture now and put money in thy purse. 1d-1w

Teutons Have Crossed The Narew, But The Bug Still Protects the Line to the North

PETROGRAD, Juy 26.— The situation here is still obscure. While the battle line advances at one point, at another it recedes. For the moment neither side can claim any success decisive enough to affect the general issue.

According to the latest authoritative computations Russia is now parrying the blows of 70 German and 48 Austrian divisions, not including large bodies of the Landstrum of both countries in addition to four German and eleven Austrian cavalry brigades.

The enemy's forces between the Vistula and the Bug is put at three-quarters of a million, of whom two-thirds are Germans. About four corps are operating against the line from Novo Georgievsk to Ivangorod. So far the heavy artillery has not been brought into position against these fortresses, which cannot be considered in a state of siege.

The possibility is that the enemy may try to engage the fortress with a curtain of troops and employ his main forces elsewhere in the field of operations.

Although the Germans continue to advance towards the east in the Kovno government it is semi-officially hinted that they soon will meet with stubborn resistance.

Gen. Russky for the first time as Military Governor of Petrograd has issued an order in reference to the stoppage of work in some factories here. He points out the supreme importance of a regular supply of arms and ammunition.

"Every hour of labour increases our power; every hour of inactivity costs many sacrifices," he said. "The deliberate suspension of work is synonymous with a betrayal of the fatherland."

Mackensen Held Up.

Field Marshall von Mackensen's army at the Cholm-Lublin railway has hardly gained a yard of ground since it reached the village of Reiovets, just south of the railway.

In offering stubborn resistance to the German advance, the Russians are making a continual threat at von Mackensen's flank along the Bug from the east of Cholm to east of Lemberg. Between Krylow and Sokal their attacks have been particularly severe, compelling the Germans to send reinforcements, probably intended to support von Mackensen, to meet them.

Along the Vistula to the south and west of Warsaw there has been little change except for the occupation by the Germans of some positions evacuated by the Russians, where they drew in their lines.

While Warsaw is under heavy pressure the Austro-Germans have a lot of stiff work before them if they are to bring their operations to a successful ending by its capture. After crossing the Narew they still have a broader Bug, lined with fortresses, to fact, while in the south the Russians have good positions north of the Lublin-Cholm railway, which might prove the undoing of the army which attacked them.

German Losses Heavy.

Petrograd, July 26.— The following official communication was issued from General Headquarters yesterday:

"In the region of Mitau there has been no important change. On the Shavli-Rossieny roads the enemy continues to advance in the direction of Poneviej, in which region, as well as on the River Lavenna, there were engagements on the 24th.

"On the Narew front the enemy in the course of the night and the morning of the 24th made a series of fierce attacks along the east bank of the Pissa, in the region of Seroatka, but realized no success, while sustaining great losses.

"In the sector between Ostrolenka and Rozan we repulsed determined attempts of the enemy to cross the Narew at certain points. In the sector of Rozan-Pultusk the enemy on the 23rd succeeded in throwing a portion of his forces on to the left bank of the Narew and is trying to consolidate his positions.

Enemy's Advance Arrested.

"On the left bank of the Vistula the enemy on July 24 made fruitless attacks in the direction of Piassetchno. Between the Vistula and the Bug the enemy's advance was arrested by our counter-attacks. He has undertaken no further offensive, except in the Grubechow region, where on the night of the 24th and the following day we repulsed attacks on the Voislavitze-Gorodlo front.

"On the Bug, the Zlota Lipa and the Dniester no fighting has occurred, except on the line of the village of Dobrodwor, where there was a sanguinary local action. The attempt of the enemy to consolidate himself on the right bank of the Bug failed."

Voice of The People

To the Editor, The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—Statements very damaging to the Borden Government and the War Commission have been scattered about here lately to the effect that the War Purchasing Commission, which does all the purchasing and contract work for Canada, and much for the Allies, is open to "suggestions" and "diplomacy" put forward by members, etc. Knowing that the Commission proceeds wholly upon a purely business basis, and that therefore these statements are to say the least, frenzied imaginings, worthy only of Manitoba, I took the bull by the horns, and the very bold, if not brazen course of wiring the War Commission about it and asking them to commit themselves definitely on paper. I received the following in reply:

Ottawa, July 26.

"J. H. Burnham, M.P.,
Peterborough:

This Commission have no favourites in making purchases. Tenders are invited and orders placed with lowest tendered.

(Signed) THOS. HILLIARD,
Secretary War Purchasing Commission."

It can be seen, therefore, at a glance, that in the face of this statement, no other than the ordinary business course could be employed. Anybody can see the tenders, and if so desiring can probe every matter to the bottom. It must be so. Just as in the Garland and Foster cases, people may "do up" the Commission for a time, but they cannot, nor could the Commission, prevent Parliament from getting at the facts. Disclaiming as this telegram does, all right to "discretion" in tenders, nothing is left but punishment for any infraction by the Commission of the principle of ordinary business fair dealing.

Yours truly,
J. H. BURNHAM.

Petrograd, Freed From Drink and Germans, Little Affected by War

PETROGRAD, via London, July 20.—With its 'business as usual," its theatres and music halls in full swing, its picture palaces crowded, its hotels and restaurants still breathing an atmosphere of luxury and ease I had imagined London the serenest of all the capitals of the Allies' capitals. But since I have arrived in Petrograd I have been forced to the conclusion that the Russian capital is by far the least affected, the most amazing of all involved in the European war.

That there are indications here that Russia is engaged in the greatest war is true enough. But outwardly Petrograd bears a less warlike aspect than London. The subdued note struck by the number of women in mourning one may see on the Nevsky Prospect tells its own sorrowful story, and the almost total absence of the summer time animation for which Petrograd is famous conveys its own impressions to the mind of the onlooker.

Then, again, one may peer out of the windows of the British Consulate and see Reservists drilling in the square in front of the Marin Theatre, while the numerous buildings flying Red Cross flags, the contingents of wounded soldiers accompanied by Red Cross nurses who take their daily stroll in the parks of Petrograd and the number of miltary uniforms one may perceive in a walk along any of the principal streets of the city do not allow the fact that Russia is at war to escape from the public mind. But the overwhelming preponderance of the civilian to the military population (tribute though it is to Russia's resources in men, and lesson as it may be to the munition workers of the British Isles, the normality of the official and commercial life of the city and the superficial air of indifference which seems to cloak everything give to Petrograd an impression of serenity which cannot be ascribed to London or Paris.

This impression, however, is merely superficial. It is only an outward manifestation, characteristically Russian and very misleading. The two greatest ways in which Petrograd is affected are not directly concerned with warfare or its toll of human sacrifice but represent two of the finest benefits conferred on the Russian capital. The first is the total absence of drunkenness, the second the elimination of Germans. German language and everything German. Petrograd is emancipated from its two greatest evils—drink and the German.

"Chai," or tea served without milk, but with a slice of lemon, is now the popular beverage of Russia, and so appreciative are Russians of the benefits conferred on their country by total prohibition that many pray that the old wretched days may never return and that an emergency war measure may become a fundamental law.

From Germany and Germans the emancipation has not been so complete. It is true that all Germans have been interned or deported, their property confiscated, and the heavy guttural speech of the Teuton eliminated from Petrograd life; but, as in Britain, there are hundreds of naturalized persons of German origin in their midst, and the influence which Germany exercised on Russian institutions, Russian manners and Russian customs since the days of Peter the Great is still very apparent to the casual onlooker. The ugly building of the German Embassy, now boarded up and deprived of its statues of "supermen" and horses, however, bear its own testimony to the detestation of Germans by Russians.

As for the attitude of Russians toward the war it is difficult to discover representative opinion in Petrograd. The Russian lives in a world of extremes. He is extreme in personal characteristics, in his politics and in his habits. And his attitude toward the war passes from pessimism to optimism, from depression to elation, according to the tenor of the war bulletins. It is here, however, that British newspaper opinion plays a decidly valuable part. Again and again, when the news from the front has been none too favourable and public opinion has been very depressed, the faith which Russian writers have expressed in the power of Russian forces has restored public confidence and given Russians a true perspective of the course of events.

There is, however, a coexisting body of opinion in Petrograd which looks to Great Britain to finish the war. What are the English doing? That is a frequent question in Petrograd, not only in influential circles, but in military circles, too.

In all directions there appears to be great faith in Britain's new armies. What they will do, how they will perform, what difference their presence will make on the general fighting, are all questions which engage the attention of the Russians. On the manner in which they acquit themselves it may well be said that the issue of the war depends.

HEAVY LOSS FROM SMUT IN ONTARIO OAT CROP

As Much as 25 per Cent. in Spots From Neglect of Precaution.

Ontario farmers who omitted to inoculate their seed grain against smut are losing heavily this year. The annual loss due to this fungus disease averages 4 per cent. This year according to the Agricultural Department, a 15 per cent. loss is common, and in some places it as as much as 25 per cent. Oats are the principal crop to suffer, wheat being not nearly so bad. The interesting thing is that fields of grain, the seed of which was treated with formalin, are practically clean and coming along in fine style.

TWO DRUNKS BEFORE THE MAGISTRATE TO-DAY

Just two drunks at the police court this morning, hands twitching, eyes watery and bloodshot, all the usual evidences of a "morning after," an unnoticed and unread lesson against the "booze" game, that looks so cheery and rosy when the lights are bright. "But in the morning," when gone are all the guests except the straggler, who found the going so difficult that the police had to interne him, and the other, who loaded up at another party, and under the influence became so belligerent that the police were called in. It's a sordid game, this side of it.

LAWN BOWLING

There will be an interesting game to-night on the green. The Sturgeon rink will play the Maynard rink for the fobs. Twelve ends to the game. The winner will, under the rules, be called upon to play the next rink on the list within two days, should the winners fail to play the challengers within the stated time, they will in due course default the fobs.

Four rinks went down to Cobourg and Port Hope yesterday. They had very interesting contests. Honours were even.

The annual tournament will take place next Monday. There will perhaps be about a hundred players from all over Eastern Ontario here.

OTONABEE NEWS PARAGRAPHS OF LOCAL INTEREST

Sixth Line, Otonabee, July 27.—Mrs. J. C. Hope has arrived safely home after an extended vacation with relatives in the Western Provinces.

Miss Lizzie Wood, who has been holidaying with friends in St. Catharines, is now at home.

The 6th Line Baseball nine recently won a friendly game of baseball from Keene on the latter's diamond, by a score of 18 to 10. The winners then began to celebrate, Mr. Gall's store being the centre of attraction, until the older inhabitants thought the "Huns" were upon them. Keene is now "on the map".

The Misses Ruby and Elma Kerr of Peterborough are at present the guests of Miss Bessie Knox.

Miss Margaret Miller of Peterborough, is enjoying rural life at the residence of her brother, Mr. James Miller.

Miss Jean Armstrong has returned to her home in Keene after a fortnight's holiday, the guest of her friend, Miss Edith Hope.

The 6th Line Athletics recently defeated the 7th and 8th lines at baseball by the one sided margin of 29 to 2. These teams also hotly contested a game of foothall but neither team could score.

On Friday evening, July 23rd, the 6th line Sunday School held a raspberry social at the residence of Mr. R. Short. The 6th Line lived up to its reputation of having one of the best socials in Otonabee. About two hundred hungry people were present and all joined in proclaiming the quality and quantity of the spread and the refreshments. One of the features of a splendid programme was a short but very interesting patriotic address by Mr. G. A. Gillespie, M. P. P.

A great feature and one that attracted a large number of people from all over Otonabee was the game of baseball between Bethel and the 6th line Athletics. Great rivalry has existed between these teams since the last game which owing to general but rather pointed dissatisfaction with the Umpire, quite a warlike scene ensued, and as a result Bethel defaulted the game to the Athletics. However, this time, the efficiency of the Umpire, Mr. Elmer Davis, effectually prevented the recurrence of such bush league and unsportsmanlike conduct.

The pitching on both sides was very effective until the third innings, when the Bethel slab artist went up in the air and many of his teammates with him.

The feminine rooters for each team were very much in evidence, vieing strenuously with each other in encouraging her "special". The Athletics, however, served up too stiff a brand of ball for their opponents' taste, winning out in hollow fashion by the decisive score of 14 to 7. Following are the line-ups:

Bethel—H. Reid, c.; H. Stokes, p.; W. H. Fife, 1b.; H. Borland, 2b.; S. Davidson, 3b.; E. Fife, s.s.; A. Davidson, r.f.; A. W. Fife, c.f.; H. Compton, l. f.

Athletics — T. Rareton, c.; V. E. Bullock, p.; R. Hope, 1b.; R. Knox, 2b.; W. Hope, 3b.; H. Hatcher, 3b.; J. Richardson, r.f.; J. Hope, c.f.; H. Weir, l.f.

Struck out, by Bullock, 8; by Stokes, 6.

Miss Edna and Mr. Victor E. Bullock spent the week-end recently with friends in Lakefield.

TERRITORY TURKS MAY HAVE CEDED TO BULGARS—Unofficial despatches say the Turks have ceded to Bulgaria the Turkish portion of the Dedeaghach railroad. Some uneasiness is caused by this report as Turkey would not likely give up this territory without the promise of neutrality by Bulgaria. Reid Co.'s Sale Of Ladies' Wear

Opens To-morrow Morning and Promises to be a Lively One to the Finish.

The Reid Company's Ladies' Furnishing Store, George Street, was closed all day to-day, preparing for their sweeping unreserved sale which opens to-morrow morning. Although this meant the loss of a good day's business, there was no help for it, as the whole stock had to be marked down and arranged in a thorough and convenient manner for the unexpected rush to-morrow.

The large, six-column advertisement which appears on Page Seven of to-day's issue, gives some idea of the character of the goods and the marked-down prices. These sacrifice prices are real. There has been no inflating of the regular selling prices to make the sale prices look small. The tickets will show the values for themselves, and the extent of the reductions may be seen at a glance.

These reductions run from 50 to 60 per cent off all fashionable Palm Beach suits, natty short coats, dresses, and bewitching lingerie and silk waists, as well as on white skirts and muslin underwear.

The Reid Co. have had a big season, and their July sales are now ahead of July of last year, with this week to the good. The lure of midsummer bargains always brings out the ladies in relays, but especially is it expected to be the case on the occasion of a sale of this nature, where everything offered in the sale is purely for the feminine figure. Read the advertisement and be early at the opening in the morning.

LOCAL PAINTER FIGURES IN CASE

Special to The Examiner:

BUFFALO, N.Y., July 27.— Charging a violation of the Alien Labour Law, United States Attorney Lynn late Monday here in the Federal court filed a complaint against the Niagara Motor Boat Company of Tonawanda, N.Y., the defendant being accused of having brought Joseph J. M. Twist, occupation painter, from Peterborough to the United States to work at his trade in the Tonawanda plant. A letter addressed to Twist at an Aylmer street address in Peterborough is cited as evidence. On the petition of Assistant Attorney Edson, Judge Hazel granted an order appointing Frederick Denny to take Twist's disposition, and the Peterborough painter will be heard Thursday here in the Federal court.

Europe Partly on Water Wagon

LONDON, July 26—The latest official information available here as to the measures which have been taken in other countries with regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors since the outbreak of the war has been made public.

In Austria-Hungary the hours for the sale of intoxicants have been limited on ordinary days to between nine o'clock in the morning and five o'clock in the afternoon, and on Sundays and holidays all shops in which liquors only are sold are closed.

More or less absolute prohibition of the sale of alcoholic liquors to soldiers obtains in sixteen police districts in Denmark, and in some districts this applies to civilans. The use of potatoes and varous kinds of grain in the manufacture of alcohol is forbidden.

France forbids the sale of absinthe.

Germany forbids the sale of spirits to soldiers of all rank in uniform in Berlin and in the Province of Brandenburg. The output of breweries and distilleries is limited. A bill, in preparation, is designed to permit the prohibition of the sale of spirits.

In Holland saloons are closed earlier in certain districts.

The use of potatoes and grain in Norway is restricted in the manufacture of spirits and beer. Spirits are sold on only four days a week.

In Russia all wine shops, beer saloons and government vodka shops were closed at the beginning of mobilization, except in hotels of the best restaurants, until the completion of mobilization, and this order, with slight modifications, remain in force. The sale of beer and wine in Petrograd is restricted to forty-nine hotels and restaurants. Light red and white wine and champagne may be sold by wine merchants between ten o'clock in the morning and six o'clock in the evening, except on Saturdays and the eve of festivals, when the hours are from ten until two. The sale of all intoxicants is forbidden on Sundays and feast days. Liquor in the hotels and restaurants is supplied only with meals.

In other European countries few or no measures have been taken concerning the sale of liquor.

Played Trombone In Band, Now Feeding One of Big Guns

Mr. Angus McPherson, of the 57th Regimental Band, has received a letter from Bombardier Wm. E. Graham, of the 10th Battery, 3rd Artillery Brigade, and a former trombone player with the 57th musicians. He mentions that he has been under arms for nearly a year and has been in some warm engagements. The last one proved the hottest. Bombardier states that they fired their guns point blank at a range of 135 yards. He did not expect to get out of that action alive. Bombardier Graham asks to be remembered to his friends in Peterborough.

SIX VACANCIES IN THE HOUSE

Resignation of Sir James Aikins and W. T. Sharpe Increase Number

OTTAWA, July 26.—The resignation from the Federal constituencies of Brandon and Lisgar of Sir James Aikins and W. F. Sharpe, respectively, have been received by Mr. Speaker Sproule, and the warrants duly issued. The two seats are now vacant. This makes six vacancies for the Federal House. The others are: East Hamilton, made vacant by the death of the late Hon. Sam. Barker; Prince, P.E.I., made vacant by the death of the late J. W. Richards; King's, N.S., made vacant by the enforced resignation of A. De Witt Foster, who was implicated in the famous King's county horse deals; and Carleton, made vacant by the retirement of W. F. Garland, who pleaded guilty before Sir Charles Davidson to making large profits out of the sale of field dressings for wounded soldiers.

While it is probable that the same policy as was adopted last fall in connection with vacant seats will be followed in the cases of those made vacant by the death of the sitting members, and their successors be allowed to go in without contest, it is admitted that a different state of affairs exists in the other four seats. The vacancies in Lisgar and Brandon were palpably created for political reasons, both men resigning their seats in the Federal House for party purposes. In Carleton and King's a contravention of the independence of Parliament act was the cause.

In the case of King's it is freely rumoured that Mr. Foster will again stand before the convention and confidently expects to be renominated. It is scarcely conceivable that the Opposition, in such a case, would stand quietly by and permit the man who was publicly reprimanded in Parliament to return to his seat in the House unopposed.

It is not believed here that Mr. Sharpe will remain long in Provincial politics. For some time back his retirement from the more strenuous arena of politics and his appointment to the Senate has been predicted in the capital.

HAD PLANS OF THE CITY

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, July 26.—A man who gave his name as Jean Bonchard and his home as Luxembourg was arrested yesterday on Mount Royal. Amongst papers found in Bouchard's pockets was a small map of the city, on which the location of the different armouries, the railway stations, public buildings, pumping stations and reservoirs, as well as some of the largest establishments where war munitions for the allied armies are being manufactured, were carefully noted. He also had a notebook that was well filled with copious notes in German, as well as copies of a German newspaper published in New York, and a couple of local newspapers. Though poorly dressed he had $376.75 in his pockets, including some German coins. Baggage checks were also found on him, and the police think the man had made frequent trips to the United States.

Bouchard was handed over to the military authorities.

Bad Explosion In a Mine

Eight Killed and Eight Others Probably Fatally Burned.

Special to The Examiner:

CHRISTOPHER, Ill., July 27. — An explosion in the north west entry of mine No. 1, at the United Coal Mining Co.'s mines, at 8.30 a.m. today, killing eight men outright, burned eight others, probably fatally, and injured a score less seriously.

A Display of National Flags

The special feature of Tuesday night's programme to be given by the Temple Band at Victoria Park will be the display of the national flags as the national anthem of the different allied nations are played by the band.

Bandsman Fred Gray, who recited so acceptably last Tuesday evening, will recite again on Tuesday night. 'Farmer Brown's Transformation.'

The band will march to the park from the temple.

Are Auto Drivers Sufficiently Considering Safety of Public?

"The Automobile Association may be heard from when a question of the safety of tires and springs arises," remarked a iticzen this morning in commenting upon recent auto accidents; "but," he persued, "you don't hear them saying much about the safety of the public."

It was this man's idea that the uto Club should try to co-operate with the police and the public more than it is claimed has been done in the past.

Said an auto owner: "There are two classes of fool drivers in the opinion of the public. One is the man who is speeding at every opportunity, who imagines that accidents never happen; the other is the conservatively careful man who is laughed at for his extreme caution. This same car owner admitted that he had never even bruised a fender as the result of the care he exercised.

eent aidents might easily have had fatal consequences, and a recent police court case indicates that the traffic by-law is not receiving the respect it merits from car owners.

Drivers of horses should also adhere to the requirements of the by-law. Not long ago, a policeman at a George Street corner held up his hand toward an approaching farmer, but the warning was utterly unheeded —probably was not understood.

And as to turning in the blocks, cutting corners sharply, and other points covered by the by-law auto drivers appear to be a law unto themselves.

THE PORT SEVERN LOCKS ARE OFFICIALLY OPENED

MIDLAND, Ont., July 26.—Port Severt is a small village three miles across the bay from Waubaushene at a point where Severn River empties into the Georgian Bay. For the past 18 months a staff of men have been engaged in constructing at that point the Georgian Bay end of the Trent Valley Canal. The Severn River is about ten feet higher than the Georgian Bay, and, to permit flat-bottom vessels to pass up and down with their cargoes of grain to the seaboard, locks had to be constructed, which has necessitated a large expenditure of money.

Last week the locks were completed, and the official opening took place to-day, when the Government yacht Margaret, the City Queen and the motor yacht Tenno carried excursionists to witness this important event. About 100 launches and six or seven auto cars from Midland, Penetanguishene, Port McNicholl, Victoria Harbour, Waubaushene and Coldwater also went over, carrying full loads of passengers, swelling the number up to probably twelve or fifteen hundred. At 3 o'clock the first launch entered the locks, carrying Mr. H. Benentt, M.P., representing East Simcoe; the Reeve and Deputy Reeve of Midland, Mr. J. H. Armstrong, Government engineer for this district, and others. Other launches followed to the number of eight. Then the gate was closed and water was let in. This process was repeated till 100 launches passed through, while every available point of advantage was lined with spectators. It took about three hours to lock the boats through both ways, and the event proved of much interest to many who had never seen a water lock and had little conception of its significance in marine traffic on the waters of our Great Lakes.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN NOTES

SOW turnips or rutabagas on the newly plowed strawberry bed.

Watch the sweet peas closely for aphis and green fly. Spray with soap and water or some tobacco preparation.

See that the tomatoes are staked. Some of the branches may be cut away. This will give larger fruits, but not so many.

Keep the dahlia plants pruned to not more than four canes. Much nicer flowers will be the result. The plant should also be staked for best results.

An almost noiseless gasoline engine features a new electric generating set for residences and places where noise might be objectionable.

LAKEFIELD NEWS

Special to The Examiner:

LAKEFIED, July 22.—The last regular meeting of the Municipal Council of the corporation of the village of Lakefield was held in the Town Hall Lakefield, on Monday, July 12th, 1915. Reeve H. G. Fitzgerald and Councillors Griffin and Kennedy were present.

The minutes of the Court of Revision and the June meeting were read and approved.

Communications were read from the Royal Institute of Public Health, the Ontario Municipal Association, the Hydro-Electric Railway Association of Ontario, the County Treasurer and the secretary of the Trent Valley District Hydro-Electric Railway Association.

Moved by Councillor Griffin and seconded by Councillor Kennedy, that this Council join the Trent Valley District Hydro-Electric Railway Association and that the treasurer pay the fee of $5.00 and that the other communications be received.—Carried.

The Finance committee presented a report recommending the payment of the following accounts: Lakefield Electric Light Co., May street lighting, $59.37; Lakefield Electric Light Co., changing system, $60.00; W. W. Leonard, supplies, $39.20; S. Watley, use of engine 6 1-2 days at $5.00, $32.50; Jas. Sage, 2 days at $1.50, $3.00; T. Wingett, 3 days at $1.75 and $1.50, $5.00; T. Sabitino, 48 hours at 15 cents, $7.20; H. G. Fitzgerald, supplies, $3.14; Sawyer and Browning, fire department supplies, $32.80; Theos Crawford, fire department supplies, $46.00; S. White, 2 days shingling town hall, $6.00; Moore & Son, supplies for town hall, $2.05.

Moved by Councillor Kennedy and seconded by Councillor Griffin, that the report of the Finance committee be received and adopted.—Carried.

A by-law entitled by-law to authorise the levying of school debentures, general debenture county and general rates, received its several readings and was passed and signed and sealed by the Reeve and Clerk.

Moved by Councillor Kennedy, seconded by Councillor Griffin, that the Council adjourn to meet at the call of the Reeve.—Carried.

Remedy For Deafness.

Get the fattest old hen you can find. Try out all the fat from the outside and the inside of the hen. To a gill of the hen oil thus obtained, add an handful of the leaves of the sweet clover (the common name.) Keep hot all ady on the back of the range. Strain, squeezing through thin lawn. Bottle. After cleansing the insides of the ears every night, drop into the ears some of the oil, using freely, and leave it till the next night, and so on.

Slight Accident at the G.T.R. Crossing on Bethune Street

James Smith, of Bethany, drove inside the west gate at the G.T.R. crossing on Hunter street this morning when a double-header was a block away coming south. Mr. Ferguson, the gateman, shouted to him to drive on across the track, but both Mr. Smith and horse stood inert, and the former at least watched the train approach until it was crossing in front of the horse's nose. The first engine was a light one and offered no danger to the country outfit, which apparently had lost power of action, but the second one was of the mogul type, the steam cylinder of which hit "Old Dobbin" on the head and bowled him over.

Over, too, went the vehicle, throwing Mr. Smith and his wife on to the roadway. Fortunately there was no serious damage done, except that the shafts were smashed somewhat. The horse was cut only slightly on the forehead. It was stated that the train was above Brock street when Mr. Smith began to commence Bethune, but for some reason, possibly the hypnotic effect of a glance at the approaching train held the vehicle between the west rail and the sidewalk.

Germans Build Light Railways to Supply Armies in Poland

LONDON, July 26.—In the early stages of the Germanic offensive that is now approaching its climax, keen observers predicted the collapse of the operations through the inability on the part of the Central Empires to keep a supply of food and ammunition sufficient for the immense number of men engaged flowing toward the front. The South Poland terrain once before in the war proved to be a disastrous field for Teutonic ambitions. Deep sand, dotted here and there with dense undergrowth, roadless, almost trackless, it presented a formidable problem for the transport department. The solution of this problem to the extent that more than a million men engaged for more than a week in one of the most desperate battles in history, have been kept supplied with all they need in the way of ammunition and other supplies speaks volumes for German organization. And the solution of the problem, in other circumstances, would be regarded as simple.

Unable to use the automobiles which had been their main dependence on all their offensive movements, and as many as ten horses being required to move one field gun, the German engineers resorted to the use of light railways. On a foundation of fallen trees, packing cases, or whatever material was most convenient, they laid stray rails such as Americans are accustomed to see in quarries, coal mines or in brick yards. On these they placed numberless little cars, like the familiar dump cars of America, each of from one to two cubic yards capacity. Six or eight of these cars coupled easily can be pulled at fair speed over the rails by a tiny gasoline engine or slower by a pair of horses. In this way they bridged the transit difficulties critics predicted would cause the collapse of their campaign.

Every drive made by the Germans at Warsaw has had as its object not so much the capture of the city itself, although it is admitted this would be a success the importance of which could not be minimised, but a stunning blow to the Russian armies. Wars are not won by the capture of cities, but by the capture or annihilation of the fighting forces. In this case, however, not even the Germans express the hope of destroying the Russian hosts. They hope to be able to cut off the army defending Warsaw itself, probably numbering 300,000 men, but if they can compel the abandonment of the whole of Russian Poland as well and the probable elimination of Russia as a fighting factor in this war for at least ten months.

Evacuating the huge Polish salient that presents itself to attack from three sides, from Austrian or German territory, the Russians would retire to the main defence line of the Bug River which marks the natural boundary of Poland on the east. To this line Brest-Litovsk, Russia's greatest fortress and intrenched camp is the key, and the armies of the Tsar would take their position on the line Vilna-Grodno-Ialystock-Brest-Litovsk, where the vast Pripet marshes present an almost impassable barrier, and thence to Kovel, Lusk, Drubno and the Bessarabi n frontier.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

Story of Two Montreal Lacrosse Players Killed at Front Recently

(Saturday Night.)

The name of Jeremiah Bernard Kenna in the casualty lists, probably conveyed little to the majority of the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who scan the tragic column day by day, but as Jerry Kenna, first of the Shamrocks, and later of the Montreal club, he was known to many lacrosse fans in Toronto. He was killed in action on May 26, while on the previous day another well known Montreal stickhandler from the Nationals, John ("Tacks") Laderoute, had fallen on the field.

Both joined the 23rd Westmount battalion, which left Montreal in February, and after a few weeks' training in England, they were transferred to the 3rd Battalion at the front, to replace men lost in the heavy fighting in April. They were among the first of the reinforcements to give up their lives. Kenna was so anxious to get to the front quickly that he purposely selected the corps which was likely to leave soonest for the fighting line. His aged mother died only the day before the news of his fate reached Montreal. Laderoute had already had an experience of wartime conditions before leaving Canada, for, while doing sentry duty on the Grand Trunk bridge at Trenton last September, he was shot in the arm by two men lurking in the shadows. As soon as he recovered from this wound, he enlisted for active service.

Kenna's death recalled to his friends in Montreal an odd little story connected with his arrival i England. As the ship bearing the 23rd Westmounts entered the English port another steamer going out passed so close that greetings could be exchanged. Leaping to the rail, Kenna yelled to the captain on the bridge of the departing vessel:

"Are you going to Canada?"

"Yes," was the master's answer.

"Then tell all the boys in Canada that Jerry Kenna is safe and well."

"I'll do that," called back the captain as the ships drew apart, but with little expectation of meeting anyone interested in so vague and general a message.

The outward bound steamer was one of the first to come up the river to Montreal in April. As the captain came ashore, he remembered the Canadian soldier who had hailed him and he told the incident jokingly to the first man he met, one of the customs employees.

"What was his name?' asked customs man.

"Jerry Kenna," replied the captain. "Do you know him?"

"Many's the time I've body checked him," said the customs man, who happened to be Roddy Finlayson, one of the most famous of the lacrosse veterans.

WORLD'S CHAMPION BATSMAN—First-baseman Jack Ness, of the Oakland Pacific League, lining out the hit that netted him the world's record for hitting in consecutive games of baseball. He hit safely in 49 games in succession, breaking Ty Cobb's record of 40 straight games.

CHAMPION CANADIAN OARSMEN WILL JOIN THE COLOURS

TORONTO, July 26—If Everard B. Butler of Argonauts, ex-champion, wants another chance to beat Bob Dibble of the Don Rowing Club, the Canadian and American sculling champion, he better get busy right now and make sure of meeting him at the Canadian Henley, for the champion has the firing line fever, and has determined to enlist for the front right after the Canadian Henley and National regattas. He is going better now than he ever was, and is confident of beating everything he faces next month.

"I am going to row at the Canadian Henley and National regattas, and then it's me for the colours," said Dibble to-day. "I am only doing what a majority of our active club oarsmen have already done."

"Yes, and there will be more of those now rowing go with him after the Henley Regatta to-day," said Captain Webby of the club. "We have already sent twenty men, and we only have eighteen left, and of these I think over half have determined to go. Indeed, I think that after Henley we will have to call off our fall regatta and just about close up shop."

FEW REASONS WHY E. COLLINS GETS BIG PAY

Seaborn Cites His Wonderful Play to Show His Great Worth

Sitting back of the press box at Comiskey park one day were three fans, who were pals and regulars in attendance. They were discussing great players, and each had his favourites, in whom he could see no fault, but each could pick some flaw in the pets of the others. Just then Eddie Collins pulled a play with a bit of the unexpected in it that wrecked the opposing team's offence. Said one of the three:

"I've hardly missed a game this season, and I haven't seen that second baseman think of the wrong play."

"Nor I," said another of the three.

"Nor I," echoed the third.

That is why Eddie Collins is worth to a winning team every cent of the big price Charles A. Comiskey gave Philadelphia for his services and every cent of his big bi-monthly pay check.

No Attemtp at Comparison.

This is no attempt to compare Eddie Collins with other great players, past, present, or future, nor to make him out an errorless wonder, than whom there is nor, or was, or ever will be greater. But as I watched the White Sox and the Red Sox battling for the lead in the double header which opened their recent series the incident of those three fan pals was recalled, and I wondered if they were there to see what the Sox keystone guardian did and how earnestly and brilliantly he worked to win both those games, one of which was lost in spite of him. Perhaps the fans who did see not see that double header combat would like to know, too.

In the attack Collins twice put the White Sox in the lead in the first game after the Bostonians had tied up the score, and in each case he did it with little help from his pals. In Chicago's fourth, after the Red Sox had scored one run, knotting the tally made by Felsch's home run, Collins led the attack on oster with a three base hit before anybody was out. Anything would score him, but Fournier made sure of it with a single. And before that round was over the White Sox had a lead of two runs.

Two Base on Sacrifice.

That lead was wiped out in the eighth when Boston counted twice. Again in the Chicago half Collins put victory within Chicago's graps, and by a brilliant feat. On an error and an out he reached second base with one down With Leibold at bat, Collins started for third just as the batsman laid down a bun which pulled Gardner off that sack. Leibold was thrown out at first, but when the ball reached Gainer Collins was half way between third and home, and he finished with a terrific slide which eluded the catcher's tough, although Gainer relayed the ball to the plate in time for an even break at least. That this one run lead, established by Collins' speed, was wiped out by Boston in the ninth inning does not in any way detract from the value of his efforts.

On the defence in that first game Collins enacted the role of life saver three different times, not by brilliant stops or throws or catches so much as being at the right spot in the right instant to nip Boston base runners. In the third inning the first two Boston batsmen made safe hits off Scott, but neither reached second base. Twice the batsmen fell down in attempted hit and run plays and each time Schalk threw to Collins. Neither throw was good, because the batsmen interfered with Schalk, but Collins took both throws in bad position, yet tagged out the runners.

Plays Great Fieding Game.

In the fourth, when Gardner on third and Thomas on first tried a double steal, Collins took Schalk's throw, chased Thomas back toward first, keeping one eye on Gardner all the time, and suddenly wheeled and threw to third, nipping Gardner off that base. In the sixth, when Speaker tried to steal second after a pass, Collins received a low throw, scooping it off the dirt, and with catlike swiftness tagged the great Triss as he slid past. That was followed by a single and a muffed fly that would have made several runs for Boston but for Collins' feat.

In the second game, which Chicago won, Collins got on first every time he came to bat. In the first inning he singled with two out, then sneaked to second when an extremely short passed ball escaped Carrigan. This put hom in position to score, but Fournier missed the ball in a hit and run play, and Collins was called out on third by a hair.

Makes Homer on Speed.

In the third Collins came to bat with Weaver on second and one out. This time he mauled a fast liner over second and when the ball shot through Speaker, who was running it for a quick throw to the plate, Collins' great speed enabled him to complete the circuit while the ball was being relieved. And that gave Chicago a lead of two runs. In the fifth Collins was passed with two out and got no farther, but in the eighth he led off with another pass, went to third on Fournier's single to right, where Hooper has a fine whip, and scored on Leibold's fly to Speaker, who barely missed doubling him up at the plate, and would have doubled up any one but a speed merchant.

Defensively Collins had nothing out of the ordinary to do in that second game, because Russell's pitching called for little assistance.

That as just one day's work for Collins.

The Japanese government has accepted a plan of railway building that will require ten years to complete and add more than 130 miles to the existing lines.

The output of the fish cultural operations of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, for the fiscal year ending with June, was the largest on record.

Naming the Mississippi.

The Mississippi river had more than a dozen native names, different designations being given at different points in its course. The Algonquins called it the Meche Sebe, other tribes termed it Chucagua, Mico, Tumalasan, Tapaia Ri and other names. The Algonquin name was finally adopted by the whites for the whole river. The meaning is "father of waters," or "the whole river." Twenty-seven spellings are noted in the writings of early explorers.—Minneapolis Journal.

Old Peppermint Remedies.

Peppermint drops have long been the unfailing comforter of old ladies—and others—but in recent times we seem to have got past needing some of the medicinal qualities for which peppermint oil was held in high esteem in bygone centuries. Gerarde in his Herbale (1633) advises the use of it either "poured into the eares with honeyed water" or "taken inwardly" as a certain specific "against scolopendres, beare-worms, sea-serpents, scorpions and the bitings of mad dogs!"—London Chronicle.

A Legal Query.

Tired of the long-winded oratory of the attorney for the defense, the judge interrupted him.

"Mr. Sharke," he said, "may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly, your honor. What is the question?"

"Language," said the judge, "we are told, is given to conceal thought or words to that effect. Inasmuch as you don't seem to have any thought to conceal, I would like to know why you are talking?"

The Town of Bushire.

Residents of a miserable seaport on the Persian gulf called their town Bushire (Boosheer). It has narrow, dirty, ill paved streets. The city is visited by earthquakes and simoons and stints its children of wholesome air and fresh water. It appears, however, to have enjoyed high repute among the ancient Elamites, who have left buried about, under moldering heaps bricks with cuneiform inscriptions. In summer the citizens of Bushire live in a heat that is almost unbearable.

A Fateful Game of Chess.

It is a Spanish tradition that the fate of Columbus overhung on a game of chess. For years the great navigator had haunted the Spanish court, trying to interest some one in his plans, but at last he determined to abandon the country and visit France. The night before his intended departure he sought an audience with the queen to communicate his intentions and to take his leave. The queen asked him to wait while she made another effort to interest the king. She found Ferdinand engaged at a game of chess and, [illegible] him by her entreaties caused him to lose a piece. Annoyed and irritated by the incident, the king, after rudely denouncing Columbus and his schemes, informed Isabella that the result of the petition would depend on the result of the game. It grew worse, and the chances were all against the launching of the expedition. But the queen, overlooking the board, whispered to her august spouse a suggestion relative to a move that would be advantageous. The king followed the advice, the complexion of the game was quickly reversed, and Columbus' dream of years was realized at last.

Prolific Fungi.

An average sized mushroom will produce as many as 1,800,000,000 spores, and a common toadstool shaggy cap has been shown to produce as many as 5,000,000,000. Fortunately for the other inhabitants of the world, however, the probability of successful growth of any given spore is somewhat remote.

The mushroom or toadstool plant is formed by fine filamentous threads which ramify beneath the soil, and if we assume that a successful plant of the mushroom or shaggy caps produces as many as ten mushrooms or toadstools we find that the chance against successful growth to maturity is respectively about 18,000,000,000 and 50,000,000,000 to one in the two species mentioned. Even more prolific than the mushrooms and toadstools proper is the giant puffball, a large specimen of which has been known to produce as many as 7,000,000,000,000 sporea.—London Knowledge.

Empty Compliments.

Fifty years or more ago Sir Harry Smith, after whose wife Ladysmith was named, was governor of Cape Colony, and led a number of campaigns against the Kaffirs. Returning from a particularly lively one, he held a review of his troops, who were in a most dilapidated condition—barefooted, ragged and half starving.

When the time came for him to say a few words he lavished praise upon them, dwelling upon their bravery, endurance and even upon their soldierlike appearance.

This last compliment was too much for the patience of the old color-sergeant. He stepped forward—tattered and unkempt—saluted most respectfully and then said:

"Begging your pardon, Sir 'Arry, we don't want no gammon; we want boots!"

This outspoken criticism was fortunately taken to good part and shortly afterward the men got their boots.—London Scraps.

One View of Golf.

"Pop, what is golf?"

"Golf, my son, is just the same as work, except that you get paid for work."—Pittsburgh Press.

Brothers.

A story that is causing considerable amusement comes from Salisbury Plain from a soldier to his mother in Toronto. The two principals in the anecdote are Lieut. Gerald Warner, of the 100th Grenadiers of Winnipeg, and Signaller R. Lindsay Warner, of the 2nd Battalion, 1st Brigade, of the 1st Canadian Contingent, who wrote the letter. Mrs. J. B. Warner, of Toronto, the mother of both soldiers, received the letter, and tells the story.

Signaller Warner received three days' leave of absence from Salisbury and having not seen London before, he found himself among the jostling crowds of Piccadilly Circus, and on all sides he was greeted with words of welcome. Quite suddenly, over the heads of the crowd he espied the khaki hat of a Canadian soldier.

Keeping his eye on the hat he drew slowly nearer, and suddenly, and to his very great surprise he found himself face to face with his brother—the superior officer, Lieut. Warner, of Winnipeg. Grinning, his hand flew to the salute, which was quickly returned by the officer.

"Enjoying London?" queried the officer.

"Yes, sir!" replied the signaller grinning.

"If you care to see me drop around to the —— hotel," said the officer, his face imperturbable.

"Yes, sir!" again replied the signaller.

The signaller clicked his heels together, saluted gravely, the officer replied, and the two passed on their respective ways.

Troubled by Conscience.

Goaded by a troubled conscience evidently, some one up in the Niagara district has sent anonymously $250 to the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals. It is accompanied by a note with the one word "restitution." The letter was post-marked at St. Catharines.

It is apparent that the fraud was committed upon the Railways and Canals Department, possibly in the days of canal tolls. It will be credited to casual revenue. Receipts of conscience money are not unusual, but as a rule they come to hand in Lent.

Millionaire Orderly.

"Where's that ruddy orderly?" yelled an English officer, recently in headquarters. The orderly appeared.

"Say, you, why don't you clean up this place occasionally?" asked the officer.

The orderly got busy. Who was he? Why, he is the son of a Canadian millionaire, who enlisted as a private for "the fun of the thing."

When the officer was told the name of the private that he was ordering about he replied, "Ah, there are lots of them around here. This war will make men of them."

A NOBLE CHARACTER.

The man of nobility of character does not recollect injustice, for accurate recollection—especially of injuries, is not characteristic of the magnanimous man, but he rather overlooks them. He is not fond of talking of people, for he will neither speak of himself nor anybody else, for he does not care that he himself should be praised nor that others should be blamed.—Aristotle.

Climbed Precipice Barefoot, Exploit Of an Alpine

TURIN, July 27.—How the brave Italian Alpini dislodged from the Austrian defenders the whole group of the dizzy peaks on the mountain crests that encircle the summit of Monte Nero (north-west of Holmino) is a story that will be handed down in history among the most brilliant achievements in the opening phase of the Italo-Austrian struggle.

The details show that after the Italians had captured the topmost point of an elevation of 7,486 feet, and dragged their mountain guns thither, their position became endangered by the successive and heavy reinforcements and carefully prepared attacks by the enemy on the northern ridge.

Critical Action.

To dislodge the Austrians two simultaneous attacks were arranged for midnight, one on the Monte Potoce side, and the other on the side of Monte Kozliak.

It was a pitch-dark night, and the critical nature of the action made it supremely important that the attackers should use no lights and make no noise. They were under orders to refrain from firing until it was absolutely necessary.

Italy's marvellous Alpini removed their boots, swathed their feet in linen, and, armed with rifles, bayonets, and hand grenades, began the scaling of the perilous and almost perpendicular crags with daring which only those who have watched them at work—and are, moreover, familiar with the astounding topography of that region—can adequately appreciate.

Pieces of Rock as Weapons.

By 2.30 in the morning they had crept, quite unobserved, to within three yards of the enemy's trenches. An order was whispered round, and the Alpini, with a furious bound, leaped into the first rows of the Austrian entrenchments, bayoneting the stupefied occupants and inflicting great injuries with pieces of rock and the butt-ends of rifles.

In this way two whole companies of the outpost were annihilated, and two more companies, which shortly attempted to take their places, suffered, for the most part, the same fate.

The Italians kept quiet and let them come on until they had gained the foot of the last peak. Then, rolling down boulders, and pouring incessant volleys into their ranks, they sent the remnant of the battalion flying in all directions and captured their commander, Lieut.-Col. of the Honved, with other Austrian officers.

Stones and Bombs.

Meanwhile an attack on the Monte Kozliak front by two columns was duly progressing. The first column, which was to meet and join forces with the second on a connecting ridge between Monte Nero and Kozliak, advanced at 11.30 along the southern slope of the first-named height, so as to draw off some of the enemy's forces which were nestling amid the southeastern rocks. Both Italian columns came into contact just after 3 o'clock in the morning, a couple of hundred yards from the enemy's position.

When protected by a mountain battery from the summit they stormed the trenches with stones and bombs, while other detachments cut off the enemy's retreat.

The Italians collected 168 Austrian dead, exclusive of many Hungarians who were killed on the steep slopes of the mountain. The victors also took two machine-guns, large quantities of arms and munitions, and 200 prisoners, of whom 300 were wounded.

"Owing to the suddenness of the onslaught, the Italian losses are stated to be slight.

"We were clean outdone," confessed a captured Austrian officer. "We imagined not even clambering cats or stealthy tigers could have got at us like you Alpiniri."

TO DISCARD FRECKLES

The use of creams containing animal substance sometimes causes hair to grow; you run no risk of acquiring superfluous hair when you use ordinary mercolized wax. There is nothing better for a discoloured skin, as the wax naturally absorbs the offensive cuticle. The latter is naturally replaced by a clear, smooth, healthy complexion, full of life and expression. It's the sensible way to discard a freckled, tanned, over red, blotchy, or dingle skin. Get an ounce of mercolized wax at any druggist's and apply slightly like cold cream, erasing in the morning with soap and water. It takes a week or so to complete the transformation.

38th Battalion Going to Relieve Royal Canadians

OTTAWA, July 27.—The 38th Ottawa Battalion, commanding, has received orders to relieve the Royal Canadian Regiment of the permanent force, which has been doing garrison duty at Hamilton, Bermuda, since the war broke out. The R. C. R. will proceed to the front immediately, it being in a high state of efficiency. The 38th will complete its training on the island and will later be relieved by another regiment of the Canadian expeditionary force. The officers and men of the Royal Canadian Regiment have been urging that they be sent to the front.

The 38th will be presented with colours here on Sunday afternoon, when they arrive from Kingston en route to Bermuda.

Lieut. Harold Hill of Peterborough is a subaltern with this regiment.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, July 27.—U. S. Steel quarterly earnings for June 30 $37,950,055, against $12,457,805 previous quarter, and $10,933,179 in June 30, 1914 quarter. Regular dividend declared on preferred stock.

NEW YORK, July 26.—"There must be an overissue of Bethlehem Steel," said a jocular broker on Saturday. "Why do I say this? Because so many friends have confidentially told me of the amounts they hold.

"Each of them—let him tell it—has anywhere from 800 to 1,800, bought a year ago around 30. It is now 208, following a net rise of $20 last week and $21 this week. As there are only 148,000 in all, if Mr. Schwab and his associates still hold a controlling interest, I don't see how there can be enough to go around unless there's an overissue."

It would seem that $208 a share is a pretty good price for a stock that has never paid a dividend, but this is outdone by the rise in Electric Boat stock on "the curb market," which on Saturday rose a trifle of 100 points, to 362, on dealings aggregating about 1,300 shares. A year ago it was quoted somewhere between $10 and $20 a share. The directors have declared dividends, payable in the autumn, but nothing has been paid on the stock for many years.

In fact it would seem during the present craze for "war stocks" that dividends are detrimental to values. Such railway issues as New York Central and Baltimore and Ohio and an industrial like Mackay Companies common stock—all of which are regularly paying five per cent—are quoted round $80 to $86, and are comparatively neglected. Indeed, one reason for the dullness in seasoned dividend paying shares is the caution of investors, who fear that the crazy gambling in manipulated "war stocks" will end in a ruinous collapse.

Warnings are coming from many quarters since the statement was issued last week by a director in one of the manufacturing companies denying exaggerated reports about its "war orders" and profits and prospective dividends. The Financial Chronicle says that fantastic speculation "has now reached such proportions as to foreshadow the usual disastrous results of such unwarranted skyrocket movements and the accompanying disturbance to legitimate business." A statement to the public is issued by the Foreign Trade Bureau of the Philadelphia Commercial Museum to correct the impression that present manufacturing activity in this country is dependent upon "war orders." It says: "Large orders for supplies for the fighting countries have been placed in the United States. * * * As rumour spreads, one of these orders for a few hundred thousand dollars' worth of supplies soon assumes proportions running into the millions. Then, for every such order that is actually placed, reports usually have it credited to a dozen and one concerns."

Grain Stocks.

Chicago, July 25.—Belated shorts in the July delivery have only this week in which to even up their positions. There is said to be a fair-sized open interest in all of the cereals, with probably the most aggravated situation in wheat.

Stocks of the various grains in Chicago are abnormally light and, under the most unfavourable weather conditions ever known at this season, there is no likelihood of enough wheat, corn and oats being brought in to protect the shorts.

Foreigners are the principal longs in July wheat and oats and they apparently intend to stand on their lines and demand delivery, the shorts will be obliged either to scour the country for the grain or go into the pit, and make purchases at much higher level than now current.

Advances in the markets of the Old World for spot wheat and cargoes reflect the actual conditions abroad.

It has been said all along Great Britain and France would have enough wheat for some time to come, as the Indian crop was taken over by Great Britain for account of the allies.

It is now reported that as the weather for harvesting wheat is unfavourable, the importing countries will be obliged to look to North America for a great deal of their supplies.

THE RUSSIANS SINK MANY TURKISH VESSELS

RUSSIAN BLACK SEA DESTROYERS SINK 150 TURKISH SAILING VESSELS IN THE SAMSUN AND RIZA HARBOUR

Russian Motor Launch Pursued and Sank a Loaded Turkish Vessel That Attempted to Escape---Turks in Vicinity of Mush Have Been Reinforced and Are Making a Stubborn Resistance.

Special Morning Cable:

PETROGRAD, July 28.—In the most successful raid on Turkish shipping since the war began, the Russian Black Sea destroyers on Sunday sank 150 Turkish sailing vessels in the Harbour of Samsun and Riza along the coast of Trebizond.

A Russian motor launch pursued and sank a loaded Turkish vessel that attempted to escape.

An official statement to-day dealing with operations of the Black Sea squadron and fighting in the Caucasus, reported that the Turks in the vicinity of Mush have been reinforced and are making a stubborn resistance. A [illegible] is in hot engagement along the Euphrates and drove the remnants to the right bank of the river.

SWEDISH BARK SET AFIRE.

COPENHAGEN, July 28.—The Swedish bark Madonna, bound from Halmstead to Hartlepool, was stopped by a German submarine in the North Sea and set afire, after the crew had taken to the boats.

FIGHTING UNDER OPPRESSIVE CONDITIONS.

ROME, July 28.—In a series of spectacular night battles the Italians have captured one position after another around Gorits.

Despatches received here to-day repeated the rumour that the Austrians were preparing to evacuate the fortress city, though War Office despatches offered no confirmation.

The Austrians still hold the Heights of Podgora, dominating Goritz from the west, and are pouring down heavy fire on the Berhaglieri, attempting to storm their trenches. The fighting is of the most desperate character, and despatches agree that Italians have suffered heavy losses.

For more than a fortnight, day fighting has occurred under most oppressive weather conditions, the temperature ranging about 90, and often 100 degrees. Night offers but little relief, and both armies are becoming exhausted in the terrific struggle.

Several of the more important ridges of Carso Plateau are now held by Italians.

Monte Sei Busi and Monte San Michele have been captured. Bersaglieri and Alpinests combining in attack and taking several hundred prisoners.

AUSTRIANS TO EVACUATE GORITZ IN THE FACE OF A POWERFUL ADVANCE

Italians Are Progressing With Great Rapidity---In New Note to United States, Britain Asserts Right to a Naval Blockade.

Special Morning Cable:

GENEVA, Switzerland, July 28.—Austrians are preparing to evacuate Goritz as well as Podgora in the face of a powerful Italian advance.

LONDON, Eng., July 28.—In the new note to the United States Britain asserts the right to a naval blockade.

PETROGRAD, July 28.—Russians are hotly counter-attacking in Northern Poland.

PARIS, July 28.—French have gained the control of the Upper Fecht Valley in Alsace.

NEW YORK, July 28.—It is likely Lieutenant Becker will get a new trial.

BERLIN, July 28.—Count Von Reventlow admits Germany's submarine warfare is "comparatively a failure."

CHICAGO, July 28.—Warrants have been issued for the arrest of the owners and surviving officers of the ill-fated steamer Eastland.

LONDON, July 28.—Half a mile of trenches and several Turkish guns were captured in a vigorous assault of the Allies' troops to-day.

DUNDEE, Scotland, July 28.—It was reported last night that a German submarine was destroyed by a British patrol boat off here yesterday afternoon.

LONDON, July 28.—Reports of Zeppelins flying westward over Holland set all London excited last night.

BERLIN, July 28.—The War Office admits loss of advanced trenches in Alsace to the French. Von Hindenburg is continuing his advance towards the Bug River.

LONDON, July 28.—Two German submarines shelled and sank nine small fishing boats off the Orkney Islands yesterday.

PARIS, July 28.—French troops have occupied, after severe fighting, a large portion of the German Congo.

PARCELS REACH PRISONER

Torontonian at Giessen Acknowledges Them—Don't Send Notepaper.

Doubt as to whether letters and parcels addressed to prisoners in Germany would ever reach them was dispelled yesterday by a letter received by Mrs. W. S. Milne from her son, Thomas R. Ridout, who was taken with others of the 3rd Battalion at St. Julien, and is now interned at Giessen. The letter was written on July [illegible] letters written to him on June 4, 7 and 9; also of two parcels, which he says were in very good condition. Letters written to him between May 29th, when his whereabout was first learned, and June 4th, were not mentioned.

He apologises for his many wants, but he has no other way of supplying them. He asks for canned goods, emphasising these, also lots of cigarettes and tobacco, a shirt and some socks, toilet soap (castile), and if possible cake or bread; also a razor, brush and strop. He says that it is of no use sending him notepaper as he will not be allowed to use any but the regulation German paper. They have mass every Sunday, but the priest is German and cannot speak English. He mentions Rolfe Welch as being with him, and also French friends, who were much interested in picture postcards of Niagara Falls.

CHARLES BECKER—Former Police Lieutenant whose chances to evade the electric chair to-day, are considered very small. His cell is being divested of anything which would enable him to commit suicide.

Sons In This Family Were All Born on Holidays

MARQUETTE, Mich., July 28.—At least three holidays have been eventful days for Mr. and Mrs. E. Lirette, who believe they have a record as a "patriotic" family.

Mr. and Mrs. Lirette have three sons, Edwin, Raymond and Paul. Edwin came into the world one Christmas day and Raymond was born while the world was busy celebrating Fourth of July. Paul, the last born, made his bow to the world February 12, Lincoln's birthday.

Russian Savings Show Increase

LONDON, July 28—A despatch to the Daily News from Petrograd says: "Finance Minister Bark seeks authorization to issue state securities amounting to $600,000,000 beyond the sum at present allowed. He says that the returns of the savings banks to the beginning of July showed $900,000,000 above last year, which is almost the same amount as the treasury lost through the prohibition of the sale of alcohol."

Increase In Wheat And Barley Crops

OTTAWA, July 27.—A cablegram received to-day by the Department of Agriculture from the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, gives the following crop existence for 54 governments of Russia in Europe; winter wheat, 463,467,000 bushels, being an increase of 29.3 per cent. over last year's crop. The barley crop shows an increase of 30.9 per cent.; oats an increase of 32.7 per cent., and corn a decrease of 3.2 per cent.

Good for Boys

Camping time is a time for joy for the youngsters. Very few things are needed for a cracking good time—a tent, blankets, plain, stout clothing, and plenty of good, wholesome food.

The First Ice Cream Soda

How we Learned to Like This Delicious Drink.

The City of Elizabeth, N.J., is said to have been the place where the first glass of ice-cream soda was served.

The discovery that ice cream and charged water make a delicious combination was not the result of any thought or effort. It was only a lucky chance which gave the world the secret of the cooling delicacy which is so popular.

It is said that there was once in Elizabeth a man who kept a soda fountain, and also sold ice cream out of a can. Up to that time no one had ever thought of combining soda and ice cream.

Those were primitive days, and the Elizabeth man did not have his fountain well cooled. One day a customer called for some soda water, and when he got it found it was quite warm.

"Scotty," said he, "if your soda water was as cold as your ice cream it would taste better." "Huh?" answered the soda-fountain man; "well, I guess I can make it so."

He thereupon took a large spoonful of ice cream out of the can and plunged it into the glass of soda water. The customer found it delicious, and next day he came along and demanded another glass of soda with ice cream in it. Some one else tried it and liked it, and the dealer soon found that he had accidentally invented a new drink—or a new food, whatever it is. The fashion spread thence until it had covered the whole country.

Two Were Killed By Ambulance

WINNIPEG, July 28.—P. Galls and F. W. Bowles, both Winnipeg men, are dead as the result of injuries received when the police ambulance taking a patient to the General Hospital and going at a high rate of speed, dashed on to the sidewalk at the northwest corner of Sargent Avenue and Sherbrooke Street. The ambulance, driven by George Fogg, the regular chauffeur of the vehicle, was en route to the General Hospital with a patient, Tottie Farquhar, nine years of age, who had been injured by a street car in Fort Rouge. At the intersection of the two thoroughfares a bicycle shot out in front of the ambulance, and it was in his effort to avoid contact with the wheelman that the chauffeur suddenly swerved to the side of the street.

J. H. BURNHAM WINS THE CONSERVATIVE CONVENTION

Present Member Defeats Jas. Kendry, President of the Conservative Association, by 97 Votes on a Ballot for the Nomination—Expected Fireworks Were Absent.

J. H. Burnham the present representative of West Peterborough in the House of Commons, was chosen again by the largely attended Liberal-Conservative convention in Victoria Hall last night as the standard-bearer of the Liberal-Conservative party in the next Dominion elections. The choice was not made without a resort to the ballot, and Mr. Burnham's opponent was Jas. Kendry, for many years President of the Conservative Association, and a former member for West Peterborough in the Commons. There were 310 ballots polled, and of these 153 were marked for Mr. Burnham, 56 for Mr. Kendry, and one was spoiled, giving the present Federal member a majority of 97 votes.

No Fireworks.

Contrary to the expectations of many who have been following the movements of the two respectiv factions in the Conservative party, and who looked for some excitement at the convention, there were no fireworks. Mr. Burnham's workers had evidently had the superior organization, and some of the ward and township delegations turned up with practically a solid Burnhom representation. From the outset it did not require a prophet to forecast the result. "We're beaten a city block," remarked one Kendry man long before the ballot was taken, and he went home after he had cast his vote, without waiting for the announcement.

Mr. Kendry, president of the Association, was in the chair, and with him on the platform were the Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labour; J. H. Burnham, M.P.; Robt Ruddy, K.C., and W. H. Moore, K.C.

The chairman's address did not occupy much time. Mr. Kendry welcomed the Minister of Labour to Peterborough. "In regard to the convention" he said, "I hope that it will be conducted fairly and that you keep good order. To the delegates I will say that I hope you will vote for the best man and that you have come here to do your duty."

The reading of the minutes of the last meeting was dispensed with, and the roll-call of the delegates carried out. Then came the appointment of scrutineers. Ald. Wm. Langford, Jr., John Smith and Edward Manning being chosen.

The first test of strength followed. The chairman announced that some changes in the constitution had been proposed and asked the desire of the convention as regards taking up the matter at that stage. Two Kendry delegates moved that this question be left over until another meeting, but R. J. Soden moved in amendment, seconded by Donald Anderson, of South Monaghan, that it be taken up after the nomination if there was time. The amendment carried by a large vote.

The Nominations.

Then came the call for nominations. William Batten moved the nomination of J. H. Burnham, the mention of the name being responsible for an outburst. "Mr. Burnham is a good earnest, upright man," said Mr. Batten. "He can't be pulled around, but does what he thinks is right. I don't think we could get a better man in the City of Peterborough."

The nomination was seconded by Wm. Waterman of South Monaghan.

T. F. Matthews nominated Jas. Kendry. In doing so he said that all wanted fair play. He remarked that unity and co-operation were needed, and the support of every man of the party for the candidate selected was necessary. "I believe Mr. Burnham to be honest, and have no fault to find in what has been said about him, but I think West Peterborough can be represented by a better man." There was a chorus of "No" at this stage, but Mr. Matthews went on to name Mr. Kendry amid applause that did not nearly approach the high explosive quality of the noise that had greeted his opponent's name. Andrew Webb seconded the nomination. No further names were placed before the convention, and polling was proceeded with. On motion of Mr. Matthews, seconded by Mr. Batten, the convention pledged itself to support the candidate chosen.

Mr. Crothers Spoke.

While the votes were being counted, Hon. Mr. Crothers addressed the crowd. The opening of his speech was along the usual campaign lines, a condemnation of the Laurier Government for alleged failure to implement the promises made out of office and an eulogy of the present Government for what Mr. Crothers termed the manner in which they had carried out what they had promised to do. The naval question, as might be expected, was referred to at some length without any new light being thrown upon it, and Mr. Crothers also touched upon the war contracts scandal, excusing the Government on the ground that things had to be purchased hurriedly and that the officials who were to blame had been appointed by the Liberal Government during their term of office. The principal part of the Minister's speech, and the one that aroused the most enthusiasm was a plea for greater efforts on the part of Canadians to assisting the Empire in its great struggle. This portion of the address is published in full elsewhere.

At the conclusion of his address the result of the ballot was announced, and the Burnham delegates cut loose with an outburst of cheering.

Mr. Burnham, after shaking hands with his opponent, spoke briefly, thanked the convention for the confidence they had shown in him.

Mr. Kendry also addressed the convention. Personally, he said he was satisfied with the result, and he asked his friends to accept his thanks for the support they had shown him.

The usual stereotyped resolutions of confidence in Premiers Borden and Hearst were passed with the customary cheers, after which the election of officers was proceeded with.

Mr. Kendry asked to be relieved from the duties of president, and Mr. R. J. Soden announced that Mr. Frank Adams also wished his resignation to be accepted on account of ill health. Mr. Soden remarked that both gentlemen had done great service for the Conservative party, and moved that a new office be created and that they be appointed life honourary presidents of the Association. The motion was carried unanimously, and three cheers were given for the two veteran Conservatives.

Avoid Harsh Pills! Doctors Condemn Them

Most Pills unfortunately are harsh and drastic; they cause inflammation and great discomfort. Rather like nature is the way a pill should act, mildly but effectively. Science has established nothing more satisfactory as a family pill than the old reliable pills of Dr. Hamilton's, which for forty years have had a premier place in America. Dr. Hamilton's Pills are very mild and can be effectively used by the aged, by children, and indeed by men and women of all ages. No stomach or bowel medicine is more reliable. No remedy for indigestion, headache or biliousness is so effective, so mild, so certain to quickly cure as a 25c box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

American Girl Queen of Poland If Allies Win

PARIS, July 28.—Brighter days for Poland, following the ultimate success of the allied arms are confidently predicted here. The name of Prince Poniatowski is mentioned frequently as that of the future king of united Poland.

Prince Poniatowski is popular in all the allied lands, the only objection being that his wife is not of royal birth. The princess was Miss Helen Sperry of Stockton, Cal. The difficulty however is not insurmountable and the American lady may yet wear the Polish crown.

The Poniatowski house dates from the eighteenth century. The Prince was born in Paris in 1864 and was married in 1894.

FOUR REASONS WHY YOU SHOULD WEAR

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXARDER WASON

Then he moved away and I lay and shivered, shakin' out a little of my good-nature at every quake; until I began to think mostly of myself. "I'm to be ills bloomin' lookin'-glass in this game," sez I to myself, "that's what I'm to be; but what I want to know is, how in thunder will I get out of here providin' things go ill with him?"

This got to be a serious thought with me as the cold bit in deeper, 'cause I didn't know exactly where I was nor how I'd got there nor how to get back in a hurry, and I could see a lot of embarrassin' complications which was likely to arise provided I had to perch up on the rock through a whole endurin' day; but just then I heard a sleepy bird begin to chirp and twitter, and on lookin' up I saw that the sky was beginnin' to cut out from the gray gash of the canon wall, and this warmed me up enough to notice that the sleepy bird was Tom Smith givin' a signal.

Purty soon a head peared out from the farthest shelter and after listenin' a moment, it drew back. Some time after this a woman wearin' a loose silk gown with a cord around the waist of it stole out and down towards the crag on which I was freezin'. She didn't look short in that rig, she looked tall and slender, and her face in some sort of a Mexican lace thing suggested to me that she was good lookin' enough to suit anyone, but I knew her to be Belle Stern all right, from the eager way she tripped along.

The fire was about five hundred feet from the crag, so that I had ample time to note her movements as she tripped lightly along. I don't mean that, but since I've got to leafin' and readin' more, I find myself usin' a lot o' sayin's the' ain't a grain o' sense in. She didn't come trippin' along, nor she wouldn't if it had still been pitch dark and the ground four feet deep with rabbit-snares. She came steppin' with sure, firm steps, settin' down her feet flat but springy and swingin' her eyes from side to side to catch a first glimpse of Tom Smith.

He was standin' in a little openin' close in to the crag, and as she came through the dwarf pine she couldn't see him 'til she was right close to him. When she got close to me I saw I hadn't made any mistake in thinkin' her good-lookin', and there was a hungry, eager expression in her face which prepared me for big trouble. She was goin' to meet the man she loved, this woman was, and her face was strong.

I think my moral nature must lack temper for as sure as mud, the minutes my eyes rested on her face, I knew I would be sorry if she lost her deal. The' was a courage in her face which don't come from sittin' still and lookin' at a pair of folded hands, and something in me went

Her face wasn't hard like I expected, in fact the' was quite a show of maidenly reserve in it—that is, what I call maidenly reserve. My notion is, that keepin' a man miserable is the most fun a young woman can have, and nothin' does a more complete job of this than scarin' him off and jerkin' him back again. They use maidenly reserve to scare men off, and war-finery to jerk 'em back, and the maidenly reserve differs about as much as the war-finery. Some ladies wear red calico trousers and a blanket when they dress for war and some wear an open-range waist and a drag-net skirt; but they all dress for war.

When she and Tom Smith came face to face, they looked into each other's eyes questionin', her face got a little tender, and she breathed out the one word, "Gerald," which gave me a slight spasm. Gerald had been the title of that boy-avenger in the paper novel who had about wore the buzzards to a thread keepin' the prairie clean of the Injuns he piled up so constant; and I was able to tell by this that Gerald was the name Lester Percival had took when he shook his paper-knife at the lookin'-glass for the last time. I don't mind a feller sheddin' off his name once a year like a snake swappin' skins; but if Tom Smith was to unload his names one after the other it would have sounded like callin' the roll in a cavalry troop.

Well, he didn't warm up much at the name, but I got a good warmin' grin at thinkin' of what a state a feller's mind must be in to shake off two stick names like Lester and Percival, and then to label himself Gerald of his own free will. He nodded his head at her and said, "How do you do?" in a way to make "Twinkle twinkle little star" sound like a war-whoop.

She froze in a second and sez: "Why did you come?"

It was creepy to see the change which came over her when she said this; her eyes flashed, her lips hardened, her hands clenched, and her muscles stiffened until it was mighty easy to believe all I had ever heard of her.

A look of relief came to Tom Smith's face at havin' got through with the peace pipe and to the tomahawk in such short order, and he said blunt as a store-box: "I wanted to know if all was over between us."

She gave a bitter, scornful laugh. "You ort to know as much about that as I do," sez she.

This struck me as bein' purty clean shootin' and it tickled me to see him squirm.

"No," sez he, "it's the woman's place to decide."

"That's easy," sez she, "we'll get married right now."

He dropped his eyes and a grin o' real mischief flashed across her face. She was more like a man's man than a man's woman, this gel, but she was a man's woman, too.

"Oh, well," sez she, "then everything's all right. I was beginnin' to fear you might want to marry that meek-eyed filly down at the Horse-shoe. If you don't want to marry, what is it you want me to decide?"

"I do want to carry the gel on the Horse-shoe," sez he, lookin' at her square.

"You'll never do it," sez she, and there was no threat in her voice, just the plain statement of a fact. "I've been true to you, and I've let you go your own gait; but no other woman ever marries you."

"Belle," sez he, "you've been a mighty good gel, and I've thought a heap of you, and think a heap of you still—but not the way I think of her It isn't a question o' goodness, or anything else I could put into words—I'll never marry you; what's the use o' you bein' a dog in the manger?"

"What's the use of anything?" sez she. "I'm no moral missionary savin' young men for other women; I'm lookin' out for myself, and she don't get you."

"Then you intend to get your happiness by trying to keep me from my chance at happiness?" sez he.

"I don't expect much happiness," sez she; "but I must say it looks purty flat to me for a man to come to a woman and try to get her to pretend that she enjoys ending what he hasn't the nerve to break off himself. Why should I worry about whether your mind is easy or not—my mind 'll never be easy again. What you should have done was to marry the girl, and then to take chances on me."

"It was just because I feel for this girl as I do, that I couldn't ask her to take chances," sez he. "She wouldn't marry me with any sort of a string on me. It was she, herself, who made me come to you."

"She can make you do stunts already, can she?" sez Belle Stern, with a grin. "Well, I'm not studyin' about her, not one minute. I've lived like a man, and I can play my games like a man. If you marry her, I'll not put on a veil and weep myself to death. I'll kill her if I can."

"Why don't you kill me?" sez Tom Smith. "I'm the one to blame—why don't you kill me?"

"Perhaps it would be best," she. "I'll think it over."

Two men came out of the shelter closest to me, and began to build up the fire and get ready for breakfast. One, by the scar, was Bill, and I took the other to be Bronco as he didn't look anything like Baldy Hagus.

"Well, are you goin' to kill me?" sez Tom Smith.

"Would you stand right still and let me kill you, or would you try to kill me?' sez she, lookin' at him with an eager hope in her eyes.

"You know I couldn't try to kill you," sez he.

"You didn't hesitate long at cuttin' Buck down," sez she, "and he never had tried to stand in your way in anything."

"You're a coward," sez he, glarin' at hear. "You know it was the drink that made me shoot Buck, and I intend to give his brothers a chance to shoot me before I leave here. You have rode me long enough, Belle, to know whether or not fear of a bullet takes the heart out of me."

"I know," sez she. "I wish you were a coward so that I could despise you."

"Well," sez Tom Smith, "I tell you right now that this has to be settled to-day— everything. Either I leave here square with your crowd, or I don't leave here. I'm through with you all, you never did any more for me than I've done for you, and I don't intend to beg a favour of any of you. Decide what you intend to do right now, for in two minutes, I'm going down to the camp and have it out with men in men's clothing."

She sprang at him with a cry, and as she sprang she drew a gun from the same sort of a holster that Tom Smith wore. "I'm a man in woman's clothing, am I?" said she. "That is what you think of me, is it? Well, then we'll go out together, you and I, and that will be a fit marriage for the man-woman I have made of myself."

She held the gun an inch from his heart and her face was set and drawn. He stood and looked down at her, his hand limp at his sides, and a look of scorn in his face. I was afraid to breathe deep and so gave myself up to hopin' she'd change her mind.

"Belle," said a weak voice, "what on earth are you goin' to do?"

"I'm goin' to quit the game in a man's way," sez she, turnin' her face into the pines, but not movin' her hand.

Tom Smith's eyes had bugged out at the sound of this voice, and now when a tall, gaunt feller stepped out of the thicket, Tom Smith fairly gasped out the word: "Buck!"

"Hello, Kid," sez Buck with a grin. "Belle, put up that gun. I want to shake hands with you, Kid."

Buck came forward with his hand outstretched, but Belle still stood as she was, and the look on her face got into my nerves.

REMARKABLE CASE of Mrs. HAM

Declares Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her Life and Sanity.

Shamrock, Mo.—"I feel it my duty to tell the public the condition of my health before using your medicine. I had falling, inflammation and congestion, female weakness, pains in both sides, backaches and bearing down pains, was short of memory, nervous, impatient, passed sleepless nights, and had neither strength nor energy. There was always a fear and dread in my mind, I had cold, nervous, weak spells, hot flashes over my body. I had a place in my right side that was so sore that I could hardly bear the weight of my clothes. I tried medicines and doctors, but they did me little good, and I never expected to get out again. I got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Blood Purifier, and I certainly would have been in grave or in an asylum if your medicines had not saved me. But now I can work all day, sleep well at night, eat anything I want, have no hot flashes or weak, nervous spells. All pains, aches, fears and nervousness are gone, my house, children and husband are no longer neglected, as I am almost entirely free of the bad symptoms I had before taking your remedies, and all is pleasure and happiness in my home."—Mrs. JOSIE HAM, R. F. D. 1, Box 22, Shamrock, Missouri.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

THE TIME LOCK

A Case of Revenge and Repentance

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Tom Drayton looked over the top of his desk and smiled as he saw Dorothy Quayle enter the chief's office and close the door.

Dorothy Quayle was the chief's private secretary, and she was Tom's sweetheart. He knew that she, was seeking an interview with Mr. Fair to hand in her resignation because of their approaching marriage.

"The chief will certainly get rattled without Dorry," muttered Tom as he returned to his work.

Another man had watched Dorry enter the office and had guessed her errand. Billy Brown slammed the covers of the heavy stock ledger and turned hateful eyes upon Tom.

Billy gritted his teeth in impotent rage.

"Some people have all the luck," he thought bitterly. "It was enough for Drayton to be promoted without winning her as well!"

The afternoon wore on. The chief went home, and one by one the clerks and stenographers closed their desks and followed suit. Dorothy Quayle [illegible] her little room, while Tom Drayton waited to sign the letters.

Billy Brown still pored over the great stock ledger.

After Tom had cast one or two glances at the stock clerk Billy could delay no longer. Usually he was out of his seat before the stroke of 5 and putting the ledgers away in the great vault. Perhaps it was because Billy was a "clock watcher" that he was not promoted as rapidly as his fellows in the office.

Dorothy brought her letters out and Tom signed them. After they had been placed in the mail bag and taken away by the office boy, Dorothy left, while Billy Brown, having said good night and apparently departed, lingered in the cost room, watching Tom Drayton through a crack in the door.

Tom was going in and out of the vault, putting away valuable papers and the transfer books of the company. It was his duty to see that nothing was left outside and then to close the huge circular door of the vault and set the time lock. As it was Saturday, the time would be set for 9 o'clock Monday morning.

Billy Brown was considering all these facts, and he was watching and waiting with an evil smile on his lips and hatred in his miserable heart.

His rubber heels made no sound on the polished floor as he crept in behind the door of the vault.

Tom was standing inside with his back to the door. He was looking over some papers.

It was the work of an instant to softly close the inner steel doors and turn the knob. Then with a heavy metallic clang the great circular door slammed, and the bolts shot home.

Like the guilty wretch that he was, Billy Brown crept out of the office and down the stairs without meeting a soul. The elevators shot up and down through the great building, but Billy dared not enter one—he must be able to prove an alibi.

Not even Tom Drayton knew that Billy had remained behind.

Billy emerged from the building and disappeared in the hurrying crowd.

* * * * * * *

Dorothy Quayle was waiting for Tom in a stationer's shop opposite the Consolidated building. Tom was going home with her to dine and spend the evening.

The minutes slipped by and still Tom did not come. Dorothy watching the opposite doorway was surprised to see Billy Brown slinking out.

"I thought he went home long ago," she wondered, and then forgot him in her anxiety about Tom.

"I will call him and find out why he is so long," she thought and stepped into the telephone booth.

But she received no answer to her repeated calls and finally went back to her station by the door of the shop.

Six o'clock came and no sign of her lover.

Dorothy crossed the street and went up to the fifteenth floor. Her pass key admitted her to the offices.

Lights were burning above Tom's [illegible] and the corridors were in shadow.

The door of the vault was closed.

Where was Tom?

She hurried into the wardrobe and saw his hat and overcoat.

Fear clutched at her heart. Had something happened to him? She had read of men falling from office windows.

But the windows were closed and locked and so was the vault.

She sat down to wait.

An hour passed. Silence fell on the street and the deserted building.

Presently the silence was broken by a muffled sound as of some one pounding at a great distance. There was another sound—was it a stifled cry? She crept to the vault and laid her ear against the cold surface.

Surely—surely—something was happening in there. A great light broke over her.

Tom—Tom Drayton was locked inside and the time lock was set for 9 o'clock Monday.

Dorothy flew to the telephone and called up Mr. Fair's home, but the chief had gone to Boston and would not return until Sunday night.

Sunday night, and Tom would be dead by that time!

"I must think connectedly," she said, trying to control her panic. "If I could only talk to Tom now! I have it!"

Tom Drayton had once been a telegraph operator, and Dorothy understood enough of the Morse code to carry on a halting conversation with him. But would the sound reach that little prison behind the heavy steel doors?

She would try. She found a heavy steel ruler and sent her question to Tom in heavy blows.

"Tom, are you there?"

Presently came back the answer, "Yes."

After that it was comparatively easy to talk to him.

When she finally put the ruler away she knew that some one had deliberately locked her lover in the vault, and she guessed that the guilty man was Billy Brown, for she had seen him slinking away from the building long after he had apparently departed.

Tom had told her there was nothing to do save wait—wait until the clock runs down, and that would not be until death had overtaken him. He had tapped the name of a man to whom she could appeal, a man who would know just what to do, but unfortunately Dorothy could not correctly interpret the name. Wearied at last, she sat and sobbed helplessly while the big clock on the wall ticked away the hours.

She telephoned home that she would be late in returning, and so she sat there, feeling a vague comfort that she was near her lover and chafing against the helplessness of her situation.

True, she could rush out into the building and tell some one of Tom's plight, but it might be hours before he was released if in time. She was on the point of appealing to the police when suddenly the lights in the office died out, and there remained only intense darkness.

Some one was fumbling with the lock of the door. It turned and opened, admitting men, who spoke in guarded whispers. Dorothy crept behind the tall desk in the corner and watched.

A light suddenly flashed, a piercing white ray that searched the office carefully. The electric torch was then turned on the door of the vault.

On the reflected light Dorothy saw two masked men. One by his form and clothing appeared strangely familiar. It was Billy Brown!

The other man was a stranger, who talked in muffled tones and worked rapidly with many strange tools.

"A burglar!" thought Dorothy, with a strange joy filling her breast. "A burglar who can open the vault will release Tom! Oh, I could hug the dear thing!"

The burglar worked with skilled fingers, while his companion hovered over him in an agony of suspense.

"You will be too late, Shorty," he kept whispering until Dorothy realized that Billy Brown had repeated of his dastardly deed and with the aid of this burglar was trying to save Tom Drayton from death.

Her heart glowed with gratitude.

"Shut up!" snapped the exasperated Shorty at last. "What made you lock him up, you little piker? Is there anything worth taking in there?"

"Nothing negotiable," groaned Billy, "Hurry up, Shorty!"

"Say another word and I'll throw you outer the winder," threatened Shorty.

After that the silence was unbroken save for Shorty's heavy breathing and the occasional clink of his delicate tools. There was one important moment when he made Billy turn his back while he applied a certain secret implement.

There was a sharp click, a dull bussing and a heavy jarring noise as the big door swung open. The two men gathered up the tools and opened the outer door. Shorty vanished into the darkened corridor, and Billy went back to turn the knob of the inner door and make his own escape. Of course he could not face Tom Drayton, dead or alive.

He turned the knob and set the inner door ajar and turned to flee, but he stared right into the face of Dorothy Quayle, who was holding the chief's revolver in her trembling little hand.

"Don't go yet, Billy Brown," she quavered. "If you've repented of your sin finish the job by getting Tom out and helping him home."

Without a word Billy Brown flung wide the door of the vault and found Tom leaning faint and almost unconscious against the shelves.

He carried Tom into the directors' room and laid him on the leather couch and administered restoratives.

When Tom opened his eyes he found Dorothy and Billy bending anxiously over him.

"I did it, Tom," said the repentant Billy.

But Dorothy's eyes flashed a message to Tom's, and so Tom's hand went out generously to the man who had tried to injure him.

"Forget it, Billy," admonished Tom, who guessed the bookkeeper's secret love for the unsuspecting Dorothy. "Help me out of this and let us close up the place. If you will call a taxi we will go and get a bite to eat together."

In this way Dorothy Quayle and Tom Drayton extended forgiveness to the man who had tried to ruin their lives. Over that midnight supper in a quiet restaurant the three cemented a pact of friendship which was to endure long after Billy Brown had got over his love for Dorothy and married another girl.

The Draytons and the Browns keep the secret of the events of that Saturday night in the Consolidated offices, and Shorty, the professional safe opener, has quite forgotten such a mere incident in his life of crime.

STANDARDS FOR CANADIAN EGGS

THE following standards for Canadian eggs were adopted by the Canadian Produce Association at their Third Annual Convention at Guelph, January 11-12, 1915:

Classes—Fresh gathered, Storage, Cracked and Dirties.

Grades—Specials, Extras, No. 1's, No. 2's; Extras, No. 1's, No. 2's; No. 1's, No. 2's.

Ten per cent. is allowed for deterioration in transit; that is, eggs should grade at point of delivery 90 per cent. of grade named at point of shipment.

Specials are defined as eggs of uniform size, weighing over 24 ounces to the dozen or over 45 pounds net to the 30-doz. case; absolutely clean, strong and sound in shell; air cell small, not over 3-16ths of an inch in depth; white of egg to be firm and clear and yolk dimly visible; free from blood clots.

Extras are eggs of good size, weighing at least 24 ounces to the dozen or 45 pounds net to the 30-doz. case; clean; sound in shell; air cell less than three-eighths of an inch in depth; white of egg to be firm and yolk slightly visible.

No. 1's are eggs weighing at least 23 ounces to the dozen or 43 pounds net to the 30-doz. case; clean; sound in shell; air cell less than one-half inch in depth; white of egg to be reasonably firm; yolk may be quite visible, but mobile, not stuck to the shell or seriously out of place; air cell not necessarily stationary.

No. 2's are clean eggs: sound in shell; may contain weak, watery eggs and eggs with heavy yolks, and all other eggs sound in shell and fit for food.

In the class of Cracked and Dirties the grades are the same as in Fresh Gathered class, except that the terms referring to soundness and cleanness are not to apply.

LONDON'S REGIMENT.

Famous Cockneys Have Responded to the Call to Arms.

In reviewing recently, and joining —for he hopes to be one of the first to appear in the new uniform of the corps, the City Volunteers, which form a unit of the National Guard—Sir Charles Johnston, Lord Mayor of London, was following a very ancient precedent.

In the days of Henry VIII., when Britain's shores were threatened by the French, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen took a census of the number of men in the city between the ages of twenty-one and sixty who were capable of bearing arms, and it is rather amusing to read, in the quaint phraseology of the time, that the Corporation decided that "only able persons who had white harness with white coats, bows and arrows, halberds, bills, or pole axes, and none others, should appear, except such as bear Moorish pikes or hand gonnes, and white coats and caps with feathers, and white hose, cleanly shod. With fifers and minstrels."

Apparently, however, the old London Volunteers made a brave show, for we read that it was a grand thing to behold them marching through the streets of London with pikes, arshers, and billmen, thirteen pieces of light ordnance, carried on carts, with powder and stone, leading the way to Westminster, where they were ultimately reviewed by "Bluff King Hal." This was in 1539, and was the first royal review of the City of London Volunteers, although Edward III., in the fourteenth century, insisted that every man in the city should spend his spare time practicing with bow and arrow and learn to shoot. Furthermore, Edward III. insisted that capable men should thus employ their time instead of playing games, and issued his famous proclamation forbidding, on pain of imprisonment, any man applying himself "to the throwing of stones, wood, iron, handball, football, bandy-ball, cock-fighting, or other suchlike vain plays which had no profit in them."

It is a curious fact that Henry VIII., who, whatever his faults, was a capable soldier, and founded the Artillery Company, which, from its earliest days, was of invaluable service to the kingdom as an officers' training corps, compelled his subjects to keep bows and arrows, and, perhaps because he himself was a fine tennis player and knew well the fascination of the courts, included tennis and bowls among the "unlawful games which only lead to murders and robberies."

Queen Elizabeth was as enthusiastic as her father in regard to the training of London's volunteers, says The Ladies' Field. It was she who regulated the price of bows, caused [illegible] practice butts to be erected, and, when Spain threatened an invasion caused 4,000 volunteers to be picked from the companies under training for the defence of London.

And although the volunteers then as now, were apt to be scoffed at more or less, by the professional soldier, the people go to show that they could give a magnificent account of themselves. Historians tell us that at the Battle of Newbury the London trained bands quitted themselves like men of undaunted spirit, and were able to withstand the most furious charges of Prince Rupert and his brilliant cavalry.

To analyze the unburned gases given off by industrial plants a French scientist has invented electrical apparatus which makes the tests and records the results automatically.

Diplomacy.

When King Alfonso of Spain is staying at San Sebastian, says the Manchester News, he frequently goes across to Biarritz for an afternoon of recreation.

On one occasion he arrived at the station there and hailed a fiacre. The driver recognized him, and when his majesty asked what the fare was said, "For the king of Spain it will be 10 francs." The king smiled and merely paid the ordinary fare as provided by the tariff. To that amount, however, he added a tip of the usual size.

A few days later he was again in Biarritz and also took a fiacre. But on this occasion the cocher was more diplomatic. When asked the amount of the fare he replied, "Your majesty owes me nothing for the small service I have had the honor to render him." His majesty replied to this compliment speech by presenting the cabby with a 100 franc note.

Indian Salmon Canners.

During the salmon fishing and canning season in British Columbia a large number of Indians are employed in the different branches of the canneries each year. The Indians are expert fishermen and are especially desirable as employees in the business. The Indian women and old men of the tribes work in the canneries while the able-bodied men do the fishing.

Cleaning Straw Hats.

There are several ways of cleaning straw hats. One way is to scrub them with an old nailbrush dipped in one cup of warm water and one tablespoonful of oxalic acid; another way is to use sulphurous acid, which is safer than fumes of sulphur, and if the hat is panama, scrubbing it quickly, small portions at a time (and wiping the soiled solution as it forms) with a half-and-half mixture of peroxide of hydrogen and water, is most effective.

Do not have the brush too wet and go quickly from one portion to the next.

All drug stores now sell straw hat cleaning powders, which are easily used and cost little.

The Best Treatment For Constipation

The Experience of One Who Knows and Places Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills First

It is not difficult to secure a medicine that will effect movement of the bowels To cure Constipation and the complications which arise from it is another matter.

Constipation of the bowels is usually preceded by torpid action of the liver. Hence it follows that Constipation is to be cured the liver must be set right. And here lies the secret of the success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They awaken the action of the liver and insure a good flow of bile, which is nature's cathartic. The liver, kidneys and bowels are invigorated and regulated, and the troubles with the digestive system disappear.

Mr. H. M. Bell, Innisfail, Alta., writes: "For some considerable time I have been using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I have obtained through your firm. I suppose during my life I have used nearly all the best-known pills, as I have been subject to Constipation and digestive troubles. A friend recommended Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, and I can honestly say that of all the pills I have tried nothing has suited me better—no griping—action always insured, and fine for the kidneys. This is how I have found them after a thorough test, and you may use this statement if you like."

This letter should convince you of the merits of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, but there is nothing like personal experience. If you do not feel like risking 25 cents for a box, write to us for a free sample box, mentioning where you saw this advertisement. Italy to Buy Meat And Grain Here

ROME, via Paris, July 25.—The Italian government has decided to make large purchases of American meat and grain not only sufficient to supply the army and the navy until July 31, 1916, but also for the use of the population of the country. The purpose of the authorities is to discourage speculation which is taking place on a large scale.

Last year when the war began grain from $5 for every quintal (220.46 lbs.), rose in seventy-five days to $8 per quintal. This year the price, beginning at $6 a quintal, already has reached $8.20. It is expected that the price will soon reach $10.

The government so far has secured 7,000,000 quintals of grain for the army and navy, but the officials are being urged to establish a price which might begin at $6.40 for every quintal and to requisition some grain if the producers keep it with the hope of obtaining higher prices.

The Italian crop this year, although not the most abundant, is several millions of quintals greater than that of last year.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

LADY'S DRESS.

By Anabel Worthington.

This dress will delight the heart of the comfort-loving woman. Every line of it spells ease, and it may be made loose and free without in any way affecting the style.

The plain blouse has a row of gathers along the shoulders in front, and these draw the material a little from the centre, leaving the neck a trifle open at the top. A small, fancy collar makes a pretty finish to the neck. The back of the blouse is entirely plain and comes forward on the shoulders far enough to suggest a tiny yoke at this point.

The waist closes in front and has plain sleeves following the shape of the arm, and either full length or shorter.

The skirt has four gores. These are shapely, not straight at either edge, and are gathered at the top, where they are held by the band. The belt is wide and flat, and may be used or omitted. The lower edge of this skirt measures 2¾ yards in the medium size.

Almost any of the cotton fabrics may serve for this skirt, and above all the more serviceable weaves, such as gingham, calico, cambric, and lawn and organdie, although these are a little dressy for this style.

The dress pattern, No. 7,265, is cut in sizes 34 to 44-inch bust measure. Medium size requires 5¼ yards of 36-inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Solemn Hour For National Existence Is Now Striking Says Lord Kitchener in Speech

LONDON, July 22.—With soldier-like bluntness, Lord Kitchener, at the Guildhall recently, made a powerful appeal to the people of Great Britain to continue the work of recruiting. He declared that the military situation was as serious as eight months ago, and that a solemn hour was striking for national existence.

Although the men of England has nobly responded to former appeals, he declared, still more were needed to repair the wastage at the front; for the larger an army the more does it call for reserves to make up the losses in war. He declined however to state the actual number in the field, in training, or required, as such information would be useful to the enemy.

He complimented the Canadian and Indian forces at the front, the Australians and the New Zealanders on the Dardanelles, and the South Africans. He added a tribute to the women taking the places of men who have gone on active service.

Frankly stating that he was a soldier rather than a politician, he predicted a long war, and reiterated his call for more men. Those engaged in agricultural work, the moment the harvests were gathered, he said, should report as recruits. Finally he called upon every man to search his conscience and ask if he really had a valid excuse for not joining the army.

Lord Kitchener's motor ride to the Guildhall untethered British enthusiasm, and the scene has had no precedent in London since the outbreak of the war. Handkerchiefs were waved and hundreds of thousands acclaimed the Secretary of State for War as he passed through an uninterrupted avenue of cheering English men, women and children.

The enthusiasm of the meeting, at which the Lord Mayor presided, and the crowds which appeared, were attributed to the public's spontaneous desire to demonstrate its confidence in the Field-Marshall in the face of attacks upon him which a certain section of the press has been making.

CONTINUOUS DEMANDS

In the course of his speech Lord Kitchener said:

One cannot ignore the certainty that our requirements in regard to men will be large, continuous and persistent, for one feels that our gallant soldiers in the fighting line are beckoning with an urgency at once imperious and pathetic to those who remain at home to come out and play their part, too.

"The recruiting meetings, the marches and unwearied labors of the recruiting officers, committees and individuals, have borne good fruit, but we must go a step further to attract and attach individuals who from shyness or other causes have not yet yielded to their own patriotic impulses.

"When the national registration is completed we shall anyhow be able to note the men between the ages of 19 and 40 who are not required for munition or other necessary work industrial work and, therefore, available, if physically fit, for the fighting line.

"The work of completing the registration will extend over some weeks. Meanwhile it is of vital and paramount importance that as large a number of men as possible should press forward to enlist. I would urge all employers to help by releasing all men qualified for the service, replacing them by men not recruitable as the result of age, or by women, as already has been found feasible in so many instances.

NO DETAILS AS TO NUMBERS

"What the numbers required are likely to be it is clearly inexpedient to shout abroad. Our constant refusal to publish either of these or any other figures likely to prove useful to the enemy needs neither explanation nor apology.

"It has often been urged that if more information were given as to the work and whereabout of the various units, recruiting would be very strongly stimulated, but this is the precise information which would be of the greatest value to the enemy, and it is agreeable to note that a German prince in high command ruefully recorded recently his complete ignorance of our new army.

"But one set of figures is available for everybody. This is supplied by the casualty lists. With regard to these lists, however serious and sad as they necessarily are, let two points be borne in mind: Firstly, that a very large percentage of the casualties represents comparatively slight hurts, the sufferers from which in time return to the front; and secondly, that if the figures seem to run very high, the magnitude of the operations is thereby suggested.

"Indeed, these casualty lists, whose great length may now and again induce an undue impression, are an instructive indication of the huge extent of the operations undertaken, and now reached by the British force in the field.

APPEAL TO TWO CLASSES.

"There are two classes of men to whom my appeal must be addressed. Those for whom it is claimed that they are indispensable, whether for work directly associated with our military forces, or for other purposes, public or private; and, secondly, those to whom has been applied the ugly name of shirkers.

"As regards the former, the questions must searchingly be driven home whether their duties, however responsible, however technical, cannot in this time of stress be adequately carried out by men unfit for active military service or by women.

"And here I cannot refrain from paying a tribute of grateful recognition to the larger number of women of every class and phase of life who have come forward and have placed their services unreservedly at their country's disposal.

"The harvest, of course, is looming large in many minds. It is possible that many men engaged in agricultural pursuits have not come forward owing to their harvest duties. This may be a good reason at the moment, but it can only be accepted if they notify their names at once and report as recruits on the very day after the harvest is garnered.

"Also the question of private employment of recruitable men for any sort of domestic services is an acute one which must gravely and unselfishly be considered by master and men alike."

DECIDE QUICKLY.

The Field-Marshal said that there had ben much talk about slackers—that is, persons doing literally nothing to help the country—but that this should not be exaggerated, for he believed the residuum of absolute "do-nothings" was relatively small.

Lord Kitchener particularly addressed himself to persons now engaged in patriotic or other useful work who found in this work an excuse for not joining the army. For instance there were many special constables of military age. All such he urged to search their conscience and to ask themselves if they really had a valid excuse for not joining the army.

"It is not for me to tell you your duty; that is a matter for your own conscience,' the Secretary of State for War said. "But make up your minds and do so quickly and be certain your so-called reason is not a selfish excuse. It has been said that in every man's life there is one supreme hour to which all his earlier experience moves, and from which all future results must be reckoned.

OPPORTUNITY NOW OR NEVER.

"For every individual Briton, as well as for our national existence that solemn hour is now striking. Let us take heed to the great opportunity it offers and which most assuredly we must grasp now and at once or never.

"Let each man of us see that we spare nothing, shirk nothing, and shrink from nothing, if only we may lend our full weight to the impetus which shall carry to victory the cause of our honour and of our freedom.'

In moving a vote of thanks to Earl Kitchener and pledging the City of London to support him, Sir Edward Carson, the Attorney-General screened a section of the British press which recently has been attacking the War Minister. He said:

"It is enough to say of him that he possesses the absolute confidence of every colleague in the Cabinet, and what is more, the absolute unflinching devotion of a grateful nation. I do not know a poorer service anyone could give his country than to attempt to shake the confidence of the nation in Lord Kitchener."

Sir Edward concluded: "Voluntary recruiting is now on its trial. Does anyone doubt if it fails that we shall hesitate to apply compulsory service?"

PIMPLES AND ERUPTIONS MEAN BAD BLOOD

People who have impure or impoverished blood should be careful to take only a vegetable and temperance remedy such as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is and has been for over forty years.

The first day you start to take this reliable medicine, impure germs and accumulations begin to separate in the blood and are then expelled through the eliminative organs.

In place of the impurities, the arteries and veins gradually get fresh vitalized blood and the action of this good blood on the skin means that pimples, boils, carbuncles, eczema, rash, acne and all skin blemishes will disappear. Then you must remember that when the blood is right, the liver, stomach, bowels and kidneys become healthy, active and vigorous and you will have no more trouble with indigestion, backache, headache and constipation.

Get Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to-day at any medicine dealers; it is a powerful blood purifier.

Depend upon this grand remedy to give you the kind of blood that makes the skin clear, the mind alert, the vision keener, and puts ambition and energy into the entire body. You won't be disappointed. For free advice or free booklet on blood, write Dr. R. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.—Adv.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets not only the original but the best Little Liver Pills, first put up over 40 years ago, by Old Dr. R. V. Grim Story of A "Wake" Held In The Trenches

Two badly wounded privates, bandaged from head to foot, and just able to limp about the hospital ward, told a glowing story of the superb dash and gallantry of the Grenadier Guards in a recent fight. They also gave a wonderfully human account of how a little party of Irishmen "waked" two fallen chums.

"They were a pair of the most devil-may-care fellows in the world" was their first comment. "Where one went the other always insisted on being by his side. You never saw such affection, even between brothers. Early one morning they were both seen near a mine crater, and the Germans were shelling our position in most awful fashion. The two lads wouldn't budge an inch.

"Suddenly one was picked off and the other made a desperate attempt to fetch him back under a terrible fire. This act cost him his life, and a few moments later we laid the two of them side by side. On them we found a rosary, beads, and medals. A little party of Irish chaps took charge of the corpses, and 'waked' them behind the parapet for the repose of the souls of the fallen boys.

"A sergeant told his beads, and it would have made you cry to witness the behaviour of the others. It was a beautiful morning, and you can imagine what a weird scene that rough-and-ready 'wake' made.

"When the prayers were over the sergeant bent over the corpses and settled their hands in the shape of a cross. He placed the medals over their hearts, and round their necks he strung the rosary beads. They were buried where they were 'waked,' and a few green sods shaped like a cross supplied a tombstone. This is the sort of thing you simply can't forget.

The Cold Steel.

"A licking, instead of depressing us, made us more furious to get our own back at the enemy. There is always this touch and go before the British are really wound up; it is only when our blood is boiling that we do things. When the Germans deserted their trenches, and we took possession of them, the sights we saw were enough to send one to the mad-house. The Germans were strewn in heaps, and some of them looked little more than school boys. We had to plod over their bodies, and if we were sick once at what we saw, we were sick twenty times. There were a few Germans half alive who, in English, begged our men to put them out of their agony.

"We were assisting the Middlesex and the Irish Rifles. The Rifles set the ball rolling, and as the Irishmen mounted the parapet they were singing in wild voices, 'You can't beat the boys with the dirty shirts.' The Grenadiers followed, and within a quarter of an hour we were in the thick of the slaughter. One by one the Rifle lads were dropping out, and this sent the Grenadiers off their heads. It seemed as if company after company was going into a death-trap.

"The Grenadiers had to advance in sodden rushes, and no matter how fearful the fire was, the men went forward all the time. When one fell there was another behind him, and so on. It seemed lunacy to continue the attack, but we couldn't give in. We set our teeth, and when we were within a dozen yards of the Germans we gave them a taste of the Grenadier bayonet. There were fierce hand-to-hand exchanges, and we had the best of it when it came to using the steel. We captured a couple of hundred prisoners, the Germans surrendering like naughty boys to a schoolmaster."

URIC ACID SUFFERING.

Uric acid is an accumulation of poison which finds lodgment in the system when the kidneys fail to remove it from the blood. In the kidneys and bladder it forms stones, in the joints and muscles it causes rheumatism. In any case the pain and suffering is almost beyond human endurance. Uric acid is promptly removed from the system when the kidneys are kept healthy and active by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

To Discard Freckles, Tan, Pimples, Wrinkles

The use of creams containing animal substance sometimes causes hair to grow. You run no risk of acquiring superfluous hair when you use ordinary mercolized wax. There is nothing better for a discolored skin, as the wax actually absorbs the offensive cuticle. The latter is naturally replaced by a clear, smooth, healthy complexion, full of life and expression. It's the sensible way to discard a freckled, tanned, over red, blotchy or pimpled skin. Get an ounce of mercolized wax at any druggist's and apply nightly like cold cream, erasing in the morning with soap and water. It takes a week or so to complete the transformation.

The ideal wrinkle remover is made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. Bathing the face in the solution brings almost instantaneous results.

Warsaw Two Thirds Surrounded Says Berlin

SOUCHEZ FIGHTING HAS BROKEN OUT AFRESH

GERMANS CLAIM TO HAVE REACHED THE BUG RIVER

Right Wing of General Von Gallwitz's Army Now Only Twenty Miles From Warsaw Says To-day's Berlin Report Which Adds That Only Two Railways for the Retreat of the Russians are Now in the Hands of the Slav Army.

FIERCE FIGHTING RESUMED AT SOUCHEZ

Special Cable to The Examiner:

BERLIN, Via The Hague, July 28.—Germans have closed in rapidly on Warsaw in the last 48 hours. The Polish capital is now two-thirds surrounded, and but two railways are feasible for use when the expected Slav retreat begins, remain in the hands of the Czar's armies.

General Von Gallwitz' right wing has reached the River Bug, only twenty miles north of Warsaw.

General Mackensen, according to the latest official despatches is making "satisfactory progress" in the region southeast of Lublin.

PARIS, France (French Official Communique) July 28.—The battle for the trench country around Souchez was resumed by the Germans after a lull of nearly a week, in three furious charges during the night.

An official communique this afternoon admitted that the Teutons penetrated the French trenches at one point, but only on a twenty-yard front.

The infantry onslaught was preceded by a heavy artillery bombardment that tore away sections of the French wire entanglements. The Germans then charged in three simultaneous rushes at different points on the French line. Excepting the slight losses admitted by the War Office the enemy's attacks were repulsed.

Soissons was heavily bombarded during the night. Elsewhere, the War Office said, there was little to report.

FRENCH LIQUOR MEN ALARMED.

PARIS, July 28.—The National Association of Liquor Dealers and Restaurant and Hotel Keepers of France has called a convention for July 29 to consider the government's anti-alcohol measures and the adoption of a campaign to prevent the destruction of the liquor traffic. General Gallieni, Military Governor of Paris, has extended his order, precluding the sale to those connected with the army of all alcoholic beverages, except wine and beer, to include the entire Department of Seine-et-Cise.

PARIS, France., July 28.—A French aeroplane bombarded a Turkish aviation camp north of Chanak, setting fire to the hangars and gasoline depot, and causing a big blaze that destroyed the surrounding buildings. The right wing of the French forces on Gallipoli Peninsula have made slight progress.

EXPLOSION OF DIRIGIBLE.

LONDON, July 28.—Three persons were killed and twenty injured by the explosion of an army dirigible in its hangar at Wormwood Scrubs to-day. The dead and injured were mostly mechanicians employed about the camp. Escaping gas was set off by a lighted cigar.

GERMANS HAVE PLENTY OF WINTER CLOTHING.

BERLIN, July 28.—Army authorities announce officially that the requirements in the way of warm under-clothing, gloves and wristlets for the German soldiers' use in an eventual winter campaign have been amply covered.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Harry L. Wilson, of Oregon, clerk of the American Consul-General at Berlin, has been arrested by the German authorities on the Danish frontier on the technical charge of attempting to leave Germany without a passport, it was learned at the State department to-day. He is a relative of President Wilson.

Wilson's real offence, it is understood, was issuing a passport to an Englishman as an American citizen, thereby enabling him to evade the German authorities. Wilson is not immune to German law, and the offence is believed to be grave.

The State Department is investigating.

434 STEAM VESSELS.

LONDON, July 27.— Lloyd's shipbuilding return, which owing to the war is confined to details of merchant vessels, shows there were 434 steam vessels of 1,505,925 gross tons, and eight sailing vessels of 1,899 tons, under construction in the United Kingdom during the quarter ended June 30, 1915, or 81,000 tons less than at the end of the previous quarter, and 215,000 tons below the figures in the corresponding period last year. During the quarter ended June 30, this year seventy-four steamships, of 147,-964 gross tonnage, were launched.

BRITAIN REINTERNS GERMAN COUNT.

Count Paul Wolff Metternich, who married a daughter of the late British Admiral, Sir Charles Fane, and who was arrested while on his honeymoon and later released, has been reinterned in Yorkshire. He is a cousin of the late German Ambassador in London.

WASHINGTON, July 28. — Germany's version of the American steamship Leelanaw's destruction by one of the Kaiser's submarines was sought to-day through Ambassador Gerard, Berlin.

But one point remained to be determined. Was the Leelanaw's captain given the option of saving his ship by jettisoning his contraband cargo of flax, bound for England? If the answer was affirmative, it was said the case would not amount even to a diplomatic incident.

Assuming that he was given no such opportunity, the American contention is that the ship's destruction was unjustified. Germany maintains the contrary, on the ground that a contraband carrying vessel may be sunk if it is impossible to take it into port.

LOWESTOFT, Eng., July 28—The crews of the trawlers Icono and Salicia, submarined yesterday, were landed here to-day.

ROTTERDAM, July 28—In yesterday's Tageblatt, Capt. Persius, the naval expert, breaks out in a frantic effort to prove by inference that all the British merchant ships are armed and that with the connivance of the United States, which, he declares, has now become "a partner of England" in unscrupulousness.

LONDON, Eng., July 28.—Premier Asquith, in moving the adjournment of Parliament until September 14th, told the House of Commons this afternoon that the war situation is quite satisfactory to the Allies.

He eulogized "the indescribable gallant effort s of Russia, and the steady advance of Italy," and expressed entire confidence in the results of the Dardanelles' campaign. Germany's submarine campaign, he assured the House of Commons, will inflict no substantial injury to British trade.

The latest returns show more recruits are flocking to the colours than at any time since the beginning of the war.

THE PROGRESSIVE CLUB KEEPS UP ITS GOOD WORK

Three Big Bales Have Been Sent to the Queen's Canadian Military Hospital at Shorncliffe During the Past Two Weeks.

GIFTS FOR THE BATTERY

Within the last two weeks the Peterborough Progressive Club has sent through the Red Cross, three bales to the Queen's Canadian Military hospital, Shorncliffe. The contents of the bales are as follows:

On the 14th, 70 towels, 30 night shirts, 9 pairs slippers, 18 day shirts, 1 nightingale, 1 bundle of old linen, 6 khaki handkerchiefs, 288 hospital handkerchiefs, 258 rolls assorted bandages, 1924 swabs, 108 packages (6 in package) small pads, 29 packages (6 in package) large pads.

On the 21st, 171 packages small pads, 6 in package; 612 swabs, 40 packages (6 in package) compressors, 50 packages of large pads, 5 day shirts, 12 night shirts.

On the 26th—37 night shirts, 376 hospital handkerchiefs, 1 day shirt, 175 rolls assorted bandages; 400 mouth wipes, 48 towels, 21 packages of large pads, 16 in package.

In addition to the above the Club sent on the 10th, 24 pairs of socks, 3 packages of tobacco and ten dollars' worth of chocolate to the Battery.

The Secretary received 5 scrapbooks and three packages of tobacco from a little boy, George Benton. The books have been sent to Cliveden and Shorncliffe hospitals, and the tobacco to the Battery.

The Best Outing Of The Season

Printers Will Make Merry at Jubilee Point on Saturday.

The best outing of the season will be held next Saturday, per Str. Stoney Lake, to Jubilee Point, where the Printers are holding their annual picnic. This is the most popular excursion of the season, and everybody has a good time. Large list of sports, with three prizes for almost every event. Boat leaves George street wharf at 1.30, Street Railway wharf at 1.45. There will be a refreshment booth and orchestra on board, and a drawing contest for three extra fine prizes. Attend this picnic and take part in the best event this year. The programme of sports will appear in to-morrow's issue of The Examiner.

MORE MEN ARE NEEDED

Hon. T. W. Crothers Explains Canada's Position in Course of His Speech at Liberal-Conservative Convention

ARE WE DOING OUR SHARE?

"We want more men to fight in the trenches, more men to work in the factories and the fields, and more women to help make the lot of the boys at the front more comfortable," remarked Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labour in the Canadian government in an address at the Liberal-Conservative convention last night.

"Petty party politics sink into insignificance when compared to the colossal struggle that is going on," declared the speaker. "To-night I want to emphasize the special interest that Canada has in this war. We are in it and we are determined to stay with those who are in it until our efforts have been crowned with complete success, until Belgium has been liberated and Germany is beaten to her knees. We are side by side with England, determined to do all we can do to assist in the honour and integrity of the British Empire, to broaden the bounds of freedom and to crush Prussian despotism for ever from the earth. We are in it to redeem our pledge to little Belgium. We are in over and above all else for the independence and freedom of Canadians themselves. I wonder if we realize our position?

The German people must emigrate. Scores of thousands of her sons have gone forth to strengthen other nations and Germany, determined upon expansion and the extension of her territory overseas so that when her people left the Fatherland they would still be under the German flag. The only colonies she coveted were those in the possession of the British Empire. It was to wrest them from Great Britain that she constructed her big navy. Depend upon it, if Germany wins this war and smashes the British fleet the cession of Canada to Germany will be one of the first provisions she will demand. And the treatment accorded Belgium shows what we might expect. The horrible crimes, the unmentionable atrocities committed in Belgium have identified German kultur with untutored savagery.

The people of Canada have done nobly, especially have the people of Peterborough done well. I am informed that you have sent 1,000 young men from this city. 70,000 Canadians have crossed the ocean, 70,000 more are in training on this side. Many of the first to go have made the supreme sacrifice. Are we making any such sacrifices as these men have been called upon to make? Are we doing all we can? Have all the young men determined to go to the front. You are proud of the young men in the trenches. They have established the fact that Canadians are patriotic, heroic, brave. These young men are calling across the deep, calling to you, "Come and help us," beckoning from over the waves for you to come. What will your answer be? When the hour of victory comes, what will you say when asked what part you took? There are many more young men capable of going to the front. Are they going or are they going to remain at home?"

UNCLE SAM'S DIFFICULTIES

The Anglo-German-American Situation is Regarded in Washington To-day as Entirely "Up In The Air."

THE BRITISH SITUATION

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The Anglo - German - American situation was regarded to-day as entirely "up in the air."

The officials were not prepared to make predictions until they saw the expected supplement to the British note on the order in council.

If concessions were offered by the British, it was said, they could be passed along to Germany, with the request for corresponding submarine warfare concessions, and the whole controversy might speedily be straightened out.

That concessions would be offered, however, was only guesswork. The officials only hoped so.

The ultimate arbitration of the British seizures of American ships and cargoes, which, it was hinted the London Foreign Office might propose, would be unsatisfactory, it was stated, because British interference with American trade is involving losses for which damages, months or years hence, cannot compensate the losers. No arrangement can be satisfactory but to have this interference stopped now.

America's request for a German explanation of the reported submarine attack, which failed however, on the liner Orduna with American passengers on board, was before the Berlin Foreign Office.

An early response was expected.

Will Be Used For Battalion Now Overseas

The law firm of Messrs. Peck, Kerr and McElderry, who, a few days ago sent their cheque for $750 to the Department of Militia for the purchase of a machine gun, has received a grateful acknowledgement of the same, and an intimation that the gun would be used for one of the Canadian battalions at present overseas, and if possible with one of the Peterborough companies.

HON. G. E. FOSTER WILL SPEAK AT THE BIG MEETING

Minister of Trade and Commerce to Give Address at Recruiting Meeting—Maj. S. T. Medd Wants 30 or 40 Recruits For Peterboro' Squadron

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

The local branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League announce to-day that Hon. Geo. E. Foster will be a speaker at the big recruiting meeting on August 4th, the meeting which will open the ten day recruiting campaign. It is not necessary to comment upon Hon. Mr. Foster's ability as a speaker; he is recognized as one of Canada's foremost orators and his address will be eagerly awaited. It is expected that Rev. A. L. Geggie of Toronto, another fine speaker, will also be here.

Major S. T. Medd, the officer commanding the Peterborough squadron of the 8th C.M.R., is in Peterborough for a few days and may be found at the armouries. His squadron needs 30 or 40 men to complete its establishment, and Major Medd would like to get as many as possible of this quota from Peterborough, as they will be placed with the other Peterborough men in the squadron. Major Medd will give any information required about pay allowances and pensions. The 8th C.M.R. have just received 100 more horses and are in the best of shape to adequately train new recruits.

Lieut. Douglas Hammond of the 14th Regiment, Kingston, is in Peterborough on a visit to his brother, Dr. Hammond.

A hurry call was received by Major Vincent Eastwood of the 57th Regiment for three motor truck drivers for immediate overseas service with the Canadian Army Service Corps. Applications had to be in before 6 o'clock to-night, and in spite of the short notice there were a number of applications from local chauffeurs before noon. The recruits accepted will leave for England immediately.

LIEUT. GRAHAME SURPRISED AT LOCAL RECEPTION

Wounded 2nd Battalion Officer Met at Station by Band and Big Crowd When He Arrived Here Last Evening.

RESTING AT KILUNA

Lieut. Gordon H. Grahame of the 2nd Battalion, invalided home from the battle line in France, was probably the most surprised man in Canada when he stepped off the Port Hope train at the G.T.R. station last evening and found a big crowd awaiting him and the 57th Band playing "The Maple Leaf". Lieut. Grahame was not expecting any reception of that kind as the date of his arrival was not known until a few hours before.

His father and mother and sister came to Peterborough from Stoney Lake to meet him and the re-union was a joyous one. Lieut. Grahame, wearing his khaki uniform, was cheered as he alighted from the train. Friends eagerly escorted him to a waiting motor car and, headed by the 57th and, an impromptu procession was formed. A number of citizens in cars followed behind, and a number of others marched. Major Eastwood of the 57th Regiment, and Lt.-Col. Johnston of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons being among the party. Lieut. Grahame was escorted as far as Central Park, where he said farewell to the crowd and continued on his way to Lakefield. He will rest at "Kiluna," his parents' summer home at Stoney Lake.

In spite of the short notice a big crowd gathered at the station and along the streets. In the crowd were noticed mothers and wives of boys at the front, and to them Lieut. Grahame was a most interesting figure. He had been with their loved ones in the hour of peril, had earned promotion as an officer among them on account of his bravery, and the mothers in the crowd would have liked an opportunity to ask about some of their relatives.

Honour For Gen. Steele

Canadian Officer is Given Command of South-eastern District of England.

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., July 28—Confirmation was received to-day by the Militia Department of three important changes in the Canadian Overseas forces:

Major-General Sam Steele, D.S.O., of Winnipeg, who left Canada in command of the second Canadian Division, has been promoted to the command of the southeastern district of England. This includes the Shorncliffe camp.

It is further announced that Gen. Steele will be succeeded in the command of the 2nd Division by General Turner, V.C., D.S.O.C.B. of Quebec, who as Commander of the First Brigade, did distinguished service at St. Julian and elsewhere.

General Turner is recognized as one of Canada's most dashing and efficient officers. He won the Victoria Cross in South Africa. Official announcement is made of the appointment of Col. A. D. McRae of Victoria to the position of Director of Supply and Transport for the Canadian forces overseas.

FOURTH BROTHER JOINS THE COLOURS

Pte. O. Montgomery Leaves to Join the 8th C.M.R

Two recruits left Peterborough this morning to join the 8th C.M.R. at Barriefield camp. They were Private O. Montgomery, whose home is near Jackson Park, and Private Fred Warren, R. R. No. 1, Ida. Pte. Montgomery is the fourth member of his family to go, three brothers having proceeded him in the Canadian forces. Pte. Scott Montgomery enlisted here with the 21st Battalion and is now in England, as are his two brothers, Morris and Ray, who are with the Canadian Field Artillery. All four brothers lived in Peterborough, and Morris and Scott Montgomery will be remembered as contestants in the Examiner road race on several occasions.

CLEARANCE SALE CAUSED A STIR

The summer clearance sale of the Reid Co. created some stir on George street this morning. As soon as the store was open numbers of shoppers were on hand to participate in the great values offered and crowded the store the greater part of the day.

Exceptional price inducements are being offered and a perusal of their advertisement to-night will be of advantage to any woman who will take the time to look over it. 1d

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1915

THE BOYS OF THE OLD BRIGADE.

Looking over the list of officers chosen by the West Peterborough Liberal - Conservative Association, there is a striking absence of the familiar names one used to associate with that organization. Where are "the boys of the old brigade?"

M. C. E. MOORE'S PROGRESS.

The election of Mr. Charles E. Moore of Smith township last night to the presidency of the Liberal-Conservative Association of West Peterborough, was a further public recognition of a young man who has already achieved things and before whom the future opens promisingly. In his immediate community he is an ardent and energetic leader in modern dairying. His interest in agriculture has drawn him into the Farmers' Institute, of which he was president for three years. He is also prominent in the administration of the Peterborough Industrial Exhibition. In these activities he has not only shown marked abilities, but also personal characteristics that have won him a host of friends. His latest honour is a recognition of his party loyalty, and is an appointment as well placed as it is well merited.

PETERBOROUGH MUST HELP.

It is hoped that Peterborough will make a ready response to the appeal from the 57th Battalion for assistance in securing a regimental fund for the battalion that will assist them in securing machine guns, field kitchens, and other necessities. Captain Park and Lieutenant Rackham, the two Peterborough officers with the battalion, should receive a hearty welcome when they approach the citizens in this regard. The Examiner understands that the battalion will require 12 machine guns, four field kitchens, and instruments for a brass band, the members of the latter organization being trained as stretcher-bearers. Other battalions from this division have been generously treated by the people of Eastern Ontario. For instance the 21st Battalion, took away with them $14,000 in cash, and two tons of tobacco, equal to over $8,000, besides several machine guns, field kitchens, and instruments for pipe, bugle and brass bands, totalling $28,000. There is no reason why the 57th Battalion should not receive the same generous treatment. There are fifty Peterborough boys in the battalion at present, and Peterborough should do its share in contributing to their comfort. Kingston has been doing nobly. Machine guns have been presented by the Commercial Travellers, twelve business men, professional men and the retail grocers and their employees. The wholesale dealers and manufacturers have contributed a field kitchen, and the officers of the 16th Regiment have subscribed $500 for the band. The Town Council of Pembroke has donated $1,000 for the purchase of a machine gun. Other municipalities will follow suit, and Peterborough must not be behind in this respect.

AS OUR NEIGHBOURS SEE US.

Colliers Weekly says: Canada is playing so loyal a part in the great war (about which she was consulted no more than China or the United States), one might suppose her population to be much greater than it really is. Yet Canada, which has already spent $150,000,000 in war costs and raised 150,000 men, can count only 8,000,000 men, women, and children—about one-twelfth the population of the continental part of the United States. By making much of her agricultural opportunities (though not so much as she means to make in future), Canada is supposed to have attracted a great many settlers from the United States—settlers of a highly desirable type. According to the "Statesman's Year Book," however, we seem to have lost to Canada only 300,000 odd. This is a decided understatement, yet we have in any case gained numerically by the exchange; there are about 1,250,000 Canadian-born in our United States.

Canada Makes Good.

In 1911 Canada had almost 500,000 more men than women. The war will consume a great part of this surplus. There is evidence, however, that Canada will deal more and more liberally with home-steaders in the future, and this should bring in sturdy workers to help make up the loss. Annually she has allotted to settlers from five to seven million acres of free land, but to-day the Premier of Saskatchewan wants to see immigrants not only assigned to free lands, but equipped with seeds, farm implements, and good advice. It will not be surprising if Canada makes, too, a determined essay to keep her sons and daughters at home, to make the most of her great resources, and repair, as rapidly as may be, her share of the loss brought upon civilization by the war of the Kaisers. It is hard hoeing for Canada just now. War contracts worth $156,000,000 have already been placed in Canada, however, and these should help to start again the flow of Canadian prosperity. According to the Kingston (Ont.) "British Whig," "Canada has borrowed capital for municipal and industrial enterprises to such an extent that the annual tax in interest alone is about $140,000,000. Too much attention has been given to civic life and all that it implies, and not enough attention to farm life." Of late some towns have been obliged to ask for time to meet interest due on their bonds—something unprecedented in the Dominion. But whatever Canada's immediate future may be, the larger future is hers, and it is bright. In no event can Canada prosper too richly for our satisfaction. We of the United States must not only appreciate our neighbour's effective patriotism, but must strive also to bring about ever more friendly relations, and, in banking and commerce, relations increasingly profitable to both sets of Americans. Neglect of Canadian markets and Canadian sympathies forms one of the least creditable chapters in the history of American protectionism; but the time for us to ignore or to patronize Canada—if there ever was such a time—has now gone by. As the "Economist" of Chicago observes (after giving reasons):

Canada has been the phenomenon of the Western Hemisphere in the past ten or fifteen years. . . . In no other part of the world has there been so much progress in recent years, nowhere else so much profit in the pursuit of ordinary occupations or the investment of capital. Canada has made good.

WHAT TOBACCO MEANS.

Just what tobacco means to the soldiers at the front is shown by the following translation of an extract from the Soldiers' Litany, written by G. Welter in the Journal de Geneve:

Blessed be thou, little pipe, source of warmth, light and joy! Thou art without style or beauty. Thy short stem is gnawed and worn by our teeth, thy dirty bowl is burnt black. Thou dost hardly deserve even the name of 'cutty.' And yet we would not sell thee for gold, and when unluckily we lose thee, we moan, like Ariadne abandoned by Thesius. Blessed be thou, little pipe!

Thou art the consoler. Thanks to thee we endure, with a patient heart, sleepless nights, the cold and the unchanging tedium of the leaden-footed hours. Were it not for thee, we should die of home-sickness in the yellow mud of the trenches of Picardy. Thou dost bind us to life, to that life which seems so little a thing in the midst of the hiss of bullets and the roar of shell. Blessed be thou, O consoler!

Thou art the giver of light. The sentry, hid in the fog and in gloom, sees, down the trench, little red spots in the thick darkness of the winter night. He feels that he is not alone, that others are watching, too, in the same trench, in trenches near by, and far off, far, far off, on the left as far as the sea, on the right even to the Rhine. He understands that he is a link in an immense chain which runs between the villages, through the meadows, the woods and the orchards of France, and holds back the impetuous mass of the barbarian. Thanks to thee, little pipe, the brave soldier feels the meaning of his holy mission. Blessed be thou, O light-giver!

Thou art the warmer, the heat-giver. It is true, we have trouble to light thee. The wet matches will not strike, the fire-steels have lost their flints or worn out their tinder, the enemy, who watches in front of our holes, forces us to squat, with head wrapped in a blanket, in order to kindle the damp tobacco, without betraying our presence. But, as soon as these difficulties are over, the soft heat works its way gently into our body and our soul; then we enjoy a half hour of blessedness. Even after thou art out, for a long time our numb fingers relax at the touch of thy warm and rounded bowl. Blessed be thou, O giver of heat!

Thou art the purifier. Were it not for thee, our exhausted bodies would gather up all the miasma of the foul mud, of the mouldy straw and of the half-rotten meat lying in the corners of our shelter. Thy smoke is worth as much to us as all the perfumes of the East; with it we saturate our mouth, our hands and our clothes. Thou art to us Cologne water, cold-cream and paper of Armenia. Blessed be thou, O purifier.

Thou art the democrat. In the trenches, where neither birth nor money count for anything, thou dost symbolise that equality which is found nowhere else. Thou art seen in the teeth of the peasant, merchant and scholar, thou dost pour out to all the consoling balm and the same crisp smoke of the same 'Caporal.' O little pipe, the only democratic institution of our third Republic, blessed be thou!

Thou art the constant friend. When hungry, thou dost feed us; thirsty, thou givest us to drink; weary, thou dost cheer us; cold, thou dost warm us; sleepy, thou dost awaken us; unnerved, thou dost calm us.

Blessed be thou, little pipe, centre of warmth, light and joy!

Sir Edward Grey Survives Bitter Attack Made on Him by Germans

LONDON, July 15. — Sir Edward Grey has placed the directors of German public opinion in a most embarrassing position. The German diplomatists and politicians were absolutely convinced a year ago that the British Secretary of Foreign Affairs would play the part assigned to him —that he would use his influence to persuade the English people to stand quietly to their ordinary business while the Germans were subjugating France and crippling Russia.

When Sir Edward Grey surprised these gentlemen by playing the part of a British statesman they resolved to make his position untenable, and determined to secure his removal, in order that he should not interfere further with German projects.

They therefore applied the full force of their policy of "frightfulness" to him. They hurled vituperation across the North Sea at him, every newspaper in Germany described him as a criminal of the most despicable order, he became known to the German public as a liar, a slanderer and a hypocrite, and English ladies returning to their homes were intrusted with the message that if Sir Edward Grey set foot in the Fatherland he would be cut up into little pieces. This policy was pursued until the news reached Germany that the English Foreign Secretary had been ordered to rest his eyes for a time, and that he had handed over his work at the Foreign Office temporarily to a colleague.

A shout of jubilation then was raised in the Fatherland, and the newspapers proclaimed the news that a brilliant success had been achieved by the German policy. The stated that "bad eyes" or "weak eyesight" was merely a pretext, "the usual English lie," and that Sir Edward Grey had definitely left the Foreign Office because the English people had at last grasped the truth, and had realised that he as in every respect unfitted for Foreign Affairs. The victory for the German policy was celebrated with expression of unbounded delight by the political newspapers, while the satirical journals gloated over the enemy's downfall in cartoons which [illegible] and villainous.

The news that the hated and much maligned statesman has returned to his post has, therefore, been received by the framers of public opinion in Germany with feelings of keen disappointment and profound disgust, that the English statement that Sir Edward Grey was compelled to rest for a time because the strain on his eyes had been too severe was the mere and whole truth.

A semi-official statement has been issued from Berlin obviously is intended to serve as a bridge leaning from fiction to fact. The inspirers of this statement ask the public to believe that "the return of Sir Edward Grey to the Foreign Office is, at the present moment, without political importance," because, "in spite of the fact that they have severely criticised their government, the English people are resolved to continue the war."

An inspired message from Berlin to the Munich Neueste Nachrichten declares that "the most that can be said is that Sir Edward Grey's extremely fateful complicity in the origination of the world war may be an obstacle in the path of those Englishmen who are endeavouring to bring about peace. It is further stated in the despatch to reason and to be converted, and it would be the greatest marvel if he were ever to realize and to admit that he committed a fatal mistake last summer and in the previous years."

MANITOBA'S OPPORTUNITY.

As election day approaches in Manitoba the determination of the people to wipe out the disgrace of recent years and rid the Province of political undesirables grows stronger, says the Toronto Globe. The most urgent need of the moment is political house cleaning. The public life of the Province must be made attractive to honest and decent men, and this necessitates a complete eradication of the tainted accumulations of an age of fraud and villainy. No condemnation can be too strong for the political rottenness that has made Manitoba's public life a reproach, and no means of cleansing can be too thorough or too radical. The choice is between a clean-up that will give the Province a fresh start and a hush-up that will leave the Province still infected with the virus of corruption, to break forth again after the slow spreading of its insidious poisons.

The people will not be content with the defeat and dismissal of those who have been trusted and have revealed themselves through what looks like a quarrel over the division of the proceeds of their faithlessness. Rightly regarded, the loss of office is no punishment, for the office should seek the man. But the need is not so much punishment for the guilty as the vindication of public honour and a deterrent admonition to all who may feel the impulse to be recalcitrant to a public trust. The more high the position and the more extensive the trust the greater is the crime of malfeasance, and the heavier should be the punishment. The honour and dignity of the Province demand that everyone found guilty of criminal acts be adequately punished, and that every dollar dishonestly taken be restored to the public Treasury. This is the essential preliminary of any policy of progressive legislation, and it demands emphatic endorsation and support for the new ministry.

In accepting nomination by the Liberals of Lansdowne, Hon. T. C. Norris, the new Premier, outlined a vigorous policy of progressive legislation. Apart entirely from the imperative necessity of a clean-up under untainted administrators, his accession to office will give a decided impetus to the political development of the Province. For the first session he has promised and outlined a prohibition measure to be submitted to the electors. If endorsed by them it will be made law by the Government's majority in the Legislature. A reasonable measure of compulsory education sufficient to remove all danger of the growth of illiteracy is also incorporated in his platform. With regard to agriculture, too, the Premier's policy is progressive, and suited to the special needs of the Province. He fully appreciates the pressing duty of the hour to strengthen the hands of the Empire by generous Provincial aid in meeting the need for men and munitions. But the restoration of public confidence is the necessary preliminary to the normal exercise of Governmental functions, and to that end there must be a thorough clean-up, under men enjoying the freedom of untainted public lives.

Demand For Farm Labour

Men Refuse to Accept Work on the Farm—Will be Refused Charity

Now is the season of the year when the demand for farm help is at the maximum. There are a number of good farm positions open, but very few men who are willing to fill them. Almost every day the officials in charge of the employment situation are in receipt of inquiries concerning the prospects of securing help of one kind and another. The reply invariably is: 'We have men here but they won't go out." The reply to those men when they seek charity next winter will be in line with their refusal to work on a farm when work was offered. There are a number of able-bodied men in the city, said one official, who would sooner beg than go to the country. They are not very anxious to work at any time. A system of registration has been inaugurated, by which means an accurate check will be kept for the purpose of reference when the charity season opens.

FARMERS COMPLAIN OF THE WEATHER

Haying and Harvesting Operations Delayed—Smut in the Oat Crop

Farmers are complaining of the unsettled condition of the weather, delaying as it does, the conclusion of the haying and the harvesting of the fall wheat crop. The latter is pretty well under way so far as Peterborough County is concerned. Much of it is in the shock and in another week or two, it should be all under cover. A portion of the hay crop remains to be harvested. Undue delay has been caused by the weather. The farmer no sooner gets the hay turned out and in shape to put it in the barn than it commences to rain.

Reports from various sections of the County indicate that there is considerable smut in the oat crop. The latter is of good length and well headed out. A little rust in the wheat is also reported.

FUNERAL OF LATE MISS GWEN ALLAN

MONTREAL, July 27.—The funeral of the late Miss Gweyndolyn Allan, daughter of Sir H. Montagu and Lady Allan, was held privately this afternoon from 'Ravenscrag." After service at the house, attended by relatives, the body was taken to Mount Royal cemetery and there interred in the Allan lot.

Miss Allan's body was brought back to Montreal on the steamer Missanabie yesterday afternoon. The body of her sister, the late Miss Anna Allan, also drowned in the sinking of the Lusitania, has not been found.

Sir Montagu has not been able to return to this country, owing to Lady Allan's not having sufficiently recovered from the injuries she suffered at the time of the Lusitania disaster, to warrant his leaving her.

ALLIES' BATTERIES GUARD SERB. BORDER

ROME, July 28. — Correspondence from Serbian headquarters confirms the report that Serbia does not intend to undertake offensive operations for the present, although the Serbian army is now fully equipped and compares favourably with the other fighting armies.

The frontier is guarded by French aeroplanes, and Belgrade is defended by six batteries of Serbian artillery and two each of British, French and Russian. The Serbian army consists of 280,000 infantry.

The Austrians, however, are preparing for a Serbian offensive. A dispatch from Kragujevatz to the Messagero indicates that the Austrians have constructed three lines of fortifications along the Serbian front.

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

THE GERMAN ATROCITIES AS OFFICIALLY REPORTED BY BRYCE COMMISSION

(Introductory Observations. Part III)

In dealing with the evidence we have recognized the importance of testing it severely, and so far as the conditions permit we have followed the principles which are recognised in the Courts of England, the British Overseas Dominions, and the United States. We have also (as already noted) set aside the testimony of any witnesses who did not favourably impress the lawyers who took their depositions, and have rejected hearsay evidence except in cases where hearsay furnished an undersigned confirmation of facts with regard to which we already possessed direct testimony from some other source, or explained in a natural way facts imperfectly narrated or otherwise perplexing. For instance, the dead body of a man is found lying on the doorstep, or a woman is seen who has the appearance of having been outraged. So far the facts are proved by the direct evidence of the persons by whom they have been seen. Information is sought for by him as to the circumstances under which the death or outrage took place. The bystander, who saw the circumstances, but who are not now accessible, relate what they saw, and this is reported by the witness to the examiner, and is placed on record in the depositions. We have had no hesitation in taking such evidence into consideration. It is natural to ask whether much of the evidence given, especially by the Belgian witnesses, may not be due to excitement and over-strained emotions, and whether, apart from deliberate falsehood, persons who mean to speak the truth may not in a more or less hysterical condition have been imagining themselves to have seen the things which they say that they saw. Both the lawyers who took the depositions, and we when we came to examine them, fully recognized this possibility. The lawyers, as already observed, took pains to test each witness and either rejected or appended a note of distrust to, the testimony of those who failed to impress them favourably. We have carried the sifting still further by also omitting from the depositions those in which we found something that seemed too exceptional to be accepted on the faith of one witness only, or too little supported by other evidence pointing to like facts. Many depositions have thus been omitted on which, though they are probably true, we think it safer not to place reliance.

Notwithstanding these precautions, we began the inquiry with doubts whether a possible result would be attained. But the further we went and the more evidence we examined so much the more was our scepticism reduced. There might be some exaggeration in one witness, possible delusion in another, inaccuracies in a third. When, however, we found that things which had at first seemed improbable were testified to by many witnesses coming from different places, having had no communication with one another, and knowing nothing of one another's statements, the points in which they all agree became more and more evidently true. And when this concurrence of testimony, this convergence upon what were substantially the same broad facts, showed itself in hundreds of depositions, the truth of the broad facts stood out beyond question. The force of the evidence is cumulative. Its worth can be estimated only by perusing the testimony as a whole. If any further confirmation had been needed, we found it in the diaries in which German officers and private soldiers have recorded incidents just such as those to which the Belgian witnesses depose.

The experienced lawyers who took the depositions tell us that they passed from the same stage of doubt into the same stage of conviction. They also began their work in a sceptical spirit, expecting to find much of the evidence coloured by passion, or promoted by excited fancy. But they were impressed by the general moderation and matter-of-fact levelheadedness of the witnesses. We have interrogated them, particularly regarding some of the most startling and shocking incidents which appear in the evidence laid before us, and where they expressed a doubt, we have excluded the evidence, admitting it as regards the cases in which they stated that the witnesses seemed to be speaking the truth, and that they, themselves, believed the incidents referred to have happened. It is for this reason that we have inserted among the depositions printed in the appendix several cases which we might have otherwise deemed scarcely credible. The Committee has conducted its investigations and come to its conclusions independently of the reports issued by the French and Belgian commissions, but it has no reason to doubt that those conclusions are in substantial accord with the conclusions that have been reached by these two commissions.

Arrangement of the Report.

As respects the framework and arrangement of the report, it has been deemed desirable to present first of all what may be called a general historical account of the events which happened, and the conditions which prevailed in the parts of Belgium which lay along the line of the German march, and thereafter to set forth the evidence which bears upon particular classes of offences against the usages of civilized warfare, evidence which shows to what extent the provisions of the Hague conventions have been disregarded.

This method, no doubt, involves a certain amount of overlapping, for some of the offences belonging to the latter part of the report will have been already referred to in the earlier part, which deals with the invasion of Belgium. But the importance of presenting a connected narrative of events seems to outweigh the disadvantages of occasional repetition. The report will therefore, be found to consist of two parts, viz.:

(1) An analysis and summary of the evidence regarding the conduct of the German troops in Belgium toward the civilian population of that country during the first few weeks of the invasion.

(2) An examination of the evidence relating to breaches of the rules and usages of war and acts of inhumanity committed by the German soldiers or groups of soldiers, during the first four months of the war, whether in Belgium or in France.

This second part has again been sub-divided into two sections:

(a) Offences committed against non combatant civilians during the conduct of the war generally.

(b) Offences committed against combatants, whether in Belgium or in France.

Part I.—The conduct of the German troops in Belgium will appear in Thursday evening's Examiner, July 29th, inst.

Any Woman Can Now Have Pretty Curly Hair

(Feminine World.)

Who'd have thought so simple a thing as applying ordinary liquid silmerine could convert straight hair into such pretty curly locks in a single night? The one who made this discovery is surely entitled to a rising vote of thanks. Now, all we need to do is to wet a brush with this harmless liquid at night, draw this through the hair, and in the morning we find it has dried in just the sweetest waves and curls.

It's good news, indeed, that we can now dispense with the destructive waving tongs forever! The curliness is so much more natural looking where the liquid silmerine is used, and certainly one's "crowning glory" appears softer, glossier and more beautiful. When it is so easy to procure a few ounces of this from the druggist—which will keep the hair in curl for weeks—there's no reason now for anyone putting up with straight, straggly or scorched, dead-looking hair.

Ireland Sends Thousands of Men To Fight in Flanders and France

12,000 Enlist for Immediate Service at Great Demonstration in County Down and 23,000 Men of Reserve Battalions Have Left To Fill Gaps at the Front.

NEW YORK, July 26.—Refutation of the pro-German propagandists' statement that Ireland is not supplying its quota of soldiery to the ranks of the British army is contained in the account in the Freeman's Journal, of Dublin, of the great demonstration at Warrenpoint, County Down, on July 7, which was received in this city yesterday. In its editorial commenting upon the demonstration the Freeman's Journal says:

"The speeches delivered last night, among them that of Lieutenant W. A. Redmond, M.P., impress a fact that cannot too often be repeated — that Ireland's stake in this war is certainly as great and precious as that of Great Britain. We all know something of her contribution to the forces that are battling against the brutal aggression of Germany, of the splendid sacrifices she has made, of the fresh lustre that the tradition of Irish gallantry has received from the daring and dash of the men who have been fighting in France and Flanders and the Dardanelles. But few of us were in a position to measure with anything like accuracy the full extent of Ireland's more recent and prospective contributions.

"General Friend, commander-in-chief of the forces, threw some light on this matter last night. The statement is a revelation. The Tenth division is now on its way to the front; the Thirty-sixth division, commanded by General Powell, leaves immediately for England preparatory to going to the front, and the Sixteenth division, commanded by General Sir Laurence Parsons, is approaching completion. It would have been completed long ago, but that, responding with an alacrity to a sudden emergency, which General Friend gratefully acknowledges, thousands of the men in the division joined other regiments for immediate active service. At the conference held in the early part of the day the number of men was given as 12,000, and General Parsons stated that all were most anxious to be in the fighting line at once

"Apart from the divisions raised in Ireland are the men forming the reserve battalions, in which General Friend is especially interested. To fill the gaps in the regiments abroad they have been going out in batches during the last eleven months, and in this way no fewer than 23,000 men have left. When to these facts and figures are added the Irish cavalry regiments, artillery and engineers, army service corps and royal army medical corps, a just idea can be formed of the extent of Ireland's offering to the cause of the Allies."

The meeting at Warrenpoint included representatives from both unionist and Ulster sources and was most successful. One of the star attractions was Sergeant Michael O'Leary, V.C., the popular hero, who is at present on recruiting duty in Ireland.

SHE GAINED 36 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dropsy. I had nervous headaches, dizziness and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I have been cured of many of my old complaints and gained 36 pounds in weight."

Were Warned Of The Eastland

CHICAGO, July 28.—United States Harbour Inspectors were warned of the condition of the steamship Eastland by John Devereaux York, a naval architect, on August 3, 1913.

"I stated in a letetr to them," said Mr. York, "that the Eastland was not a safe boat. She was extremely dangerous. She had a thirty-eight-foot beam for which all laws of steamboat construction require at least a forty-inch keel. The Eastland had no keel at all.

"There was no coal passer in the hold who was not aware of the danger. The fact none of them was found in the 'glory hold' after she turned over showed that. There was a narrow scaling ladder leading up from that hold and twenty men worked there.

"It would take twenty men at least twenty minutes to get out, climbing this narrow ladder. But they were all out when the ship listed."

To Fry Egg-Plant.

Cut them in slices half an inch thick sprinkle them with salt and let them stand a few minutes to extract the bitter taste; wash them in cold water and wipe them dry; season them with salt and pepper; dip them in flour and fry them in butter. Another way of cooking them is to cut them in thin slices and bake them on a bake-iron that is not hot enough to bake cakes.

Hastings Sends More Young Men

For Overseas Service—Presbyterian Church Hold Garden Party.

HASTINGS, July 27.—On Thursday last Hastings contributed another quota of volunteers for service overseas, in the persons of Messrs. Wharrie and Marshall, who left via G. T. R. for the training camp at Kingston, followed by the best wishes of all our townsmen, a great number of whom gathered at the Station to bid them good-bye. The above named were both husbands and fathers of small children, and tears and prayers were intermingled for their safe-keeping and early return to home and loved ones.

Lieutenant Hubbs was in town for a few days during the week, recruiting for his regiment.

Dr. Histed, chirapractor, has located in Hastings and in his rooms, over the Post Office, will be pleased to have free consultation with the diseased and suffering.

A large company gathered at the home of Mr. Duncan Fife on Wednesday evening, July 21st, it being the occasion of a garden party, under the auspices of the Board of Managers in connection with the Presbyterian Church. Conveyances were provided for those desirous of attending, and the three-mile drive out was much enjoyed. The local Band was in attendance and gave a number of fine selections during the evening. The ladies of the Church served a delicious luncheon, while a well-equipped booth was well patronized. The weather, which was somewhat dubious throughout the day, was, in the evening, all that could be desired, while the glorious moon lent an added charm to the scene. The committee in charge have every reason to be well pleased with the success of the undertaking. The proceeds were handed over to the Managers for Church purposes.

Mr. Albert Armstrong of Havelock is in town for a few days.

The Havelock Juniors came over on Wednesday last and played a friendly game with the locals, which was much enjoyed by the boys.

We are pleased to learn that Mrs. Robt. Collins, who is at the private hospital in Keene, is doing as well as could be expected.

Still another Ford car has arrived in town, the purchaser being Rev. Mr. McKim, Pastor of the Anglican Church, here.

Mr. Winter Runnels has disposed of his grocery business to Mr. Victor German, who will take possession in the near future. While we are sorry to lose Mr. Runnels, we wish his successor a continuance of his prosperity.

Spring wheat is being harvested in this vicinity and is an excellent crop. We are told that it is quite an unusual occurrence at such an early date. One farmer has informed us that his crop of fall wheat and rye was the heaviest he had ever harvested.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Dunnigan of Warkworth spent Thursday calling on friends here.

Mrs. Keon of Toronto is holidaying with Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Lynch, Front Street.

The river presents quite a picturesque appearance in the evenings, dotted with canoes, skiffs and motor boats, everyone, apparently, doing their best to take the most out of the boating season.

An excursion en route for the Thousand Islands passed through here on Saturday. A few from Hastings joined the crowd.

Mr. Staples has been re-engaged as Principal of the Public School for the ensuing year with an increase in salary.

Dr. and Mrs. Hess have been visiting friends in Brighton, etc.

Mrs. J. Sargent of Westwood spent a day during the week with Hastings friends.

Mrs. Thos. Lynch is in the hospital in Peterborough undergoing a serious operation. Her friends are hoping for her a speedy return to her wonted health.

FRUIT BULLETIN

RASPBERRIES, Niagara District grown, are about done, and Black Currants are also nearing an end. The ever popular and delicious Lawtonberry—large black THimbleberry—and Tomatoes are beginning to make their appearance.

Kidney Trouble?

The waste material which the Kidneys are intended to remove from the blood, if allowed to accumulate in the system, poison the blood and thus produce deleterious effects.

If from over-work, exposure to cold, or some local injury, the kidneys become congested or inflamed and cannot perform their functions, the system becomes filled with uric poisons.

Whenever a dull, heavy pain is felt over the region of the kidneys for any length of time, accompanied by a sallow complexion, loss of appetite, decrease of weight, and a puffy condition under the eyes and in the ankles, a chronic inflammation of the kidneys must be suspected, and if not relieved promptly chronic Bright's Disease will certainly develop.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, sold everywhere at 25c and 60c which is a Diuretic as well as an Aperient, will carry out of the system the poisonous material which the kidneys cannot get rid of, and will relieve the congestion of the kidneys.

Sold by R. L. Payne and McDermid & Jury.

The CRESSMAN Company Limited

Kitchener At The Front Bears A Charmed Life

British Headquarters, France, July 10, (by mail).—An otherwise dull week at the British front has been relieved by the visit of Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, which is the more interesting because it is the first time he has been in the area held by the British troops. His previous trips to France have been for conferences at Gen. Joffre's headquarters. Probably not one out of a hundred soldiers saw him. The army went on with its work; he saw it at work and chose what he wished to see.

Other distinguished visitors had had programmes laid out for them, but he laid out his own which was a revelation of energy and precision in the amount of ground covered. The only ceremonious affair was a parade of Indian cavalry, which he briefly reviewed. As there is no speed limit on the main roads in the military zone, he was not long in going from point to point. When he left the car to go on foot, the officers conducting him found that it took a good pedestrian to keep up.

Kitchener showed particular interest in the trenches, fortifications, and all the conditions actually relating to the real fighting. It was a ticklish moment for his aide and the officers in command of that section when he went to Ypres, which is still daily subjected to intermittent shelling. It is certain if the Germans had known of his presence they would have given more than a salute of seventeen guns, to which the Secretary of War is entitled.

Shells Avoided K. of K.

The field marshall picked his way through the former streets, among the wreckage, saw a seventeen-inch shellpit in the plaza, remains of the Cloth Hall, and other sights, an impressive example of the destructive power of modern shell fire. His conductors kept thinking, "What if a big, high explosive should come and get the Prime Minister of Great Britain and the War Minister at the same time." But, unusual as it was in Ypres, not a single shell fell while Kitchener was there.

It happened that while Kitchener was visiting a heavy battery a characteristic action of trench warfare developed on the only part of the line that had seen any action this week. At Pilken, north of Ypres, the Germans commanded two small hills, whic hgave them a pushing advantage over the British trenches on their front. The British determined to try to rectify their line, and after the usual artillery preparations they charged, and by a free use of bombs, took 250 yards of German trenches, 80 prisoners and two machine guns. The battery which Kitchener was visiting was called upon to assist in the work of repulsing the counter-attack to recover the lost ground, which failed.

Schools at the Front.

The War Minister saw no more of the conflict than anyone engaged can see in a wooded flat country. From his viewpoint the battery screened the sights of the enemy. The gunners themselves could not see the enemy.

The visitor gave considerable attention to two schools, which show how self-contained the expeditionary force is as a world in itself. At the machine gun school he met officers and men drawn from the regiments at the front being trained in handling weapons which have come to play such an important role. At the cadet schools, where the problem of filling gaps caused by officers casualties is being solved on the spot, he met privates out of the trenches who have shown such aptitude that they receive but a short exacting course of instructions before they are sent back to the trenches with commissions.

HAVE CLEAN WINDOWS IF ONE WANTS TO KEEP WELL

There are good reasons — besides those of cleanliness—for the washing of windows.

The whole science of helio-therapy, or curing certain ailments by sunlight, has made wide advances since recent experiments on the ultra-violet and the infra-red rays, those powerful parts of the sunlight which are invisible to man. It has been found that the grayish-yellow colour caused by dust on window panes gives a colour to the glass that allows hurtful rays to come through, and stops those parts of the sunlight which are good for health. The skin, especially, suffers as a result of unwashed windows.

The effect of certain colours upon health and upon feeling is well known. The "dim religious light" from stained-glass windows of cathedrals and churches has been used for centuries to heighten the sense of devoutness. The Brussels lace-makers used to handle their fins mesh in damp cellars lighted with green glass, as the colour was easier to work by, and especially because it was soothing to nerves strained by working with excessively fine threads.

Few people realize how a dust deposit on a window changes the whole colouring of the room. Yet, if one puts on light amber glasses—as used in summer on the beaches—it is well known how different everything looks.

A pane of glass on which dirt has collected will diffuse more rays than will the amber glasses. Many and many a carefully planned room, with decorations and everything else in harmony, is soiled by neglect of the windows. And to hide the entire window with curtains is, of course, far worse.

The skin is one of the most important organs of the body, and in summer time it must be kept clean and given every chance of exposure to the sunlight. Perspiration grows rancid in hot weather, as does every other kind of grease, and nothing but sunlight prevents consequent danger to health. This does not always cause a direct skin disease, but rather creates a condition wherein the skin grows less and less able to do its work, putting all the strain on the kidneys and other organs and giving them more to do than they can manage.

Thus, far removed though it may seem, too few baths and unwashed window panes will give rise to internal disorders which may really cause serious illness. City people, especially, compelled to live indoors a great deal, should watch the cleanliness of their window panes.

Every time you touch a dirty window pane you are in serious danger. Window panes are constantly walked over by flies, which are well known to be deadly germ carriers. When you touch the unclean glass a certain amount of dust that may be swarming with microbes adheres to your fingers. You may touch your mouth with your finger and in an instant germs invisible to the eye, have entered the system.

NUT COOKIES

Cream ½ cup of butter in 3-4 cup of sugar, add yolk of one egg, 1 cup flour, 1 teaspoon of milk, ½ cup of broken walnut meats, beaten white of 1 egg. If too soft to roll place on ice for about half an hour. Sprinkle the tops with granulated sugar.

Notes From Diary of Pte. Herb. Edwards

Peterboro' Boy With the Machine Gun Section of the 39th Battalion Talks of the Voyage on the Missanabie and Incidents in England

Pte. Herb. Edwards of the machine gun section of the 39th Battalion, has been keeping a diary of the adventures of the 39th, which he has sent home to his mother, Mrs. J. W. Edwards. The following extracts are of interest:

The name of our steamer is the "Missanabie," a 520 ft. boat, and our cabin is a fair sized place with four bunks. My mates are E. Hoskins, C Ciroux and J. Peel.

We arrived at Quebec and took on the pilot and sent off our mail. I saw where Montgomery fell and also Wolf's monument, the Ross rifle factory, the fort, a torpedo boat and oth[er] things too numerous to mention [but] may be sure we stayed on deck till "lights out." On Friday we started our regular drill and physical exercise. We drill three hours a day. On Saturday it was raining and on Sunday we had a light fall of snow. saw about 14 bergs, passed Cape Race the last point of Newfoundalnd, and saw a fleet of trawlers fishing for cod. We were also at church in the afternoon. On Monday it started to get a bit rough and we were tossed about like a top, but we have not been sick yet, only a little dizzy. We have travelled about 1,300 miles, or half way of our journey. This evening we saw a porpoise, and a fish with a head and mane like a horse; it followed us for a couple of miles.

We received news that a couple o ships were sunk just ahead of us, in the same course we are following, so we are taking all precautions. There is no lights nor noise allowed on deck. On Wednesday we had life belt drill and instructions, so we are ready if anything should happen. We saw a light ahead and thought it was our escort, but were mistaken. There was nothing to note July 1st, so will relate what happened to-day. This afternoon we were met by the H.M.S. destroyer "Nyles IV," and we sure did cheer. We were signalled that they [had] German submarine also, some instructions, so we know we are in the danger zone. She guarded us all night and next day, and we were very proud to have such a protector. It reminded me of a little dog under a waggon.

A bunch of us boys couldn't sleep at all that night, and at 4 a.m. went on deck to see the land we expected, but to our dismay just a couple of ships and two destroyers were in sight. We went down to breakfast and thought we would be in Plymouth about 9 a.m., but when we came up we found we were in a dense fog and had to slow down nearly to a standstill, so that kept us late. As we ran into port the fog lifted and we saw the harbour of Plymouth and city and it sure was a sight worth seeing. We anchored in port as we had to wait for the tide and were compelled to spend our time listening to some of the old-timers talking about the old sod, and us Canucks could not get a word in edgeways. About 4 a.m. the next day we started on again and it was almost impossible to hear one's self think for the cheering. We passed all the forts and three training ships for boys. We anchored opposite two more and stayed there till Sunday morning. Then a tender took us to the station and we left about noon for Shorncliffe. I had to laugh when I saw the engine and cars, they looked so funny. The scenery is very pretty and the fields all fenced with green hedges.

We passed through London, the "white city." The people were all out to cheer us as we passed through. We landed in Shorncliffe at 7 p.m. and went up to our camp. It is called Caesar's Camp. There is about 50,000 troops within five miles of here and the town of Folkstone and Shorncliffe are about two miles from here. We did not go down town Sunday night as it was too late and we had to get supper and a place ready to sleep, etc. I went down Monday night and saw Morty Mowry, Harvey Staunton Buff Guerin and Sergt. Britton o the old drill shed. Sergt. Allen is going home to Canada on leave, so maybe you will see him before you get this. Bruce Mills was down to see us all and everyone I saw of them looked well. I am afraid what we heard concerning poor Jack Miller is true, as they tell me here he is a prisoner in Germany.

We can see France across the channel on a clear day and we are not far from the firing line. Dover is just about twenty miles and the Germans are trying to reach Calais, and that is 21 miles from Dover. I am sending you some flowers and will also try to send you some souvenirs from the front.

We have not had a fine day since we came here, nothing but rain, and to make matters worse our food is none of the best. If we go down town for a meal they charge us 2s. 6d. or even more for a bit of roast pork without any vegetables.

We are drilling eight hours a day and then we have night manoeuvres sometimes from 8 till 11 p.m. We have long route marches with full kit which weighs about 35 lb. We have two wet canteens, 1 dry canteen, and a Y.M.C.A. tent.

We get a 6 day pass in about a week's time, so I must go to London to see the sights they talk of, so I will write you later after my adventure. Give my best wishes to all the boys.

Your loving son,
Private H. Edwards.

P.S.— I met a lot of French and Belgians here. One of them gave me some souvenirs picked up at the retreat from Mons.—H. E.

DEATH CHASE OF LINCOLN'S ASSASSIN

LOS ANGELES, July 28. — John Wilkes Booth, the assassin of Abraham Lincoln, as he lay dying on the porch of Tom Garrett's farm house, after having been shot while attempting to flee from a nearby flaming outhouse, where he had taken refuge, gasped out in whispers his final words:

"I—I just want my mother to know that I did it for my country."

The story of the search for and killing of the fanatical murderer of the martyr President which has been told and retold in the books of American history, was narrated in graphic, vivid fashion by Col. Everton J. Conger, who commanded the detachment of soldiers who traced down and avenged the untimely death of the Great Emancipator. He is eighty-one years of age, and a resident of Dillon, Mont. He is visiting friends in Los Angeles, and will in a few days visit the two expositions.

The old veteran had just witnessed the production of "The Clansman," at the Auditorium, and the scenes of battles and the shooting of Lincoln brought back vividly the old and real scenes before his eyes.

Colonel Conger was in Richmond, Va., when Lincoln was assassinated. The Confederate army had just been disbanded, and the soldiers, in twos and threes, were starting for their ruined homes. Like a flame of fire sweeping the country came the sad news that the President had been shot, and that the murderer, the actor Booth, supposed to be accompanied by a young man by the name of Harold, was at large. With many others Colonel Conger joined the search.

Negro Supplies Clew.

"I figured out that they'd try to cross the Rappahannock River and get down into Virginia," he said, "so I got some pictures of Booth and Harold and started out, making inquiries from every one I saw. Finally I came on an old negro, from whom I had taken away a gun during the war. He remembered me.

"I showed him the picture and asked him if he had seen anyone who looked like that. He pointed to the picture of Booth and said he thought he had seen him with another man in a boat, crossing the river, although he said, the man he had seen did not have a moustache.

"I made some inquiries and when I was sure I was on the right track, I went to General Augur, in command of the troops at Washington, and asked for some men. He detailed Lieutenant Doherty and twenty-five men, and put them under my charge.

Then he told how they took up the trail and followed it through information they gathered from place to place. They found that the two men—one lame—had taken up with three Confederate soldiers. Finally they located the three Confederates and arrested them and forced one of them, Lieut. Jett, to take them to Booth's hiding place, on Tom Garrett's farm.

"We got to the farmhouse about 3 o'clock in the morning and awoke Garrett and told him to tell us where Booth was. They had taken him out to a tobacco house in the yard because there wasn't room for him in the house. We made Garrett's brother get the keys and we went out and opened the door. Then we yelled to Booth to come out and surrender.

Booth Defies Them.

"He said he wouldn't, and would kill the first man that came after him. So we surrounded the house, and I told one of the men to set fire to the shed. He went up near the tobacco house and then came back and said that Booth had shouted through the cracks that he would kill the first man that lit a fire.

"As I didn't like to ask one of the men to do it while I stood back, I gathered up some straw and lit it, and went behind the house and poked the burning straw through one of the cracks.

"When the place commenced to burn inside, I could see him, but he couldn't see me on the outside in the dark. He had a carbine and he was trying to peer out to get a glimpse of me. When he saw the house was all afire, he dropped the gun and started for the door. I drew my pistol and started to run around the corner of the house to head him off. But before I got on the other side I heard a shot. I thought at first that Booth had committed suicide, but I found that one of my men had shot him as he ran out of the door.

"It was Sergeant Boston who shot him. His real name was John Corbett and he came from England, and got religion in Boston, and changed his name to Boston. Many times during the war he had been sent to the guard house for telling the officers they shouldn't swear. He was a religious fanatic.

"When I asked him why he shot Booth instead of allowing us to capture him alive, he told me that he had been 'guided by Providence.'"

Booth was then taken to the porch of the farm house and died about 40 minutes later.

Second Week Of The Campaign

A Big Audience Heard Evangelist Sharpe Last Night

The second week of the big Evangelistic campaign being conducted by Evangelist Sharpe and party has begun with increasing interest and attendance. The big audience which gathered to enjoy the meeting last night were not disappointed. The lively song service conducted by Chorister Rudd and the bright selections so admirably rendered by the Stringer sisters were enough to cheer anybody who might have happened to be there with the "blues."

Four ministers of the city were present and occupied seats in the "Ministerial front row" on the platform and gave assistance during the service.

The big ex-bartender Evangelist was full of fire and motion in delivering one of his "harpoon" sermons filled with jaggered points and piercing phrases.

He spoke last night on the "Armless Hand," or the hand-writing on the wall, contained in the story of Belshazzars feast, in Daniel, the fifth chapter. Here are some of the Evangelist's terse sayings:

"They had booze at Belshazzer's feast, and God knows what happens when the booze begins to flow."

"I believe a woman has as good a right to get drunk as a man."

"Ah, don't lay too much blame on Belshazzar; there are professed Christians in Peterborough who are filling themselves up with booze, as Belshazzar filled the vessels of the Lord with wine in his day."

"Whiskey, dancing and idolatry were all wrapped up together in the Belshazzar feast."

"If you can get anything out of hell that is dirtier or filthier than the Tango I'd like to see it."

"You can see your preacher going down the street and in a scoffing fashion say, aha! aha! there goes our preacher; but the time will come when it's the man who wears the long-tailed coat you will want to see."

"What was it that stopped Belshazzar's feast? It was the hand of God on the wall. It makes all the difference in the world when God speaks, or God writes on the wall. How would it be to-night if the hand of God would write on the wall with you? It may write before morning."

In response to Mr. Sharpe's appeal there were several who raised their hands for prayer and went forward to be prayed with in the after meeting.

The service will begin to-night at 8 o'clock.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Being in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The staff in the Tax Collector's Office shows a perceptible increase during the past few days, the occasion being the collection of one-half of the taxes, which become due on or before August 1st.

Board of Works.

Ald. Green, Chairman of the Board of Works, has called a meeting of his Committee for this evening. One or two of the aldermen may have something further to say in respect to the brand of road oil being used on the city's streets.

Well Represented.

The corporation was well represented at the Conservative convention that was held last evening for the purpose of nominating a candidate. Chief among those present was a number of aldermen.

Street Paving.

Street paving is due to commence at an early date. For the past few weeks the city has been constructing storm drains and otherwise preparing for the pavement, which is to follow.

Sunday Concerts.

The 34th Regimental and the Salvation Army bands in Guelph give sacred concerts, in addition to the night engagements.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Hamilton citizens have already raised enough money to buy 88 machine guns. The aim of the committee is to get 200. It is also proposed to raise a machine gun battalion with twenty-four machine guns to each company of 144 men.

Hydro By-law Carries.

The ratepayers of Harriston voted on a by-law for Hydro-power, carrying it by a majority of 300. The vote for was 331, and against, 31.

Red Cross Campaign.

The town of Stayner has a campaign on to raise $25.00, of which 25 per cent. will go to the Red Cross fund. Friday and Saturday next are the days of collection.

LETTER FROM SHORNCLIFFE.

Mr. R. J. Begley has received a letter from Pte. J. J. Smith of the 39th Battalion at Shorncliffe, stating that the men are down to regular drill which is proving interesting. Pte Smith was a member of St. Peter's T.A.B.

Meeting of The Munition Makers

Mr. Frederic Nicholls of the Canadian General Electric Company Makes a Statement.

TORONTO, July 28. — "We are marking time until the situation develops," said Mr. Frederic Nicholls of the Canadian General Electric Company. "We have just had a meeting of several of the munition manufacturers in Toronto for the purpose of conferring informally together, and I have no doubt that our conference will be productive of good results.

"The difficulty at the present time is that the production of the various parts of the shells required at the front is not well balanced, and the Shell Committee is making every effort to overcome this obvious disadvantage. Our meeting was quite informal, but it was none the less helpful, and the work will go on without interruption. Indeed, we hope to accelerate the output of munitions of war, and to that end we shall devote our best energies.

"I have had a talk with General Bertram regarding the production of fixed ammunition, but it would be unwise and impolite to refer specifically to our conversation at this time."

"When are you to meet Mr. D. A. Thomas?" Mr. Nicholls was asked.

"With regard to that question," answered Mr. Nicholls, "I may say that General Bertram told me that he would advise me in advance when an appointment was to be made to meet Mr. Thomas.

"I am looking forward to the conference with him with pleasure, and I have no doubt that we shall profit by his advice and experience."

Mr. Tate of the Prudential Life Insurance Co., spent Tuesday in the village.

The many friends of Mr. J. English will be sorry to hear that he is seriously ill at his home on Rubidge street.

UNITED CIGAR STORE OPEN ON SATURDAY

Mr. F. M. Dewan, secretary of the United Cigar Stores, is in the city today arranging for the opening of their local branch on Saturday. The premises formerly occupied by Mr. James Sutherland, immediately north of McDermid and Jury's store, is being rapidly equipped preparatory for the first day's business on Saturday. The Peterborough branch has the familiar appearance of the United Cigar Stores in other cities, the red exterior, large lettering and the other distinctive features.

600 VICTIMS LAID TO REST

Flags at Half Mast and Bells Tolled as Eastland's Dead Were Buried

Special to The Examiner:

CHICAGO, July 28—Under streaming skies, Chicago buried its dead today.

The hue and cry for the guilty in the Eastland catastrophe was muffled for a time. In its place the bells tolled the city's sorrow. In official places the doors were closed. Over public and semi-public buildings flags dropped at half mast. Close to six hundred of the victims were laid at rest. So great were the demands upon the priests and the pastors that funeral ceremonies were by sheer necessity conducted over groups of bodies. Conventional means of conveying the dead to their last resting place proved to be hopelessly inadequate. Many of the sad processions were led by coal, ice and express vans swathed in crepe.

PRESIDENT ASSASSINATED

Hayti Revolutionists Shoot Guillaume

Special to The Examiner:

PORT AU PRINCE, July 28.—As a climax to the two days' revolution that has swept the capital of Hayti, revolutionary troops to-day dragged President Guillaume from the French legation, where he had taken refuge, and shot him in front of the building.

Guillaume's body lay on the spot where it had fallen for several hours while the mob marched by.

War between Santo Domingo and Hayti loomed up as a strong probability to-day.

Washington, July 28.—France was considered certain to demand satisfaction for the invasion of its legation, and it was agreed that it would be obligatory upon the United States, under the Monroe doctrine, to see that it was accorded.

Washington, July 28.— The cruiser 'Washington,' Rear Admiral Caperton in command, will reach Port Au Price, Hayti, before noon to-day with an expeditionary force of eight hundred blue jackets and marines. Admiral Caperton will land marines if necessary, to prevent further fighting.

Death Comes To Man Who Slept For Entire Year

Columbus, Ohio, July 28.—While most persons lapsing into the coma which means the end of suffering from softening of the brain, linger for only two to eight days, Henry C. Mankey, aged seventy-five, lingered for exactly one year before his death. During that time he was virtually asleep, not being able to talk intelligently though he was able to eat and digest when food and drink were offered to him.

The case is one of the most remarkable in the annals of medicine, according to Dr. W. U. Cole, who was the attending physician. Up until three years ago, Mankey, who had been a soldier in the civil war, in the Eighth Pennsylvania cavalry, worked at his trade, of carpenter.

When he began to show signs of softening of the brain, because of senility, he was still able to walk around and for two years was a partial charge of his family, not being able to continue work.

A year ago he lapsed into the coma which betokens the end of the suffering of a person afflicted with softening of the brain. Dr. Cole supposed the man would die inside of a week. He lived on, although his respiration was marked with what is known as Sheyne-Stokes' respiration, a quick succession of breaths, growing shorter and more shallow, and followed by a long breath, and then a period of suspended respiration.

The medical books say that form of breathing comes just before death. However, Mankey breathed in this way for a whole year.

Then, suddenly, his relatives noticed a difference in respiration. They called Dr. Cole, and he saw that there had been a change. Nothing additional could be done and Mankey passed away. Through the whole year Mankey would eat any sort of food the family had but never asked for anthing. He did not know those about him, unless for a flash, after which he would seem to lose the spark of intelligence. Most of the time he slept and had to be awakened by grasping his body when it was thought he needed food.

"He belonged more to the plant kingdom than the animal kingdom all of the year," reflected Dr. Cole.

Why Your Watch Should Be Wound Twice Each Day

You cannot secure the best services from a good watch or clock unless you know how to wind them so as to cause the least wear and irregularity in their delicate machinery.

A watch should be wound at the same time every day. If allowed to run down, or even almost do so, and then wound up until it will not wind any farther, it cannot do as perfect work as a watch that is not allowed to run to its full capacity, or wound up until it is as tight as it can be made.

If a watch is wound both morning and evening at about the same hour, and the key is given only enough turns to wind it a little less than half what is could be wound, the watch will run more evenly, wear much longer and keep more accurate time than if it is wound up tight once a day.

A watch spring will last longer if it is wound when there is the least extreme of temperature, and morning and evening are, of course, the best in that respect.

It is more or less dangerous to wind a watch during a heavy electric storm, and it is best to avoid winding while on an electric car.

An eight-day clock should be wound twice a week at as regul. periods as possible to secure the best results. Never allow the clock to run down, and if possible do not wind it until it is tight.

Learn by experience just how many turns of the key it takes to wind the clock to run eight days, and then when half of the week is gone wind the clock by giving the key just half as many turns as it would require to wind it all the way. More accurate time will be had and it will avoid placing any of the parts on a strain, which is frequently the cause of good clocks giving out in some particular before they have served half as long as they should.

A little attention to this advice will lengthen the life of any watch or clock and make it a better timepiece.

ST. PAUL'S TEAM HERE ON HOLIDAY

The St. Paul's team of Toronto will play in Peterborough on Civic holiday against a picked team from the City Baseball League. The St. Paul's Club is one of the best in Toronto, and the game will be a good test of the brand of ball played by the local clubs.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

THE THISTLES LEAD THE CITY LEAGUE BY A BIG MARGIN IN RECRUITING

Although the Thistles are only in second place in the City Baseball League standing in the percentage of games won and lost, Louis Yeates' team has the rest of the City League outfit beaten a city block when it comes to volunteering for active service. Orme Cavanah, who has alternated between the catching position and shortstop for the Thistles, is the latest member of the team to hear the call of King and Country. He has been sworn in for overseas service with the Canadian Field Artillery, and will be one of the 24th Battery detachment to take the special non-commissioned officers' class leaving next Monday. Left-fielder Harold Knapman is another of the 24th Battery men to be accepted, both boys going as sergeants. Harold Morrow is in France with the Canadian Remount Depot. Lieut. Harold Hill, who has performed brilliantly behind the bat for the Thistles, is with the 38th Battalion, C.E.F., which leaves shortly to relieve the Royal Canadian Regiment in Bermuda. Lieut. Merry Huycke, the crack pitcher of the Thistles, has volunteered for active service with the Canadian Field Artillery and is awaiting orders. Gordon Matthews, who played second base in several games for the Thistles, is in training with the Mechanical Transport Section of the Army Service Corps, at Ottawa, while Lieut. Joe. Munro, the right fielder, will also go overseas when appointed.

The Empires are the only other City League team to be represented in the line-up for the Empire. Pitcher Allen Wade being with the 39th Battalion at Shorncliffe.

LACROSSE

A practice is called for this evening at Central Park at 6.30. Afterwards a team will be selected for the Campbellford game.

LAWN BOWLING

Another of the series of the fob contest games was played last night between the Sturgeon and Maynard rinks. The score was as follows:

Sturgeon	000010012001— 5
Maynard	511404400420—25

The last final touches are being made to the green in view of the annual tournament, which will be held next Monday.

The green will be in perfect condition, well lighted and all the necessary details are all carefully arranged.

An exceptionally successful day is looked forward to.

TENNIS

In the Kerr cup games on Monday night, Weller and Rush of All Saints' won from Lefevre and Murray of Sacred Heart by 6-3, 6-3; and Cranfield and Sisson defeated Gordon and Letellier 6-1, 6-0; Harris and McNellan of St. Andrew's defeated Hillier and Smith of Knox by 6-2 and 6-3. Williams and Weber of the Bowling Green defeated Cranfield and Maybee of South End by 6-1 and 6-3; Meyers and Cressman of the Bowlers tied Jackson and Bowness of the South End, the scores being 6-3 and 3-6.

BASEBALL

St. Peter's and Empires ran off an exhibition feature last evening at Riverside Park. "Bill" Andrews was on hand and took a turn behind the bat.

Death Sentence Failed To Worry This "Tommy"

LONDON, July 25.—An extraordinary story of a British soldier who was sentenced to death for sleeping at his post after being four days and nights under fire, and how the man "slipped away" in the night and got wounded in fighting the Germans, of his stay in the hospital, his return to the front and the incidents that followed is told by a correspondent at the British Headquarters in France.

The narrative is told in connection with the short Act of Parliament which was passed recently dealing with military offences committed at the front, and to legalize the suspension of sentences and to put in the offender's hands a chance of obtaining its entire remission.

Though the act has not been long in operation its leniency already has been justified in quite a number of instances. In one case it was only two days after receiving a sentence of fifteen years' imprisonment that the culprit not only obtained its remission, but was specially mentioned for exceptional gallantry in carrying to a successful issue a bomb attack upon a German trench after every member of the party except himself had fallen.

Another man, also under a long sentence, freed himself from its consequences by a cool indifference to death in succouring the wounded under fire, and half a dozen further instances could be given of fine deeds which have won for the doer not only rehabilitation as a soldier but admiration as a man.

But the most curious instance of benefit from the act requires a more extended telling, not only for the quaintness of its tragi-comedy but for the almost incredible illumination which it sheds on the British soldier. A man had been sentenced to death. His offence, almost the gravest that war knows, was sleeping at his post in face of the enemy. For such an offence there are no extenuating circumstances. If there had been he might have claimed them all.

The man had been under fire in the trenches for four nights and days, and the exhaustion that follows on prolonged exposure to danger seems often as impossible to resist as the snow sleep to which men yield though aware that certain death is the consequence. The man was sentenced to be shot at dawn on the morrow. During the night he disappeared. What exactly happened to him then has not yet come into the story. It is known to himself alone. All that at present is certain is that, by some means or other, he got into conflict with the enemy and was wounded.

Now it is not particularly difficult to get wounded; but it is not so easy, when wounded apart from your proper unit, to prevent your presence exciting surprise, and perhaps challenging investigation. However, busy times come to hospital staffs, when everything is subordinate to the saving of life and the alleviation of pain, it would hardly occur to the most suspicious to look askance at anyone wearing that red seal to his valour, or to imagine him as guilty of an offence in obtaining it.

Besides, there was the man's name and number, and the battalion to which he belonged. He made no attempt to conceal anything, and so, just after he should, legally, have ceased to breathe, he was received at a collecting station, obtained first aid for his wound, and was forwarded to the field hospital. His wound was serious, and in due time he was sent down to the base and shipped across the Channel to a London hospital.

There, as he began to recover, he had the time of his life. He was driven in the park, taken to garden parties, treated to the theatre, carried off into the country and admired by everyone who could get within reach or speech of him. All of which was, no doubt, exceptionally pleasing to a man who ought to have been dead.

Still Had Hero's Privileges.

When he could move about again by himself he was despatched to a convalescent home, where life was delightful, and everything that could be thought of was done to amuse him. He felt that, without repining, he could have stayed on there forever. However, duly reported sound again, he was given a most satisfactory furlough, and discovered, once more among his own people, that he had by no means exhausted all the privileges of a hero. They, none of them, of course, suspected that he ought to have been dead. He captured the hearts of all, and did no small business in obtaining recruits to fight for his country.

His furlough ended, he was directed to rejoin at the depot, and there, perhaps, the puzzle of his psychology begins. All the rest may have been impulse, but here was determination. He did rejoin. He was a condemned man, and he had done nothing to erase that condemnation. He had slipped in some extricable fashion through the close drawn meshes of the administrative net that incloses the soldier, and here he was of his own accord placing himself in that net again. He rejoined at the depot and went out with the first draft to the front.

The sergeant major when he saw him looked more amazed than if he had seen his ghost.

"Well, of all the infernal impudence!" he managed before words failed him.

He thought that a man who had been sentenced to death might at least have had the decency not to put his sentencers in such a quandary. What was to be done with a fellow who could not take seriously even his own death sentence? The man stood at attention with no words to say. Perhaps one need hardly add that the sentence was not carried into execution.

German Government Issues Order Fixing Price of Commodities

BERLIN, July 25. — The Federal Council has issued its long expected order regulating prices for necessaries of life, especially grain and fodder. The order provides that severe punishment shall be meted out to dealers who unduly increase prices or withhold articles of food for the purpose of artificially raising prices.

The German Empire is divided into four districts, instead of thirty-two departments where prices vary according to the special local conditions.

Corn prices remain about the same figure as heretofore. The price of rye is fixed at 220 marks (55) per ton for the Berlin district; at 215 marks $55.75) for the Eastern district, and 250 marks ($57.50), for the Western district.

"The price of wheat is fixed at forty marks ($10) above that of rye, and beginning with a certain date the regulations provide for a bi-weekly increase of one and one-half marks (37 cents) per ton.

Barley, to be used as fodder, and oats are placed at a uniform price per ton throughout the empire. The prices remain below the average of last year's figures.

The regulations also provide for the creation of an imperial fodder board whose duty shall be to supply all classes of cattle, swine and fowl raisers with oat, barley and molasses substitutes.

Last Minute Despatches

Special to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, July 28.— The Government to-day called to the colours all males eligible for military service who were born in 1896.

BLYTH, Eng., July 28.— Crews of the Swedish steamer Emma and of two Danish schooners, submarined by the Germans in the North Sea, were landed here to-day.

NEW YORK CITY, July 28. — A cable to the Tribune says:

Telegrams from Bucharest report that the Rumanian government still categorically refuses to allow munitions for Turkey to traverse her territory.

The Germans were so sure that Rumania would yield that they had forwarded thousands of carloads of war material, which is now congesting the Austrian railways on the Rumanian frontier. Fifty cars which had passed the frontier were seized b ythe Rumanian authorities.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

One writer on the steel stocks says there will be a day of reckoning. Not the professional gamblers, denizens of Wall street, but the deluded public will be the worst sufferers when the inevitable collapse comes.

When the collapse will come no one can foretell— it may be a long distance off, or it may come as speedily as certain discerning financiers predict.

But that it will come, no sane person can doubt.

Any one of several possibilities might precipitate it.

The war might end all of a sudden in the near future—as more than one well informed observer expects.

The United States Government might be driven into placing an embargo on all exports —delicate negotiations are about to be taken up with England.

Demands from our own Government might upset the filling of orders for European belligerents.

In short, at such a time as this no one can tell what the future may or may not bring.

One of the oldest members of the New York board said that a study of the position of Steel stock convinced him a tremendous amount of stock was for sale at 65, but the market above that figure is hoy ocombed with stop orders to buy placed by shorts who have commitments outstanding.

"All the heavy trading in the entire market," he continued, "is on the short side. Old shorts covered on the break following news of the sinking of an American freighter, and new shorts rushed in to take their places."

Russian Grains.

Washington, July 27. — Russia's winter cereal crops promise heavy increases this year. Forecasts for fifty-four divisions of European Russia, apparently all except Poland, cabled to-day by the International Institute of Agricultural Rome, are:

Wheat, 463,000,000 bushels, an increase of 29.3 per cent. over last year; rye, 7,000,000 bushels, an increase of 28.1 per cent.; barley, 491,000,000 bushels, an increase of 30.9 per cent.; oats, 589,000,000 bushels, an increase of 32.7 per cent., and corn 79,000,000 bushels, a decrease of 3.2 per cent.

Great Britain's latest shell inquiry is for 2,000,000 high explosive shells, it is reported.

J. P. Morgan, who was expected to return to his desk Monday, will not return until August 15, it is said.

Russians Take 2000 Prisoners and Repulse Attacks

The Italians Are Daily Getting Nearer To Goritz

CZAR'S ARMIES ARE STILL HOLDING GERMAN HOSTS BACK FROM WARSAW

Italians Have Made Further Gains Towards Gorizia---Britain Can Laugh at Any Fear of Invasion Says Asquith.

Special Morning Cable:

PETROGRAD, July 29.—The Czar's armies are still holding the German hosts back from Warsaw. There is a growing confidence here.

LONDON, July 29.—Premier Asquith in the House of Commons says Britain can laugh at any fear of invasion.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Becker has been denied a new trial and he will be electrocuted to-morrow.

ROME, July 29.—Italians have made further gains toward Gorizia.

LONDON, July 29.—Fifteen hundred and fifty people have lost their lives as a result of German submarine attacks.

SANDWICH, Canada, July 29.—William Leffler was found guilty of dynamiting the Peabody plant.

LONDON, July 29.—There was marked conldence this morning, as a result of the Government announcements in the Commons.

BELFAST, Ireland, July 29.—Spies are suspected of starting a fire which did two hundred thousand dollars' damage to Government stores here to-day, including Canadian flour.

LONDON, July 29.—Ten persons were drowned when the British freight steamer Hogarth was submarined off the Suffolk coast yesterday, sinking in three minutes.

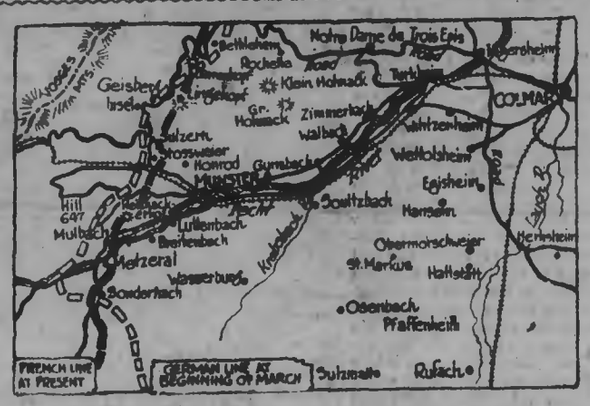
THE HAGUE, July 29.—Dutch papers cordially supported President Wilson's last note to Germany.

AMSTERDAM, July 29.—German heavy guns again bombarded Dunkirk yesterday, doing little material damage.

LONDON, July 29.—Lloyd George declared this afternoon, that within a few weeks the British army will be supplied with shells to meet demands. One hundred thousand volunteered for sixteen factories. The Government has decided to set up ten additional arsenals now as a result of the Boulogne conference.

LONDON, July 29.—Wholesale massacres of Christians in Armenia have been reported to the Foreign Office. Lord Crew says the Germans in Armenia are an unmitigated curse.

AMSTERDAM, July 29.—French aviators bombarded the German naval base at Zeebrugge yesterday damaging two destroyers. This is the fifth raid since Friday.



The Clim For Colmar.—The progress of the French north of Munster in the Vosges continues. The French valley and the river leading to Colmar are gradually coming under the control of the French artillery.

BECKER TO DIE IN ELECTRIC CHAIR TO-MORROW MORNING

OSSINING, N.Y., July 29.— "You can tell the world that Charlie Becker will die like a man. That's all."

Becker has lost his last fight. With the above words he resigned himself to his fate to-day, even while his lawyers were feverishly grouping for some legal angle on which they could hope to turn the case and cheat the gaunt chair in which he will die at 5.45 a.m. to-morrow morning.

Even his wife, whose remarkable nerve has never faltered throughout his three years fight for life, was in a state of collapse to-day.

Prison officials this morning began preparing Becker for the ordeal.

He was stripped of his civilian clothes and given the black garb of a prisoner about to die.

MOIST EVERY DAY SINCE ST. SWITHIN'S

Not Rain Exactly But Near Enough to Justify 40-day Belief.

Thursday, July 15, was St. Swithin's Day. According to the old belief, if it rains on St. Swithin's Day, it will rain for forty days afterwards. It rained on St. Swithin's Day. While the weather has not entirely lived up to the old belief, it is doing its very best, for of the fourteen days, including St. Swithin's Day, and since, eight have been rainy. As on the other six days it was probably threatening to rain, or the rain was evaporating, the general moistness of the atmosphere will perhaps keep the saint's reputation secure to the present.

Kaiser Guarded By a Secret Field Police

LONDON, July 29—A Daily Chronicle despatch from Zurich says:

Paul Schmeder, who claims to be one of those very few and highly favoured correspondents who have lived at the Kaiser's headquarters since the beginning of the war, has just written a large volume, in which he tell the German public all about the life the supreme war lord leads at the front. The theory circulated by enemies of the Fatherland that the Kaiser's presence at the front disturbs his generals is scornfully rejected, the writer maintaining on the contrary that the Imperial advice is frequently sought and generally acted on by them.

The Kaiser's special train, in which he makes his famous and frequent rushes from one point to another, consists, according to Herr Schmeder, of ten carriages constructed in modern lines; comfortable but not luxurious. At the beginning of the war this special train was painted a whitish blue colour, so that troops and civilians were always able to recognize and cheer the Emperor as he passed, but fear that hostile aviators might find the task of dropping bombs thereon made easier for them if they became aware of that fact has resulted in a periodical repainting of the train in various colours.

"The necessity for this precaution" adds Herr Schmeder, "will be obvious when I mention that a train purposely made to resemble in colour and form that of the Kaiser's was promptly bombarded by a French aviator shortly after leaving the Frankfort railway station."

The safety of the Emperor in the field is guaranteed, he says, by his personal adjutants and by a large number of secret police, known as secret field police, specially selected for their duties from all parts of Germany.

Thrilling Battle Between Austrian Aeroplane And Italian Troops at Verona

One Incendiary Bomb Came Very Near Destroying the Famous Tomb of Juliet---Russians Repulse All German Attacks.

Special Morning Cable:

ROME, July 29.—The Venice Gazettino reports a thrilling battle between an Austrian aeroplane and Italian troops at Verona, in the course of which the aeroplane came near destroying the famous tomb of Juliet known to the world through Shakespeare's play, "Romeo and Juliet."

One incendiary bomb dropped so close to the tomb that the ground close by was torn up. The blaze caused was quickly extinguished.

The aeroplane which was of the Ettrich type, and which flew the tricolour of France, despite the fact that it was an Austrian flying machine, dropped five incendiary bombs. One fell within the barracks at Campofiore, causing slight damage.

Rifle and artillery fire caused the aeroplane to rise to heights of two thousand metres, where it hovered for a time, before concluding that further damage could not be wrought and it finally disappeared.

RUSSIANS TAKE 2,000 PRISONERS.

PETROGRAD, July 29.—Russian arms withstood the furious attacks by Field Marshall Von Mackensen's German troops near Hrugiesof, and by a brilliant counter-offensive swept forward irresistibly capturing three villages from the enemy, with two thousand prisoners. The official War Office statement to-day related this incident to show that the German wave was breaking fruitlessly on a solid rock of Russian defence.

The enemy continued to attack practically throughout territory from Wieprz to Bug.

The War Office says: "Fighting of the severest intensity continues on the Upper Bug, marked by heavy artillery firing. Along the Narew the enemy is attacking also with heavy artillery."

"In the vicinity of the Mouth of Iskwa, a portion of the enemy captured our trenches. Counter-attacking with bayonet charges, we repulsed him."

Turkey Short of Shells and Get Them Through Roumania

NEW YORK, July 29.—A cable to the Tribune from Milan says:

Telegrams from Bucharest report that the Rumanian Government still categorically refuses to allow munitions for Turkey to traverse her territory.

The Germans were so sure that Rumania would yield that they had forwarded thousands of carloads of war material, which is now congesting the Austrian railways on the Rumanian frontier. Fifty cars which had passed the frontier were seized by the Rumanian authorities.

As the Turks are unable to obtain fresh supplies of ammunition they have determined to make a desperate effort while they still possess some reserves to drive the allies from the Peninsula of Gallipoli.

At the last council of war held in Constantinople, at which Field Marshal Von Der Goltz and General Lemin Von Sanders ware present it was decided to concentrate the Odrianople garrison and the troops guarding the Black Sea at Gallipoli.

This decision is proof that Turkey does not fear an immediate attack on Adrianople by Bulgaria.

The arrival of M. Stonjanoff, director of the Bulgarian public debt, in Berlin, is additional proof that Bulgaria is unlikely to move. German banks still owe Bulgaria 150,000,000 marks of the 500,000,000 loan negotiated eighteen months ago, but it is clear that Germany will never allow this sum in gold to leave the Empire at the present juncture without binding engagements for neutrality on the part of Bulgaria. If the German banks refuse to keep their engagements it is possible that Bulgaria may turn toward the quadruple alliance.

The Volia, the official organ of the Stambulociet party in Bulgaria, has published a categorical denial of the report spread by the German press that M. Bratio, the Rumanian premier, had taken the initiative in the formation of the Rumanian-Greek-Bulgarian league against the occupation of Constantinople and the Dardanelles by Russia. No such league exists or is planned.

The one ambition of the Bulgarian and Rumanian peoples at present is to get the crops harvested, the more so since no such record harvest has been seen for a quarter of a century.

"Allies Appreciate Britain's Contributions" Says Asquith

LONDON, July 29.—In his speech in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon, on the first anniversary of the declaration of war, Premier Asquith said:

"The navy, so far, has been denied the grim and glorious fight, but it is through its unrelaxing vigilance and the supreme skill with which it has been handled that this country this day can laugh at the scare of an invasion, and that we to an extent unknown by any other of the belligerent powers are immune from the actual ravages and dangers of war."

Glancing around the House, the Prime Minister remarked:

"This is a sight unknown for a hundred years, this aggregation of members equipped in military garb, but there is not a family represented in the House, and the House is typical of the whole country, which has not given its hostages in sons or brothers."

BEST RECRUITING REPORTS.

Speaking of recruiting which, he remarked, had been in progress for twelve months with undiminished activity, Premier Asquith said,

"The latest reports are among the best we have had for a long time."

The Premier concluded with a note of caution to the country, saying:

"Do not let us suppose that our national duty is discharged either by sending an adequate influx of recruits to the army or to the various industries engaged in the fabrication of munitions. The duty has been cast upon this country not only of maintaining the freedom of the seas, not only of supplying large contingents of well equipped men for the battle fields and trenches, but also of financing to a large extent the whole conduct of the war.

"We cannot do that if we continue to import and to increase our indebtedness to other countries, and unless we maintain our great manufacturing industries."

Premier Asquith urged the accumulation of a large reserve of gold and the use of paper currency by house holders and employers.

MELANCHOLY CALUMNY.

He characterizes as calumny the statements in a section of the press, which he described as melancholy and notorious exceptions to the newspapers as a whole, that the people of this country had failed to rise to the height of this great occasion and that the allies did not appreciate the contributions Great Britain was making to the ultimate triumphs of the common cause.

"Don't let us give any encouragement to the faint-hearted and still less to the back-biters, who are disheartening our allies and encouraging our enemies," he said. "Let us in this House and in this country at large, with the same spirit of energy and determination which for 12 months has inspired us, continue to persist and persevere to an inevitable triumphant issue."

A WEAK CHESTED BOY.

My boy Frank seemed weak-chested and took a very severe cold," writes Mrs. D Stevens, Ninga, Man. "The many medicines used did not seem to benefit him, until we tried Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine and found it to be exactly what was wanted to cure him." Its treatment is so thorough and effective as a cure for croup and bronchitis.

WAS CONNECTED WITH BLACK HAND

VANCOUVER, July 28.— Through the evidence supplied to the United States federal court by Detective Ricci, of the Vancouver police force, Frank Farmer, ex-convict, white slave runner and general bad man, who led a white slave gang which operated with gasoline launches between this city and Seattle, was tried with four of his fellow white slavers and the engineer and assistant of the launch; and was convicted in Seattle and will be sentenced within a few days to a term in the penitentiary for the offence which, according to the U. S. criminal code means ten to twenty-five years.

Frank Farmer, besides being leader of this gang of white slavers, is said to be connected with the Black Hand society. In 1913 while leading a branch of the Black Hand society in Calgary, Farmer was caught and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary for blackmail. After serving his full time he started a disorderly house but was again arrested and being found guilty he was given six months. Apparently Calgary was too warm for him, so picking up the remnants of his hand he moved to this city.

Choice Recipes

ASPARAGUS SOUP.

Cut the tender tips from cooked asparagus, set them aside and cook the stalks in some of the water in which the asparagus was cooked the day before. Cook down to a cupful, strain, and add two cups of white sauce. Heat to boiling, add the asparagus tips and serve.

DROP NUT COOKIES.

Mix and sift 1 cup flour, 1 cup of light brown sugar, 1-2 teaspoon of salt and 1 teaspoon of baking powder. Chop coarsely 1-2 cup of walnut meats and 1-2 cup of pecan nut meats; add to the flour mixture and mix to a paste with two well-beaten eggs and 2 tablespoons of water. Drop in small heaps on a buttered paper-lined pan and bake 15 minutes.

NEVER-FAIL SPONGE CAKE.

Beat two eggs, add one cup sugar and beat, then add one cup flour with two teaspoons baking powder and a little salt mixed. Then make a stiff sponge. Add slowly one-half cup of warm milk and flavour to taste. Bake in hot oven.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

"You claim to be a man," sez Buck; "but you're actin' like the weakest kind of a woman. No man wants a woman who don't love him; but a woman 'll marry a man just to spite another woman. The Kid, here, was square all the way through, and now if you're going back on us, why you got a yaller streak in ya a foot wide. The only way you can go out o' this as a man is to think it out by yourself, and then shake hands."

She gulped a time or two, handed her gun to Buck, and stood for a moment with her eyes on the ground. "I reckon you're right," sez she, and left 'em.

"You didn't kill my body, Kid," sez Buck after they'd shook hands and handed a little gossip back and forth; "but you sure took my spirit. I've never been able to sit a hoss comfortable from that to this, and it leaves me with a lot o' thinkin' on my hands. I've been hopin' you'd come back to us and we'd leave the road and get us a ranch somewhere; but I admit you and Belle will tone up now that she's had a showdown."

They went in to breakfast, which was a most agreeable sight to me, a most soothin' and contentful sight! After a time Belle came in with a swagger and shook hand with Tom Smith. She carried it off well, and when he started to leave she came with him as far as the crag where I was restin' easy on my appetite.

Here she gave him the long handclasp and swore he was dead to her. She turned after this, and Buck went on with him 'til they were out of sight, while she sat by the fire and began to smoke cigarettes as vicious as I ever saw it done, and when Buck came back she didn't notice him.

The canon ran north and south here, and the sun was hotter'n an oven on that crag. The sound of water was in my ears, the taste of it in my mouth, and the cry for it through my whole body. I got so I didn't know much; but I well knew one thing, and that was, that the next time Tom Smith saw fit to stage a scene where a lookin'-glass wouldn't be handy, it wouldn't do him a mite o' good to invite me to be the substitute.

CHAPTER THIRTY-SEVEN
BUD'S REPORT.

I allus hate to stand hardship alone. When the's a crowd around I can swell up with the heat, shrink down with the cold, and joke about loss of food just as cheery as anybody; but the' ain't much excitement in showin' out high when ya haven't got any audience but just yourself—though, thank heaven, I can say truthful that I never betrayed airy an audience into any such fix as Tom Smith had got me into.

The Stern crowd acted purty much like any other loafers and they were so far off that I couldn't even hear what they said when they quarreled; but everytime I wiggled a little to see if it would be possible to slip down and make a run for it, one of 'em looked up. The only place to get down was on the side next to them, and even on this side there was a drop of about eight feet; so I lay as comfortable as I could in a pool of sweat, and tried not to wish Tom Smith any ill luck after he was dead.

That canon I was in is one o' the wonders of creation. It is over a hundred miles long, and in some places fifteen hundred feet deep, even by daylight. The's mighty few places where it's possible to get a wagon across it, and the growth down below is altogether different from what it is on top. In some places the walls are so steep it is just as if the earth had been made of putty, and some kid had come and cut a big gash in it with a hot knife. I would have enjoyed studyin' such a wonder place as this more if I could have had a good look at it; but the way things grew around me, about all the outlook I had was along the wall to the camp, and up the wall to the sky which was so hot and bright I did not yearn to look at it much, especially as I hoped I'd have a better chance to some other time.

Belle had grit, all right. She smoked cigarettes until I feared her fine would choke up and she'd have to clean the soot out before she'd be able to inhale another one; but she didn't do no moanin' or groanin' and none of her brothers talked to her any,though Buck used to look at her purty often.

When the men sat down to dinner, my heart broke again at the unreasonableness of my appetite; but she did not eat a bite. She left 'em alone and came down to the little openin' where she and Tom Smith had said goodby, and here she just let her face sag as it would, and gave me a pudding of mental anguish to top off the hearty meal I had made of physical sufferin'.

Her face was naturally clean-cut, and firm, the face of a fighter; but now it was filled with the hopelessness of bein' up again' something she couldn't fight, and I longed to tell her that the blame chump wasn't worth it, and he was fickle and flighty, and not to be trusted for a moment, that his vanity was such that he'd lure his best friend into a hole, freeze him, roast him, and starve him, while he rode off to his love-makin' and forgot all about him—but it wouldn't have done a mite of good.

Women love simply because that was their main purpose in bein' sent to earth, and bein' madly loved by one isn't any more a sign of deservin' it than bein' successful in business is a sign of bein' industrious and thrifty. When I was young I spent money just the same as if I could afford it, and when I got settled, why, I had more'n I had any need of.

While Belle Stern was sittin' in a crumpled heap, her hands gripped on her breast, and her eyes fixed on the spot where Tom Smith had stood, another feller came into view, and this feller certainly did look like Baldy Hagus. He was younger, better set-up, and keener in every way, but he was as much like Baldy Hagus as a new hat is like an old one, and I did blame Baldy for havin' got in the road of some of the bullets which rightly belonged to this feller.

As soon as the girl heard him, she dropped on the sand in a careless sprawl, and began to roll another coffin-nail.

When the new one, which was Bud, o' course, came up to her, he sighted the silk gown, took off his hat and bowed to her with a grin. "Ah-ha," sez he, "I see we have Miss Stern with us to-day. Is the Kid here?"

One thing that comforted me for my part in this deal was that those Stern boys might be on the wrong side o' the fence, but they were sure enough brothers to this girl. "He was here," sez she, "but he'll never come again."

"What was the matter," sez Bud, sittin' down in front o' her, "did Buck weary him talkin' o' that ranch where we're all goin' to straighten up?"

"No," sez she, he is going to marry that girl at the Horse-Shoe."

"Um-ha," sez he, "then whoever it was who took the trouble to send us word, sent it straight. I wonder who it was?"

"It wasn't any friend, you can gamble on that," sez she. "It was some one with snake blood who has it in for us but who lacks the nerve to tie it into us on his own hook. It was like Panther Emomns."

"Well, it was, admitted the man. "I dropped in on Corrigan's night before last and he told me about Panther and Big Jeff gettin' ready to whip out the Lion Head crowd. When the Kid came back with the Lion-Head crowd he acted the tender-footedest of airy man west of Ohio; but finally they got a drink in him and he hot Panther in the arm and made the whole gang dance and stand on their heads, and creep to him and carry on high for about an hour, and then ordered 'em out of the country.

Then the Kid threw in with Big Jeff, shot him up, and took the girl away from him, and both Panther and Jeff thing that the Lion Head crowd are in the way. The owner is generally thought to be harmless, but first he picked up his half-breed cook who they claim used to ride with Brophy. Then he started out with an outfit which bragged of how they would in his herd down into Mexica, and he comes back with a live outfit, and among 'em is the Panhandle Kid.

"This foreman they got claimed to be the Kid when he joined 'em, and he whipped the whole sorry outfit that was going to take the herd away from Jamison, him and the cook, who joined in with him after gettin' a right sort of a lickin' himself. All the fellers in this outfit are live ones, and two of 'em about broke Corrigan's heart by winnin' his dog away at poker."

"If they've got an outfit like that, where will Panther and Big Jeff get nerve enough to whip it out?" sez the girl.

HAD DIARRHOEA.

Was So Bad Passed Blood.

Little Boy Was Cured By Using
DR. FOWLER'S
Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Diarrhoea arises from many causes such as, change of water, change of climate, change of diet, catching cold, the eating of unripe fruits, etc.

Never neglect what, at first sight, appears to be a slight attack of diarrhoea, for if you do some serious bowel trouble may ensue.

Mrs. Wm. Bartlett, Stanley, N.B., writes: "Last summer our little boy, age 1½ years, took diarrhoea. He got so bad as to pass blood. We procured a bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, and after I had given him the third dose he was all right. I would not be without it, as I consider it a household remedy. It is a Godsend to any family."

There is nothing that can take the place of "Dr. Fowler's."

There is nothing "Just as Good."

"Dr. Fowler's" has been on the market for the past 70 years.

"Dr. Fowler's" is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Wisdom.

Hope and success make a fair tonic than medicine.
The best tonic is fresh air.
The best restorative is sleep.
The best stimulant is exercise.
Fatigue calls for rest and not the spur.—Wisconsin State Journal.

Pope' Alley.

Pope' alley was in Her Majesty's theater, London. It was a promenade down the center of the pit and between the latter and the boxes. There the beaux of the day were wont to stroll between the acts, exchanging criticisms on the music and the singers and ogling the belles in the boxes.—London Mail.

Some Transformation.

"Jones has changed very much since his marriage. He used to say a man could do what he pleased in this world."

"Well?"

"Now he doesn't say anything much, but he thinks, I gather that in the holy estate of matrimony a man can do whatever his wife pleases."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

Concerning Posterity.

"We want posterity to feel that it owes a great deal to us," said the statesman.

"I don't know about its owing much to us," replied the politician. "But after we get through piling up debts posterity is going to feel that it owes a great deal to somebody."—Washington Star.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Port Planford, Nfld. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend, I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

Evolution of a Name.

Cosmo Innes, in his work on surnames, quotes an instance showing the gradual transformation of a patronymic. "A respectable citizen of Dublin named Halfpenny threw in trade, so his children prevailed on him in his latter years to change the name, which they thought undignified, and this he did chiefly by dropping the last letter. He died and was buried as Mr. Halpen. The fortune of the family did not recede, and the son of our citizen thought proper to renounce retail dealing, and at the same time looked about for a euphonious change of name. He made no scruple of dropping the unnecessary 'h.' That being done, it was easy to go into the Celtic saga, which 'The Lady of the Lake' had just raised to a great height. So he who had run the streets as little Kenny Halfpenny came out at the levees as Kenneth MacAlpin, the descendant of a hundred kings."—London Chronicle.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

A Desperate Remedy

It Was Applied to Two Patients and Was Successful

By F. A. MITCHEL

"John," said my especial friend, Mrs. Edith Allison, "I am very sorry to see you neglecting the most important matter in a man's or a woman's life. Some day, when you are an old man, tired of the social life, tired of your club, forced in the evening to go out to seek the companionship of persons whom you care little about, and many of whom care less for you; when you return to your lonely bachelor quarters, with no one to welcome you, to pass a night alone, you will regret having wasted years of opportunity to provide yourself with a home."

"What a horrible picture!"

"The picture is not half as horrible as the reality."

"Marriage is an awful risk."

"A risk, yes; the other is a certainty."

"But I can't compel myself to love any woman nor any woman to love me."

"That is where we in America err on the side of romance. Abroad the principal feature in wedlock is the dowry; here it is what we call love. A dowry is tangible; love is intangible. Far be it from me to decry a pure affection, but that emotional condition, which in men and women is one minute ecstatic and the next may turn to hate, or later to indifference, is no basis on which to make a life contract binding two persons together."

"Would you have me go into a room blindfolded where there are a number of unmarried women, take one of them by the hand and lead her to the altar?"

"You might as well do that as take a partner while blinded by love. You don't need to do either. One thing you can do that is reasonable in choosing a wife. If you take any one into your employ you require references, don't you?"

"Certainly."

"Very well. Why should you not all the more require references in taking a wife?"

"And the wife, I presume, should require references of me?"

"Certainly."

"It seems to me," I replied after some hesitation, "that your idea would only serve to keep me and the woman I might marry still farther apart."

"Not if it is properly carried out."

What was Edith driving at? I confess I could not make out. That she was a woman of great originality I knew. That she was my devoted friend I did not doubt. She had cautioned me before this against waiting till I was an old man before marrying, and I suspected that she now had some plan for me. I wondered if she was not bent on making a match between me and some young woman who, like myself, was growing out of her youth and should be mated.

"Come, Edith," I said; "out with it. You're bent on marrying me off. What is your plan?"

She paused a few moments before replying; then she put down some fancy work she was doing and, looking me straight in the eye, said:

"Desperate cases require desperate remedies."

"Granted."

"It would do no good for me to introduce you to a woman who I believed would make you a good wife."

"I should probably spurn her."

"Nor would it avail to introduce such a woman to you, assuring her that she would be happy with you."

"She would wonder if you thought her bereft of any taste whatever."

"I have a woman in mind and have had just such a conversation with her as I have had with you."

"The dickens you have!"

"Yes, and she admits that any man introduced to her for the purpose of making a match would repel her."

"I see; you are going to throw us together without our knowing of your design."

"Nonsense. That threadbare theme of novelists might do for very young persons. You and the woman I have in mind are too old. The only way by which you can be united is for both to place the matter in the hands of a third party."

"As in Turkey, where the parents arrange matches for their children and the groom never sees the bride's face till he lifts her veil after they are married."

"You have stated the case exactly."

"Very well, to cease generalizing and come down to a definite plan?"

"The lady whom I have assured that you will make her a good husband has consented to leave the whole matter to me. My plan requires that you do the same. Do you consent?"

"How can I consent to what I don't know?"

"You are both being assured by me that neither will make a mistake—to turn the key of wedlock on yourselves without having seen each other."

"Great heavens!"

"Is it not done every day in Turkey?"

"Go on."

"You are to be married without any previous acquaintance, not having seen each other till you stand before the clergyman who marries you. At the conclusion of the ceremony you are to separate for a week, at the end of which time you may, if so disposed, call on your bride. From this time, further, if you are both so disposed, you are to do as much or as little courting as you like."

"It seems to me that this is putting the cart before the horse."

"Not at all. It is simply applying a stimulant to obviate the indifference of middle life. If you cut a gash in your arm what do you do to draw the parts together?"

"Apply an adhesive plaster."

"That is the intention of this plan of mine. It is an adhesive plaster to draw you and the woman together. Married you cannot fly apart. You are bound by matrimony."

"Edith," I exclaimed, "what a head you have on your shoulders! You should have been a scientist."

"I am giving you nothing but common sense, nothing but what has been practiced in all parts of the world from time immemorial."

"Do you mean to tell me that you have succeeded in inducing a woman to consent to your plan?"

"She would consent to no other. There must be a plunge, then time to recover from its effects."

I sat thinking over this remarkable proposition for some time without speaking.

"Edith," I said at last, "this is certainly a desperate remedy you propose, but it is as desperate for the woman you have in mind as for me. You would not, I know, concoct such a schema for me with any one except a lady and one in whom you repose great confidence. I only question whether in recommending me to her you are not influenced to wrong her on account of your friendship for me. The lady has doubtless had time to think the matter over. Give me the same. When I have decided I will advise you."

I went to my room and did the hardest job of thinking I have ever done in my life. I had already come to hate the loneliness of my abode, and my picture as a white headed old man came up before me—tottering out alone to dinner and tottering back to get rid of the hours remaining before bedtime. These and other pictures of the future I called up, contrasting them with the sweets of home, wife, children. On the other hand, I thought of being tied up with a woman who might turn out to be a virago. I remembered that my friend, Edith Allison, had said that the loneliness of old age is a certainty, matrimonial unhappiness a chance. As for waiting for a love affair, I had been doing that for twenty years, and there was less hope now than ever. True, under the influence of a sudden passion I had wished to marry one of several different women at different times. Fortunately they had all refused me. Later I found that my judgment of them had been execrable. In Mrs. Allison's judgment I had every confidence—that is, her judgment of women.

One morning I was driven to the house of the fiancee I had never seen and who had never seen me, to be married, arriving at a few minutes before noon. I was prepared stoically to meet either a beauty or a Gorgon. At 12 o'clock the bridal party entered the room where I waited. My wife to be was not beautiful, but I saw character in her face. I was relieved.

Her mother led the way and, advancing to me, grasped my hand, pressed it warmly and showed also a warm sympathy in her face. The bride, whose color seemed to have deserted her, closed her eyes to look at me. From thinking of the frightful plunge I was taking—so I considered it—I was turned to sympathy for her. We stood together before the clergyman while members of the bride's family gathered on the sides. I made the responses in a firm tone; the bride's were barely audible.

When we had been pronounced man and wife my wife turned and for the first time fixed her eyes on my face. This first look at her husband was met by a sympathetic, assuring smile from me. At the same time I took her hand and pressed it. Then I turned to carry out the terms of this singular plan by leaving the house.

My wife did not relinquish my hand. Her mother, who was watching us, asked me to step into another room, where a breakfast had been prepared. It occurred to me that if my bride had been disappointed in me I would have been permitted to depart. Doubtless the mother saw in her daughter what decided her to detain me.

We passed into a breakfast room and seated ourselves about a round table. There was a stiffness among us for a time, but presently we were chatting as if we had known one another for years. All talked except the bride, who sat with her eyes fixed on her plate. But roses had come into her cheeks, and there was always on her lips that which resembled an incipient smile.

When we had refreshed ourselves we all rose from the table, and the members of the family vanished in different directions, leaving me and my wife alone in the hall, I with my hand on the knob of the front door.

I have narrated this important episode in my life so far as I intend to narrate it here. That part of the plan which related to a post-nuptial courtship I do not intend to touch upon, except to say that our courtship began when my wife first looked up at me after the ceremony, and, though I am now an old man, it is still in progress. Children have blessed our union, and our family circle is what family circles should be, so I consider it about all that makes life worth living.

I was induced recently to dine at a club one evening with a friend. An old bachelor whom I knew came in, took a seat alone at a neighboring table and desolately fed himself. What he did when his dinner was ended I don't know, but a month later he committed suicide.

LOST FIVE RIFLES

German Bullet Went Down Muzzle of London Soldier's Gun

While home on leave, Cecil Bourke, of the London Rifle Brigade, gave the following account of doings in the vicinity of Ypres: "For my own part I was lucky. My coat was riddled with holes by the grazing of bullets, and I was buried for half an hour by the collapse of a traverse of our trenches, before being rescued by Sergt. (now Second Lieut.) Wimble and Lance-Corporal Pace. On another occasion, the men immediately on my right and left were shot down, and while I was speaking to one of our most popular officers, Lieut. Price, who joined us from Canada, he was shot through the head. I have had five rifles smashed by bullets, a German bullet once going right down the muzzle of one, whilst two of my rifles were cut clean in two.

"At one stage a gap was left in our lines which we were called upon to fill, and for nine days and nights we held our position. After six days' rest we were again up in the firing line at Ypres. On our left and right a temporary tactical retreat took place. We were in the centre, and one of our sergeants said: 'Retreat be ——!' We stood our ground, and after reinforcements had come up we won the engagements. As to the Germans, you can take it from me, they are splendid soldiers. The Saxons and Bavarians, however, do not seem anything like so keen on fighting against us as do the Prussians.

CADORNA AND CAESAR FACED SAME PROBLEM

How Far Beyond Alps Must Italy Go? Empire Went Far For Frontier and Failed

Augustus Caesar, having pacified Rome and turned a republic into a stable empire, found that his country was not safe until the mountains to the north of the peninsula had been brought under Roman authority. Peace for the plains of Lombardy, and what is now Venetia, was impossible so long as there remained upon the northern boundary warlike tribes ever ready to descend upon the Roman provinces and ravage them with fire and sword. What was needed was a natural and impregnable barrier that words prevent the incursions of the barbarians. In those days Italy was bounded by the Alps, occupied by barbarian tribes, and while what are now France and Belgium were Roman, only the Ligurian Alps gave secure access to these provinces. The civilized provinces of Greece, Macedonia, the towns along the Dardanelles, Bosphorus and the Aegan lacked protection from the barbarias beyond the Danube.

To Protect the Plains

The conquest of what are now Bulgaria and Serbia guaranteed the safety of the provinces in the Balkan peninsula, but here a strong army had to be maintained until the empire began to crumble some centuries later. There remained the necessity of conquering the Alps, a problem which was successfully attacked in several campaigns, and upper Austria, Salzkammergut, Eastern Bavaria and Tyrol were thoroughly pacified and organized, most of what is now Switzerland being already Roman. Thus Augustus and his generals solved the problem which is now occupying the thoughts of the Italian general staff, and the Italian plains were protected from the attacks of the northern barbarians.

Germans Then

Nevertheless, this frontier was unsatisfactory, for southwestern Germany still cut into the frontier as a corner, and made it necessary that a large army should be maintained along the frontier of Gaul. It was this situation that prompted Augustus to attempt the conquest of Germany, then disorganized. For a few years he succeeded. Then came the victory of Hermann over Varus at the Teutoburger Wald in A.D. 9, which resulted in the Roman frontier between the Rhine and the Elbe being broken, and the old frontier restored.

Sixty years later the frontier question was settled when Rome occupied the extreme angle of southwestern Germany, the present Baden, Wuerttemburg and Western Bavaria, thus rounding off the frontier in a satisfactory manner. Along this border a great Roman wall was erected, which served the purpose almost as well as a range of mountains. In recent years German archaeologists have discovered portions of this wall which held back the barbarians until the Roman Empire fell into decay.

Local Market Prices

The following are local market prices quoted this week:

Wool Advanced.

With the wool clip practically all bought up the price had advanced two cents all around. However there is very little coming forward now.

Meats are generally easier in price, including beef cuts and hams. The following are local market prices:

WORDS OF WISDOM

"I am an experienced chamois hunter, and not afraid of mountain climbing."—King of Italy's reason for remaining at the front.

"I ask you to plant the flag on your workshops."—Mr. Lloyd George.

"The Government still hold the practices of German submarines are not only in flagrant breach of the laws of war, but are mean, cowardly and brutal."—Mr. Balfour.

"The British soldier who dies in battle is a martyr, because he is a volunteer;; and his blood will cement the people of England, Scotland and Ireland to the Dominions beyond the seas as no prosperity could do."—Sir George Reid.

An Austrian Ruse

A company of Italian soldiers crept cautiously towards one of the enemy's trenches and executed a brilliant bayonet charge, only to make the amazing discovery that the trench was occupied by cardboard men, 200 in number.

Napoleon and Submarines.

Robert Fulton was the most interesting inventor of the early submarine. He constructed a boat in France, and managed to interest the French Government in it. He gave trial trips in the Seine, at Rouen, and at Brest. Compressed air was used, and Fulton remained at the depth of 25 feet for four hours, steering his submarine in every direction.

He also attached a torpedo charged with gun-powder and blew up an old vessel lying in Brest Harbor. This created a tremendous sensation, and marked a wonderful achievement.

Fulton took his submarine to the French Government in the year 1803, just at the time Napoleon was contemplating an invasion of England. Moreover, Fulton personally laid the plans of his submarine before Napoleon, who, it is said, was attracted by them, but later ridiculed them as new fangled impossibilities, just as he did the steamboat offered to him at the same time.

What would Napoleon say could he know the part the submarines was destined to play in war?

Farm and Dairy Market Report

TORONTO, Monday, July 26.—A review of the crop situation recently issued by the Census and statistics Office, Ottawa, estimates the area sown to wheat in Canada at 12,906,400 acres, or 13 per cent. more than the area sown and 26 per cent. more than the area harvested for 1914. Barley shows an acreage this year of 1,569,350 acres, as compared with 1,496,600 acres last year; oats 11,566,000 acres against 10,051,500; hay and clover 7,875,000 acres against 7,977,000; buckwheat 143,900 acres against 154,400; flaxseed 1,009,600 against 1,143,00; corn for husking 253,300 acres against 1,143,000; husking corn 253,300 acres against 256,600; corn for fodder 343,400 acres against 317,000; potatoes 478,600 acres against 476,900; and turnips, etc., 172,700 acres against 175,000 acres. Hence the general situation shows marked increases in wheat and oats, but very noticeable decreases in some other crops which must be regarded as of minor importance during war time.

The mid-summer dullness is characteristic of the produce market. All grains are moving slowly. Fruit which is arriving in large quantities, is being disposed of to unexpectedly good advantage. Of course a factor in the quietness of trade in staple lines of farm produce, must be attributed to the fact that farmers are busy garnering in the last of the hay crop, and already the harvest has started in some sections.

WHEAT

Weather conditions are now the all-important factor in determining the ups and downs of the wheat market. The southern hemisphere is still shipping considerable wheat but attention is concentrated on the billion bushel crop of North America. In the great winter wheat sections of the United States wet weather is still a deterring factor in completing the harvest. In some sections the rains have been so serious that combined self-binders and threshing outfits have been unable to get on the land, and lighter implements have had to be resorted to. In market circles European buyers are still independent and orders are not as large as might be expected. The volume of business has increased, however, and greater sales are expected in the near future. No. 1 Northern is now quoted $1.45½ to $1.46½; No. 2, $1.43½ to $1.45; No. 3, $1.36; Ontario wheat, $1.15 to $1.18.

COARSE GRAINS.

The market is quiet with oats down a trifle, and corn up an equal amount; the changes are not important either way. Trade in malting barley, buckwheat and rye is at a standstill. Quotations: Oats, C.W., No. 2, 66½c; Ontario oats, 58c to 60c; corn, American, 84½c; feed barley, 67c to 69c. Montreal quotations are: Oats, C.W., No. 3, 64½c; extra No. 1 feed, 64½c; local white, 61½c to 63c; feed barley, 76c; corn, 87½c.

MILL FEEDS.

Quotations are firm: Bran, $27; shorts, $29; middlings, $30; feed flour, $1.85. Montreal quotes: Bran, $25; shorts, $28; middlings, $33 to $34; moullie, $35 to $40.

HAY AND STRAW.

A new feature in the hay market is the unexpectedly strong demand from United States sources, and already considerable Canadian hay has been sold at an advance and shipped to United States points. Shipments of the new crop have been short, and this explains the demand for hay from Chicago, Buffalo and other points. The New York demand has been implemented by the large number of horses being held there for shipment to the armies of Europe. On this market wholesale quotations for baled hay are: No. 1, $19 to $20; No. 2, $17 to $18; baled straw, $7. At Montreal No. 1 hay is quoted $22.50, and No. 2, $20.50 to $22. This is an advance of 50c over the quotations of a week ago.

FRUIT AND VEGETABLES.

Wholesale quotations: Cherries, sweet, 11 qt. basket, 50 to $1.50; sour, 40c to 60c; strawberries, box, 7c to 8c; gooseberries, 11 qt. bkt., 40c to 50c; red currants, 6 qt. bkt., 20c to 25c; black currants, 11 qt. bkt., $1 to $1.25; raspberries, box, 10c to 15c; apples, hamper, $1.25 to $1.50; potatoes, new, per bbl., $2 to $2.15; bkt., 25c to 30c.

EGGS AND POULTRY

Receipts of eggs continue large. At Montreal, for instance, 17,643 cases were received in one week recently, as against 7,211 cases for a corresponding week last year. Quality, too, has suffered, due to hot weather, and dealers are looking for lower prices. The export trade, which has relieved the situation so far, has been halted by a large shipment of Russian eggs, which have been laid down in England at 18½c a doz. When these are cleared up it is expected that the demand for Canadian eggs will continue. On this market, eggs in cartons are quoted 24c to 25c; selects, 23c to 24c; No. 1, 21c to 22c; No. 2, 18c to 19c. At Montreal, egg quotations are: No. 1, 23c to 24c, up to 27c for new laids.

Poultry quotations follow: Old fowl, live 12c to 14c; dressed, 16c to 18c; spring broilers, 17c to 20c; old turkeys, live, 16c to 18c; turkeys, dressed, 21c to 25c; ducks, live, 13c to 15c; dressed, 17c to 19c.

HIDES AND WOOL.

The situation is satisfactory all along the line. Quotations: Hides, flat, cured, 24c to 25c; part cured, 17c to 18c; calf skins, cured, 28c to 30c; part cured, 17c to 20c; deacons or bob calf, 75c to $1.10 each; 50c; deacons or bob calf, 75c to $1.10 each; horses, take-off, No. 1, $3.75 to $4.25; No. 2, $3.25 to $3 each; sheepskins, 75c to 95c; shearlings and spring lambs, 40c to 75c; horsehair, farmers' stock, 35c to 40c per pound.

Wool is marketed freely at steadily advancing prices. Quotations: Washed, combing fleece (coarse), 38c to 40c a lb.; washed, medium, 40c to 41c; tub-washed (coarse) 38c to 41c; fine, 42c to 43c; washed fleece, fine, 40c to 42c; washed rejects, 35c to 36c; unwashed combing fleece (coarse), 29c to 31c; unwashed medium, 31c to 33c; unwashed fine fleece, 33c to 35c.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

The butter market continues to sag, declines since our last report totalling one cent a pound on finest creamery. Quotations at Montreal are now 27½c to 27½c for finest as compared with 24½c to 24½c a year ago. Even with recent declines, some dealers believe that a further drop will be necessary before butter can be placed to advantage in cold storage. The biggest feature in the dullness of the market continues to be the large make of the Middle West, which so far is supplying both its own demand and that from the Coast. On this market creamery prints, fresh made, are quoted 27c to 28c; creamery, solids, 26c to 26½c; dairy prints, 22c to 24c; bakers, 19c to 21c.

The cheese market continues in an unsettled state, due to the almost entire lack of orders from Great Britain. The market on the other side is unsettled and attractive offers from this side have not been answered. The enormous demands of the army for cheese, however, must have an effect to increasing orders in the not distant future. In the meantime the course of cheese prices on country boards is decidedly on the down grade.

DAIRY BOARD SALES.

St. Paschal, Que., July 20.—720 boxes sold at 12 1-16c; 98 packages of butter sold at 27½c.

Lindsay, July 20.—All cheese offerings sold at 13c.

Madoc, July 21.—395 cheese; all sold bt 12½c.

Woodstock, July 21.—Boarded, 1760; highest bid 12½c.

Brockville, July 22.—Offerings were 2647 colored and 1920 white. The sales were 800 white and 696 colored at 13½c and 250 colored at 13½c.

Mont Joli, Que., July 23.—350 boxes colored cheese sold at 12 1-16c; 100 boxes butter sold at 26c.

Cornwall, July 23.—2203 cheese, all colored, sold at 13 9-16c. The sales for the same week last year were 1705 at 13½c.

Alexandria, July 23.—891 boxes white cheese sold for 13½c.

Napanee, July 23.—1800 offered, half white and coloured. Half sold, colored at 13 9-16c, and white at 13½c to 13½c.

Perth, July 23.—660 white cheese and 300 colored. White sold at 13½c and colored at 13½c.

Iroquois, July 23.—450 colored and 150 white cheese boarded. No sales on board but all sold on curb at 13½c. On the corresponding date last year 697 cheese were boarded. Price, 13c.

LIVE STOCK.

Receipts of live stock on this market last week were little over half of the previous week; 4,100 cattle were handled as against 7,400 a week ago. At the same time receipts were 100 cars in excess of the same week a year ago. The first of the week started with values steady, but towards the end of the week there was a general decline, particularly in the lower grades of cattle. Stockers and feeders of good quality were steady, also canners and cutters. One factor having an influence on the slackening demand was the unsatisfactory quality of the receipts. Quotations were as follows:

Heavy choice steers, $8.35 to $9; handy choice steers, $8 to $8.30; butcher steers, $6 to $8; heifers, $6.50 to $8.40; choice cows, $6.75 to $7.35; med. to good, $5.50 to $6.50; butcher bulls, $6 to $7.50; feeders, $6.50 to $7.50; stockers, $5 to $6.50; canners and cutters, $3.50 to $5.

The presence of buyers for United States and British Columbia points on the market strengthened the demand for choice milch cows, the best selling up to $90; med. to good, $65 to $75; com., $45 to $55; springers, $60 to $90. Good veal calves are quoted $9 to $10; com. to med., $4.50 to $8; grass calves, $4.50 to $5.25, and bob calves, each, $2 to $5.

Small meats were a little firmer. Lambs, yearlings, $6.50 to $7.50; spring lambs, cwt., $9 to $10.75; light ewes, $6.50 to $6.50; heavy sheep and bucks, $4 to $5; culls, $2 to $3.50.

The hog market has tended steadily downward, as packers anticipate a large marketing of the spring crop of hogs. Quotations now range at $9 to $9.25 off cars, and $8.40 to $8.60 f.o.b country points.

At Montreal the market is reported firm for all stock of good quality. Good steers range from $8.25 to $8.50; fair, $7.50 to $8; med., $6.75 to $7.25, and com., $6 to $6.50. A rather poor quality of butcher cows sold at $4.75 to $6.50.

A weaker feeling has developed in the market for sheep and lambs with resulting lower prices: Lambs, $8 to $9; sheep, $4.75 to $6.50. Calves were stronger at $5 to $15 each.

At Montreal as at Toronto, hog prices have weakened and sales of selected lots have been made at $9.25 to $9.75, weighed off cars. Heavy hogs, of which there were many on the market, sold at $8 to $8.75.

Doctor Said Only Hope Was In An Operation

Was Skeptical When He Began the Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Relief Came Quickly

Here is a plain, honest statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Ointment. Between the lines of this letter you can read the gratitude which its writer feels. One does not suffer from annoying, distressing piles for ten years without appreciating a cure when it is obtained.

Almost every mail brings the report of someone who has been cured of piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Such statements are never used without the permission of the writer, and until we are satisfied that the cure is genuine and the writer a person of responsibility.

You may believe in operations for piles, and think there is no other cure. Write to Mr. Ingles, enclosing stamp, and he will gladly verify his statement. He will tell you that the pain, the expense, the risk of an operation are quite unnecessary. That relief and cure come with the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Mr. Ernest W. Ingles, Penticton, B.C., writes: "I suffered from piles for ten years and though I tried all kinds of ointments and injections I really had no permanent relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. When I began this treatment I had absolutely no faith in it, for I had been examined by a well-known physician in Vancouver, and he said that an operation was the only thing that would benefit me. It was surprising the relief I obtained from the very first box, and now, after using four boxes, I am practically cured. My case was so exceptionally bad that I received no relief day or night, and for this reason the results are wonderful."

You can obtain Dr. Chase's Ointment from any dealer at 60 cents a box. If you do not want to risk this much send a two-cent stamp to pay postage, and mention this paper, and we shall send you a sample box free. We are so certain that any sufferer from piles will obtain relief by using this ointment that we do not hesitate to make you this offer. Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

BOY'S SUIT.

By Anabel Worthington.

The blouse suit is one of the favorites material and this may be anything from the simplest of gingham to the handsomest of linen.

In the model which we show the blouse is double breasted, closing at the left side. It is made with square neck and short sleeves, but the pattern also provides for a round neck with a small flat collar and full length sleeves. The lower edge of the blouse is gathered on tape or elastic and is not long enough to tuck into the trousers.

The trousers are made without a fly in the smaller sizes and with a fly for the ages above 8 years. This makes them suitable for boys of different ages. They have the open edge at the knee.

When such a material as gingham is used for the suits both garments are usually made of one fabric, but in other cases we see the trousers of khaki or dark colored linen and the blouse of white or striped goods. Both ideas are good and are entirely a matter of taste.

The suit pattern, No. 7,259, is cut in sizes 4, 6, 8, 10, 12 and 14 years. Medium size requires 2⅞ yards of 36 inch material.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

ALBANIAN LEADER HELPING SERBIANS

Half-Wild, Fearless "Rob Roy of The Balkans" Was Man Who Told Abdul Hamid That He Was Deposed

The Rob Roy of Albania, Essad Pasha, is allied with the Serbians in their invasion of their neighbor to the South, and the turn affairs is particularly to the relish of the Italian authorities. Essad has a great following, and if the Albanians ever compose their differences, religious and political, he will undoubtedly be their choice for king. Essad Pasha is superior to the average run of Albanian chieftains. He comes of an old Moslem family, the Toptani, whose seat is at Tirana. This is probably the richest and most powerful clan in the country. Essad could summon 500 faithful retainers in a day from among his own personal followers.

Essad Pasha was educated for the Turkish Army, and fought bravely in the war between Greece and Turkey in 1897. His reputation as a first class fighting man reached the ears of Abdul Hamid, who made his brother, Ghani Bey, his aide-camp. Then came a dispute between the Sultan and Ghani Bey, and the latter was shot by the Sultan's order. Essad went to Constantinople blazing with anger, and the man who shot Ghani Bey was himself stabbed to death in broad daylight on the Galata bridge. A card pinned on his body bore the words, "Done by Essad Toptani." In spite of this flagrant defiance of his authority, the Sultan was afraid to tackle the wild, hawk-nosed Albanian chief, or perhaps he admired him. Abdul sent him back to Yanina to command the local gedarmerie, and gave him the rank of Brigadier-General.

There he quarrelled with Tatar Osman Pasha, the commander of the Yanina division. Essad, an austere Moslem, raided certain houses, in one of which he discovered his superior, Tatar Osman Pasha. As the Pasha refused to give his name, Essad gave him a particular sound thrashing.

He withdrew after this incident to his estates, and was there in 1908 when the revolution took place at Constantinople. He, turned Young Turk, was elected as member of Parliament for Durazzo by his faithful followers, and went to Constantinople, where he became rather an awkward supporter of the Committee of Union and Progress owing to his Albanian sympathies.

In April, 1909, the revolution broke out. The troops marched from Salonica to depose the Sultan, and the Sheikh-ul-Islam issued a fetwa deposing Abdul Hamid. Then the question arose who should take the message to the Sultan. Essad rose before the committee, and slowly and grimly replied: "I will go." Trembling from head to foot the Sultan met the brother of Ghani Bey, who announced his deposition. His warfare with the Young Turks continued in spite of this incident. He figured in such violent scenes in the last Chamber that he had to be dragged away from threatening the Speaker.

Then he returned to Albania, where he declared his severance from the Young Turks. But on the outbreak of the Balkan War in 1912 he was anxious that Albania should not be cut up by the Powers, and hastened to Scutari with a relief column. He became Governor, and gallantly defended it for many weeks against the Montenegrins.

At last he made peace with Nicholas, under which he was able to march out with 24,000 men, his guns and all the honors of war. One of the conditions was that King Nicholas recognised Essad as an independent Prince of Albania, and Essad was so proclaimed at Tirana in April, 1913. The Great Powers, however, refused to accept him and selected Prince William of Wied. For a time Essad Pasha acted as War Minister to the German Mpret, but it was always a hollow peace, and Essad organized a revolt. He was for the time unsuccessful, but escaped on an Italian steamer to Brindisi. After the flight of the unlucky Mpret Essad returned, and entered Durazzo with 10,000 troops. There the Albanian Senate elected him President of the Albanian Republic and Commander-in-Chief of the military forces.

Amid shouts of "Long live our Essad" the new ruler broke the seals of the Palace, and went to sleep in Prince William's bedroom.

But as soon as Essad began to extend his rule beyond Durazzo the old troubles began. His forces were surrounded on all sides, and had to cut their way back to Durazzo.

DIDN'T NEED A LEG

Disabled French Piano Teacher Was Not Downhearted

A French deputy who is serving as a captain of artillery tells in a letter to a friend a story illustrating the bravery of the French soldiers. During a bayonet attack a shell exploded in the advancing line of French and took off the left leg of one of the soldiers. When an ambulance attendant came up to the wounded man the latter shouted to him: "Hurry up and look for my leg; it is lying over there. Maybe I can have use for it yet."

After the soldier had been brought to the hospital the general commanding, who had heard of the incident, went to see the soldier and complimented him on his courage. "Tank you very much, my General," the wounded soldier responded. "I have yet one leg for the service of my country, and I can even afford to lose that, too."

"But, my dear man"—

"Oh, I know what you are going to say," the soldier interrupted, "but really my legs are not so necessary in my profession, because I am a piano instructor and my hands are enough for me to get along with."

Forests Fall In War

The havoc of the European war in regard to forests is described as being "without precedent in history." Trees are being cut down out of face for trenches and to make roads, for firewood, and to permit the more effective use of artillery. Projectiles and forest fires are also doing much damage. Indeed, in many places woods have been completely destroyed.

RUSSIANS RESPECT WOMEN WARRIORS

Take It As a Matter of Course That They Should Help in Fight—Over Five Hundred in Czar's Armies

About five hundred women are fighting as regular soldiers of the Czar. They have to enlist nominally as men, but their presence is winked at by the higher military officials and many of them have been decorated with important honors for gallantry on the field of battle.

The treatment of these notable women warriors by the Russian common soldiers well illustrates some peculiarities of the Russian temperament. The Russian mujik, or peasant, is of an intensely religious nature. He is ignorant, but dreamy and philosophical, holding to many beautiful superstitions. He is used to living in small communities where women are held in as high esteem as anywhere else in the world. If a husband dies, the widow takes his place in the village council and has a full voice in the local government. It is a measure of woman suffrage which has come down from antiquity. As a result, the Russian soldier in the trenches does not joke about a woman fighter who happens to be in his division. He does not see in it a subject for jest. It is for him quite a matter of course.

Still less is he inclined to offer her any indignity. This woman who is exposing herself to shell and bullet and poison gas for the glory of the Russians, he treats with the highest respect. Indeed, as the woman who has donned soldiers' uniforms is of a much higher order of intelligence than the common soldier, the latter looks up to her and in an emergency follows her leadership unhesitatingly.

Sacrificed Her All

Numerous incidents reported from the front bear out these statements. A case that is attracting much attention is that of Mme. Kokovtsoff, a woman of considerable wealth. She first spent all her fortune in hospital work for wounded soldiers. Finding her usefulness along this line at an end, she applied to a General in the city of Batum for permission to enlist as a volunteer in the forces he was raising.

"No, that would be impossible," replied the General, "no soldier could be taken with such hair, in the first place."

Mme. Kokovtsoff indeed had beautiful masses of dark hair, and every Russian soldier must wear his hair closely clipped. The following day Mme. Kokovtsoff again sought an interview with the General. As she entered the room he sprang from his seat and uttered an exclamation of astonishment. Mme. Kokovtsoff's fine locks were gone. The General capitulated and the woman was allowed to enlist.

She was engaged in many battles and took part in such a way that she roused the ardor of the soldiers to high pitches of valor and endeared them to many deeds of heroism. Then she was seriously injured and was brought to a hospital which she herself had established and endowed. She recovered and as soon as she was allowed to leave her bed, and while her wound was still not completely healed, she busied herself with the care of the other wounded.

It is expected that she will be allowed to return to the front soon, as is her wish. Persons who have interviewed her say that war has not roughened her in the least, and that she has retained her fine, womanly character throughout.

Girl Won Man's Decoration

The duties of a field nurse, or Sister of Mercy, do not satisfy the craving of the Russian woman to assist in the great struggle. In the political disorders of the last thirty years women have done at least half the work. Kira Baskiroff was a pupil in a girls' college when the war started. She cut off her tresses and enlisted as a volunteer in one of the infantry regiments of Grand Duke Nicholas. She took part in a series of daring reconnoitering expeditions and aroused the enthusiasm of the soldiers of her regiment, but the activity of this life did not satisfy her. So she enlisted under the name of Nicolas Popoff in one of the regiments of Siberian sharpshooters which bore the brunt of the great battle of Lodz. Again she performed deeds of valor, and her company unanimously petitioned that she receive the Cross of St. George, the badge of courage. She had concealed her sex in this command, but shortly after receiving the cross her secret was discovered. She was then sent home. By a special order of the Czar she is permitted to retain her distinction, which is usually given only to men. Two other women, Mlle. Krasilnikoff and Mme. Samsonoff, have also had the Cross of St. George pinned on their uniforms.

One might also mention Olga Jehlweiser, who proved to be of special value to the Russian forces. She is a Lithuanian woman and served as a soldier in the war against the Japanese, taking part in several engagements.

At the beginning of the great war she again put herself at the disposal of General Rennenkampf, under whom she had fought in Manchuria. She was brought up in the vicinity of Grodno and has special knowledge of the roads, forests and swamps of this difficult country. She led the Russian detachments on several raids which brought highly gratifying results.

When the history of this great war comes to be written, the work of these daring Muscovite women will not be forgotten. These women are not woman suffrage workers or "feminists," in the sense meant by Western Europe. But their deeds cannot help having an effect on the place of woman in the Russian Empire.

WAR BY COMPASS FULL OF EXCITMENT

Difficult Night Attacks Feature The Present Conflict—Easy To Get Lost—"The Death-Watch"

[illegible] soldiers the compass is of [illegible] the Death Watch. "And [illegible] good ason' Says Jock, "Wh[illegible] see the officer squinting along t[illegible]hts of his compass all the afternoon, marking the direction of churches and mills, it means a night attack sure, and that some of you will never take tea in the trenches again." In night attacks at close quarters the compass is the only sure guide. Most night attacks are delivered in oblique lines, and when four or five regiments, covering maybe a mile of front, are on the move, there is a chance of a dreadful mix-up.

Tricks In All Trades

The orders may read: At a given signal, leave trench and advance at angle of 25 degrees north of east. The officer sights his compass on some prominent object, gives instructions to his men to advance right or left of it, and starts. As all officers have given similar instructions it is, wonderful how many thousands may advance parallel, yet invisible. "Our regiment did not know that the next was in the game at all until they came out of the darkness, yelling like blazes, just on our left ten paces." Many a night attack, guided by bump of location only, has come to grief, one regiment firing on its friends by mistake, or even charging them. In Belgium and Northern France, where every detail of military importance is carefully mapped, the compass is less used for long distance work than in other wars. The greatest mistake in using the compass in peace or in war is to sight on too near objects. Given a fairly distinctive and lofty point the officer and his men should keep true direction, though the hill may only occasionally come into view. More important still is the checking off of progress. A man trailing a few yards in the rear will help to pivot the company back to the true line by looking backward as often as forward. In absolutely shell-cleared country one must carefully fix a line of route, and trust to the bump of location, dangerous though such may be. There is a temptation to change direction when the British searchlight picks out the glinting rifle barrels of the enemy. But the officer has his compass direction to remember, and to appreciate that the slightest change in his front will give the enemy opportunity, through the gap left in the living wall, to press home a successful counter-attack.

Kowledge Wins

Without the compass night tactics on a large scale would be so risky that no sane general would consider for a moment their use. Thus it is that a careful study of the compass in action is important both to officer and soldier of the line, and really the elements are simplicity. Trusting to his men, General French in his headquarters far away plans a night attack, and directs it as easily as one started by day. And, by the way, the compass comes in imperative in day work, for most of our battles begin at dawn, and troops are continually changing ground through the hours of darkness. The officer who has true command of the compass and map of the ground will never get into trouble for impeding the progress of his neighboring brigade which is taking up position by an easy road to the left, while his own command is struggling through woods and across ploughs and pastures.

Airships Unseen, Unheard

The newest idea in aeroplane construction is to use, instead of canvas as a covering for the wings a non-inflammable celluloid. This makes the craft quite invisible and enables the aviator to make observations in all directions. A new muffling box has also been devised which makes the motor almost noiseless.

So powerful are the vibrations caused by the explosion of a 12-inch gun that they are sufficient to shatter windows at a distance of about a quarter of a mile.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, JULY 29, 1915

GERMANY ENVELOPING MOVE HAS FAILED

MACKENSEN IS BEING HELD FIRMLY

MACKENSEN FAILS TO MAKE ADVANCE AGAINST RUSSIANS

Even if Warsaw Should Fall, Which British Experts Say is Less Likely Now, the Russians Will Still Have a Clear Road to Retreat Keeping Their Armies Intact---Stop the Enveloping Movement by Stopping Mackenson.

WARSAW IS IN NO IMMEDIATE DANGER

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., July 29.—For the first time since the great German drive on Warsaw began, Grand Duke Nicholas' forces have established an ascendency over the invaders.

This is London's interpretation of the official statement to-day from the War Office at Petrograd. The point of ascendancy is along the battle front where Gen. Von Mackensen has been constantly trying to push forward southeast of Warsaw, as part of the Austro-German plan to entrap the army defending Warsaw, when, as German generals saw it, the inevitable retreat of the Russians toward Petrograd began.

Even if this retreat becomes necessary, London to-day believes the Grand Duke's army will have a clear path.

In other words the gigantic enveloping movement is defeated by the ability of the Russians to hold Von Mackensen.

The Petrograd statement also throws light, it is considered, on the failure of the Germans to take Ivangorod, already surrounded, according to their own reports, and ready to capitulate. It is evident Field Marshall Von Hindenburg has withdrawn part of the attacking force at Ivangorod and sent aid to Von Mackensen.

London views the situation in Poland with equanimity. There is a growing belief that Warsaw itself may not fall into the hands of the Germans, but in any event, the surrounding of the Russian army is regarded as out of the question. The Grand Duke is now in a position, provided he continues to hold his own against Von Mackensen, to retreat in good order to Brest-Litowsk. The latter is more strongly fortified than Warsaw, and is the centre for the Russian campaign in Poland.

NO PRICE TOO GREAT.

LONDON, July 29.—"No price is too great to pay for victory," declared Minister of Munitions Lloyd George to-day in a characteristic speech urging two thousand representatives of the mining industry to "speed up."

"The demand for coal is the greatest in our history, the supply of labour is shortest," the Minister declared. "Coal is the life blood of the nation."

"Let us look toward the firmament, ignoring nothing, preparing for the thunder clouds when they come, with the full knowledge that the sun is shining behind the darkest storm clouds. No price is too great to pay for victory. There has been too much of a disposition to cling to the amenities of peace."

BERLIN, July 29.—The Deutsche Tages Zeitung declared editorially that the saving of the crew of the Leelanaw was only due to extremely favourable circumstances in the neighbourhood of the Orkneys, where there are few other ships. In other parts of the war zone, says the editorial, such favourable accidents are improbable.

BERLIN, July 29.—Otto Hoebech says in the Kreuse Zeitung: "Like every official utterance in America, this (the last American note), too, must be viewed from the angle of its international aspect. President Wilson speaks not only as President, but as a presidential candidate in 1916. If, as it seems, he believes he can talk this way to Germany, it is a sign that he does not consider the counter agitation of the Germans and Irish populace, and of Bryan as dangerous. Also, it is a sign that he does not expect his presidential aspirations to be harmed by crisis in relations between Germany and America."

BRUSSELS FINED.

PARIS, July 29.—Another fine of one million dollars has been imposed on the City of Brussels by the German authorities in consequence of the destruction of a Zeppelin dirigible balloon at Evere by aviators of the Entente Allies.

CROPS BLIGHTED.

AMSTERDAM, July 29.—Reports reaching here from Germany declare that much of Germany's expected large crop has been blighted by drought, and the only food crop is that of potatoes.

BERLIN, via Sayville wireless, July 29.—The German Empress and Crown Princess Cecelie, are now in East Prussia, awaiting the fall of Warsaw. They expect to accompany the triumphant army into the Polish capital in a few days.

HIGH HONOUR FOR BORDEN

Premier is Given the Freedom of the City of London

Special to The Examiner:-

LONDON, Eng., July 28.—The highest municipal honour that can be conferred on man—freedom of the City of London—was given this morning, with the usual ceremony, to Sir Robt. Borden, Premier of Canada. The proceedings took place in a terrific down pour of rain. Premier Asquith and Leader Bonar Law were among those present.

MRS. HUGH WADDELL TO LAY CORNERSTONE

The corner stone of the Byersville Sunday School, opened some time ago under the auspices of the Salvation Army, will be formally laid on Monday evening next by Mrs. Hugh Waddell. The new Sunday School has been making good progress, but at its opening the brickwork had not been commenced. Ald. Green porimsed the people that he would supply the bricks when they were wanted. The occasion of the laying of the corner stone will be fittingly celebrated and a number of prominent visitors are expected to attend.

The first picnic in aid of the Sunday School will be held on Civic holiday to the former T.A.S. Park.

A boat service will be provided all day and the band will be present.

President Is Asked For An Investigation

CHICAGO, July 28—President Wilson was asked to appoint a special commission to probe the Eastland disaster and history of all the connections the Federal Steamboat Inspectors have had with the death ship since she first dipped her barrel shaped hull in the great lakes.

The request was made by a resolution adopted at a meeting of the aldermanic committee on harbors. Charles E. Merriam, its author, stated his belief that the investigation opened by the Federal Steamboat Inspectors to-day, at which Secretary of Commerce Redfield presided, "does not merit public confidences."

PTE. J. WILSON, of the 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, to-day officially reported as having died while a prisoner of war in Germany.

DETECTIVE GREER RETURNS FROM THE BUCKHORN CASE

Reported to Have Found Nothing That Would Indicate a Crime Had Been Committed—Visitor Said to Have Disappeared and no Trace of Him Has Yet Been Found.

CASE UNSATISFACTORY

Provincial Detective W. D. Greer of the Attorney-General's Department, was in the city yesterday, ostensibly in connection with the reported disappearance of an American known as Van Size, who recently visited Buckhorn, apparently to visit his daughter, Mrs. Hynes. County Crown Attorney has been making investigations into this case and stated that he had called in a detective to work on the case, to determine in the first case the truth of the particulars as he received them.

Detective Greer returned to Peterborough last night and stated that he was confident there had been no crime committed. County Constable Moore has also been working on the case, but could not be located to-day. From what is known now, the authorities evidently are satisfied that there is nothing in the case. It is, however, stated that nothing is known of the whereabouts of the visitor Van Size, and from the reports given out, the case seems to have been something of a hoax.

Changes In The Department

Sub-Committee Report on the Reorganization of City Engineering Department.

The sub-committee appointed by the City Council to consider ways and means of effecting a complete reorganization of the City Engineering Department, have made a preliminary report. This was read at last night's meeting of the Board of Works and was approved. The present proposed changes in no way effect the present staff with one exception. It is proposed to release one of the men recently employed to relieve the congestion, and also provide a stenographer. City Engineer Parsons will be required to report to the Board of Works Committee from time to time, giving his opinion as to the feasibility of the new system. The latter consists mainly of changes in the methods of bookkeeping.

OFF TO FRONT THIS EVENING

Hurry-up Call to Peterboro' to Supply Motor - Truck Drivers and Shoeing Smith For the C. A. S. C. Quickly Answered

SOME DISAPPOINTED

The hurry-up call to Peterborough to supply three motor-truck drivers, and a shoeing-smith for immediate service overseas with the Canadian Army Service Corps, was quickly carried out. Although the only notice was a sign on the newspaper bulletin boards, four drivers and the shoeing-smith passed the doctor and were accepted last night. To-day, however, there was a disappointment for two of the drivers, as word was received that only two were needed, and the result was that two of the recruits had to be informed that their services were not needed for the present.

The drivers selected who will leave at 9 o'clock to-night for Kingston, and who will sail for England at once, were Martin. Kenneally,. 223. Sherbrooke street, chauffeur for A. T. Johnston, and Edward Collins, 98 Hunter street east, chauffeur for the Duffus garage.

Chas. E. Ellis, blacksmith, of Warsaw, formerly of Peterborough, is the shoeing-smith selected. He saw the notice on the bulletin board, walked up to the Armouries, was examined, and accepted, and leaves to-night.

Prospects For Clear Weather

Fair, Warm Weather for the Remainder of the Week.

While the shower of this morning was not altogether unexpected, officials at the weather bureau look for fair, warm weather both to-day and to-morrow. Light to moderate winds will prevail with a few local showers to-day and possibly to-morrow. The rain that reached Peterborough this morning was not general and few places in Ontario were so benefitted. Moderate winds to-morrow with the possibility of a shower or two is the probable weather condition. Fair, warm weather, however, is on the calendar for the remainder of the week.

Ashes Must Be Removed

City Engineer Instructed to Take the Matter Up With the Chief of Police

City Engineer Parsons has been instructed to see Chief of Police Thompson and insist upon the removal of a load of ashes said to have been deposited in a ditch on Donegal Street by Police Magistrate Dumble. The latter was notified to have the ashes removed some weeks ago, but apparently some of the Aldermen have learned that their instructions have been ignored. When the matter was first discussed by the Board of Works Committee, Mr. Dumble claimed ample justification for placing the ashes in the ditch, giving for one reason that it was for the purpose of diverting the water into its proper channel. The City Engineer took exception to this, claiming that the natural channel was obstructed as a result of the load of ashes being deposited there.

"If a poor man had dumped a load of ashes there he would have had to move them long ago or go to gaol," observed Ald. Edgar, when the matter was brought up at last night's meeting of the Committee.

"We employ a City Engineer to tell us where filling may be required," put in Mayor Buller.

It was moved by Ald. Edgar, and seconded by Ald. Saunders, that the City Engineer be instructed to see the Chief of Police and order the ashes removed. Ald Stratton and Ald. Dobbin moved in amendment that the city remove and make use of the ashes in connection with the construction of a sidewalk which the city proposes to build on the street in question. The amendment was defeated.

NOTES OF CAMPAIGN

Plans For the Recruiting Movement Next Week Are Rapidly Maturing—Central Committee Meets To-morrow

THE BIG MEETING

Peterborough is to see a revival of the recruiting movement. That much has been determined. The Central committee meets on Friday night to perfect details of the mass meeting to be held at the Armouries on Wednesday evening, August 4th. That date is a memorable one, to stand in history as the most critical event of the century, the day and date that England declared war, and stood to the assistance of little Belgium. It will be an anniversary phenomenal in its seriousness. It should be respected by all, and revered as a milestone of the centuries.

This meeting, gathering, if you will, must be a success. If any public meeting ever took or is to take place that had or will have more of import for us as Canadians, we don't know of it. People should attend, not in a spirit of curiosity, but of helpfulness. Come determined to do your very best to help on the enlistment.

The speaker of the evening will be the Hon. Geo. E. Foster, one of the most forcible and eloquent speakers we have in Canada. His address will be most interesting and convincing. It had been the endeavour of the committee to secure the attendance of Dr. Michael Clarke of Red Deer, Alberta, a noted member of the House of Commons and a whirlwind of a speaker. No man has greater power of description, or force of diction than Michael Clarke, unless it be along some lines—Hon. Geo. Foster. The latter gentlemen has cancelled important engagements to deliver the address at Peterborough. Mr. Clarke had other engagements which he could not cancel.

Local speakers may address the meeting, but not at length. More to place local facts before the gathering than to broadly discuss the need of enlistment They will talk of the local situation with which speakers from a distance would not be familiar.

During the times of the Crimean war, 1856-7 Canada raised, beginning at Halifax, a regiment as its contribution, to the strength of the British forces in the Crimea, the afterwards famous 100 Regiment of Foot. Enlistment was made in the Upper Province, both in Lower and Upper Canada. Col. Boulton, of Cobourg, was authorized to take an enlistment in the Colborne district. He sent to Peterborough, to provoke and encourage the enlistment, three worthy people. A gigantic sergeant of the Grenadiers, a fifer and drummer. Wearing the Queen's scarlet and topped by tall bearskin shakos, the three figures loomed up as they passed along the streets. Each day would bring its parade. With stirring martial airs, followed by all the barefooted boys who felt and thought that Solomon in all his glory was not so arrayed. Whenever a crowd or gathering was encountered the big sergeant would pause, exhort the hearers to be men, to brace up and come, forward and tipping to those who were willing the Queen's shilling, enrolled the man and swore him in. The method was, for that time of day, spectacular and effective. Something of the sort will now be put on. Ten recruiting officers, with bands and all other needful accoutrements will make a ten days' stay in Peterborough. The enlistment will be well advertised. Advertising pays. And something of strenuous publicity will help to swell the ranks. To convince. To draw to the colours and the service even those reluctant.

Friday night, at the Council chamber, there will be a meeting for Organization. While there is a strong committee that has details in hand, there is ample room for more in the way of assistance and co-operation. Don't stand back. Don't be backward in coming forward. It is just as much your affair as that of any other man's. It concerns you. Come and let the committee see you're interested. You may not be asked to enlist, but you can help in convincing others. Get the spirit. Into the swim. Three hundred rather earnest men crowded into a hall on Tuesday evening on a political mission. Can we not fill the Council chamber on Friday night when the destinies of Canada and the Empire are at stake. Sure thing. The ultimate end is bigger and broader than any local political controversy.

Such things can and will wait. The need of the hours is to close up the ranks, fill up the squadrons, expand the brigades. Come along and lend a hand.

The public is reminded of the Speakers' Patriotic League to-morrow night in the Council chamber at 8 o'clock. All member and committees and also the delegates from other organizations that have been invited are urged to be present. It is requested that all the brass, bugle and fife and drum bands in the city send a delegate to this meeting.

FRENCH MINES TAKE A TOLL OF LIVES

PTE. JAMES, 265 Lake street, in England with the 39th Battalion.

Sappers Dug Tunnels Under German Trenches Near St. Hubert and Malincourt and Caused Deadly Explosions.

200 BODIES FOUND

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, July 29.—The French mines exploded under German trenches near St. Hubert and Malincourt, wreaked a terrible toll of life. The French sappers dug their tunnels underneath a number of advanced positions. The explosions killed outright more than two hundred of the enemy, and the French advance immediately after the mines had been set off, efrced a slight falling back by the Germans.

In the destroyed trenches the French found two hundred Germans dead and captured two hundred, rifles with two rapid firers.

In Alsace Lingekopf was wrested from the German forces. Fighting around Barrenkopf, in the same area of battle, the French in their advance found over four hundred bodies of the enemy.

BECKER'S WIFE STILL TRYING TO SAVE LIEUTENANT

Seeking a Conference With Governor Whittman of New York in Hope of Getting a Reprieve for Her Husband.

IS LIKELY TO FAIL

Special Wire to The Examiner:

ALBANY, N.Y., JULY 28 — Mrs. Charles Becker came here to-day to make a final appeal to Governor Whittman for her generally believed doomed husband. Accompanied by Attorney Johnson she arrived in Albany shortly.

Governor Whittman, bound for the National Militia encampment, at Peekshill, passed her enroute. The Executive left word with his officials that he would see the condemned man's wife between six and seven o'clock to-night, it is understood.

Attorney Johnson is making an effort to arrange a meeting before that hour. The indications are that either the Governor will make but part of the journey to Peekshill and return hurriedly here, or that Mrs. Becker will seek a meeting place in Peekshill. The condemned man's wife wishes a conference before the evening hours, so that she may be certain to pay what may be possibly her farewell visit to the death house of the prisoner.

Mrs. Becker sat quietly in a local hotel, while Attorney Johnson sought to get in telephonic connection with Whittman. She was dressed almost entirely in black, the colour of the mourning being relieved only by the white neck piece. Her face, although pale with sadness, had a grim look of determination.

AMERICAN MARINES HAVE LANDED

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, July 29.—American marines are now in control of two important ports of the Island of Haiti, Port Au Prince and Cape Haitien, and the situation is quiet.

A LAST PLEA FOR CLEMENCY

Special to The Examiner:

ALBANY, N. Y., July 29. — Mrs. Becker will make a last minute plea for executive clemency here to-day. She will meet Governor Whittman with Attorney Johnson following his return from Peekshill, probably about 7 p.m. Whitman has worried and noticeably aged during the last stages of the Becker case.
